Mr. Ballance was descended from an old English family, a portion of which emigrated to Virginia more than two centuries ago. His grandfather, Charles Ballance, was killed during the War of the Revolution. His father, Willis Ballance, was married to Joyce Green, in Culpeper County, Virginia, in 1796, and soon after removed to Madison County, Kentucky. Here their second son, Charles, was born November 10, 1800. His mother died soon after, and his father having married a second time, the boy seems to have grown toward manhood without much guidance or control outside of his own strong sense of right. One thing he was determined upon, and that was an education superior to what the country school afforded. Having but little money he turned his attention to anything that offered a support, and finally obtained a place to study law with Judge Terry T. Haggins, of Harrodsburg, Kentucky. Entering upon the practice of law in Kentucky, Mr. Ballance continued there for a couple of years, and then coming to Illinois, opened an office in Peoria in 1831, where he continued in active professional work until a year or two before his death. Soon after coming to Peoria he was appointed County Surveyor of Peoria County, in which capacity he served for some years.

His legal ability was of a high order and, in all questions involving the rights of property holders, he had no superiors. It was in this line his reputation rests. Owing to the way in which Illinois became a part of the United States, there was much vexatious controversy over the "French Claims," some of which were just, but many spurious and absurd. By the purchase of a large tract of land in the southern part of Peoria (now Ballance's Addition), on which some of these claims infringed, Mr. Ballance became almost immediately interested in the study of land titles. For a long series of years he fought these claims, sometimes with other attorneys to assist him, but more frequently single-handed, against some of the best lawyers in the West. Several of the cases were carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, where they were argued by him in person. Sometimes successful and sometimes defeated, he persevered till he triumphed over all his opponents, and removed entirely and forever that incubus on the prosperity of the city (the "Peoria French Claims"), so that now no such claims exist.

In politics Mr. Ballance was an old line Whig. When that party disbanded, his anti-slavery proclivities induced him to join the Republicans, with which party he acted till his death. In 1855, he was elected Mayor of the city, and discharged the duties of that responsible office to the general satisfaction of his constituents. Previous to this he had been Alderman for the First Ward, then embracing one-fourth part of the entire city. He was a man of public spirit and intensely devoted to the prosperity of Peoria. His individuality was strong, and, although differing from some others in the advocacy of measures promotive of its interests, none could impeach his honesty of purpose or his desire to further its commercial prosperity. In 1870 he published a "History of Peoria" of standard authority and of great historical value, in which his views upon public measures affecting the city are somewhat fully set forth.

During the Civil War Mr. Ballance was a staunch Union man, and, though more than sixty years of age, raised, largely at his own expense, the Seventy-seventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteers and was elected Colonel of the same. To his great grief, his age and the state of his health compelled him to resign the position before the regiment was ordered to the front. This regiment did good service during the war, and was in the disastrous Red River Expedition where Lieutenant Colonel Lysander R. Webb, a son-in-law of Col. Ballance, was killed.

Col. Ballance was very happy in his domestic relations. In 1835 he was married to Miss Julia M. Schnebly, daughter of Henry Schnebly, who is well remembered by all the earlier citizens. To them ten children were born, all but one living to adult age. More than half of these have since passed to the great hereafter, but many grandchildren remain, happy and respected themselves, and proud of the virtues of their honored ancestor.

GEORGE CLINTON BESTOR.

George Clinton Bestor was born in Washington, D. C., April 16, 1811. His parents, Harvey and Matilda (Owens) Bestor, both natives of Massachusetts, removed from that State and settled in Washington at an early day. His father was Assistant Postmaster-General under Hon. Francis Granger, and was highly respected for his talents and virtues. George inherited his father's traits of character, and gave early promise of the ability and integrity which marked his subsequent career. As a boy he manifested those noble and generous qualities which endeared him to so many friends, and that conscientiousness in the discharge of duties which inspired confidence in his honor and integrity. He was first employed as a page in the House of Representatives, and, at the age of sixteen, was appointed Assistant Document Clerk of the same upon the recommendation of many of the leading statesmen at that time in Washington, and held the position eight years, or until May, 1835, when he came to Illinois. Being a young man of energy and enterprise, in the twenty-fifth year of his age, he resolved to strike out into a new country, where a better field was opened for his ambition and his talents, to achieve for himself a successful career. Peoria was then one of the most promising points in the West. It had begun to grow in population, and the beauty and desirableness of the location were attracting emigration from all parts of the country. Here was a desirable and promising field for a young man of talents and enterprise, and here Mr. Bestor came to make his future home, arriving in Peoria August 3, 1835.

N. C. Pyle

"After settling here, he was engaged for many years in the real-estate business, dealing in military lands, in which he accumulated a large property. From 1835 to 1840 a copartnership existed between him and Mark M. Aiken, during which they made an abstract of the Edwardsville and Pike County records—a voluminous and carefully prepared work, showing the accuracy, system, and thoroughness, of everything that passed under the hand of Mr. Bestor. On February 18, 1837, he was elected one of the Trustees of the Town of Peoria, and re-elected on the 5th of November, 1839. On April 4, 1842, he was appointed Postmaster of Peoria by President Tyler, and again, on March 27, 1861, was appointed Postmaster by President Lincoln. He was elected Police Justice in 1843. He was three times elected Mayor of the City of Peoria, filling the seventh, ninth and tenth places in the list of Mayors with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents.

"For several years Mr. Bestor was Financial Agent, and afterwards President, of the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad Company (now the Peoria and Burlington branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad), and, during the time he held that position, succeeded in extricating the company from its financial difficulties. He was also a Director of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railroad at the time of his death.

"Before the organization of the Republican party, Mr. Bestor was an earnest and devoted Whig. He fought the opposition with zeal and energy, and, when defeated, was always ready to renew the contest. He was a personal friend of Henry Clay, to whom he was ardently and strongly attached. In 1852 he was a delegate to the Whig National Convention that nominated General Scott. In 1858 he was elected to the State Senate by a majority which, at that time, was entirely unexpected in a district so strongly Democratic. That was the year of the Lincoln and Douglas joint campaign of Illinois for the United States Senatorship. Mr. Bestor espoused the cause of Mr. Lincoln, and, while in the Senate, had the opportunity of voting for him, in opposition to Judge Douglas, for United States Senator. In the campaign which followed in 1860, he did his share toward electing Mr. Lincoln to the Presidency. During that four years in the Senate he was on the Committee on Canal and Canal Lands, Banks and Corporations, Penitentiary, Swamp Lands, and Military, and was Chairman of the Committee on Internal Navigation.

"Almost everybody in Illinois knew Mr. Bestor, and none knew him but to respect and love him. His name is identified with the early history of Peoria, and no man contributed more to its development. His genius and enterprise are stamped upon its growth. At the commencement of the late Civil War he was an ardent patriot, and his talents, his energies and his means were devoted to the cause of the Union. He was widely known as an influential man in politics. He was a vigorous supporter of Governor Yates in all his measures for the arming and equipping of the Illinois Volunteers, and was one of the first to advocate a large appropriation for that purpose by the General Assembly of which he was then a member. Mr. Lincoln esteemed him highly, and Judge Douglas, whom he opposed, said of him: 'There is no man in Illinois I respect more; what he is, he is.' He was zealous in the support of the principles of his party, a warm and ardent friend, and a courteous and manly opponent.

"For several years before his death, Mr. Bestor had spent most of his time in Washington, prosecuting a claim before Congress, for $175,000, for gunboats which he had built for the Government during the war. The construction of these boats had reduced him almost to poverty, and it is thought that the trouble and anxiety growing out of this, and what he believed to be the unjust delay of his country in meeting his reasonable demands, added to his feeble state of health, hastened his death. Shortly after his death Congress appropriated $25,000 to his heirs in satisfaction of this claim.

"He died at the National Hotel, in the city of Washington, on the 14th day of May, 1872. None of his family, except Mrs. Bestor, were present at the time of his death.

"Hon. George C. Bestor was twice married—first, on the 20th of October, 1835, in Baltimore, Maryland, to Miss Mary Jane Thomas; and, second, on the 13th of September, 1848, to Miss Sarah E. Thomas, sister of his former wife. He left by his first marriage four children and the same number by his second marriage."

Physically Mr. Bestor was a man of perfect mould, and having from his youth been brought into personal relations with men of the highest culture, he had early learned and adopted the manners of a perfect gentleman, which he carried with him through life. He was courteous, gentle and genial in disposition, graceful in speech and manner, yet firm and determined in all his business relations. Generous almost to a fault, he dispensed charity, in all directions, which was manifested in an especial manner in his contributions in aid of the soldiers during the war.

PETER R. K. BROTHERSON.

Peter Rutgers Kissam Brotherson was born in Charlton, Saratoga County, New York, July 14, 1811. He was the third of a family of five children of Philip Brotherson and Catharine (Kissam) Brotherson. For the first sixteen years of his life he resided at home, then went to New York City where he spent three years as clerk in a mercantile house and acquired that knowledge of business affairs which fitted him for his future career. In 1830, he went into business in Elmira, in the State of New York, where, three years later, he married Frances B. McReynolds, daughter of Matthew McReynolds of that place. In 1836 he, with his father-in-law and his family, emigrated to Cadiz, Ohio, where he and Mr. McReynolds spent fourteen years in merchandising. In the spring of 1850 they all came to Peoria, where they established the first exclusively wholesale grocery in the city, under the firm name of Brotherson & McReynolds. It was situated on the upper side of Liberty near Water Street. Six years later Mr. Brotherson severed his connection with that firm and entered into co-partnership with his son-in-law, Alexander G. Tyng, in the grain and pork business, under the firm name of Tyng & Brotherson. This firm continued to do an extensive business for the period of twenty years. At the end of that time it met with heavy losses, in consequence of which Mr. Brotherson was forced to retire and to seek other employment, which he found in the Internal Revenue Department as Government Gauger of distilled spirits, a position he occupied for several years.

Mr. Brotherson had the good fortune to be the head of a family the most noted in the city for their faith manifested in good works. Mrs. Frances B. M. Brotherson was a woman of extraordinarily strong character. She was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church and one of the staunchest supporters of St. Paul's Parish until the time of the division, when, with her husband, her daughter, Mrs. Tyng, and husband, she cast her lot with Christ (R. E.) Church. Besides her ordinary work in the church, her charities were wide-spread and munificent, so that to no one were the needy of the city more indebted than to her. She was also active in relief work during the war, being one of the organizers of the original Ladies' Aid Society. She was a woman of marked intelligence and, withal, a writer of ability both in prose and verse; her poems, which were numerous, having been collected and published in a handsome volume. She died December 27, 1879, much lamented by the entire community. The eldest daughter of this interesting couple, Lucie, became the wife of Alexander G. Tyng, and is a worthy successor of her mother. The second daughter, Martha, became the wife of William Reynolds. Of these two ladies, who survive their respective husbands, it would be superfluous to speak. Their names appear on almost every page which recounts the benevolent, charitable and Christian work of the city. Mr. Brotherson had a son Philip, who died at the age of twenty-three years.

Mr. Brotherson's services to the city in a public capacity were very valuable. Besides representing his ward for several terms as Alderman, he was twice elected Mayor and served, first, from April 1, 1868, to November, 1869, while the water-works were being constructed, in which improvement his assistance was valuable; secondly, from November, 1871, to November, 1873.

He laid out two additions to the city which bear his name, and one street was named after him. He was one of the most active men in carrying on the home sanitary work during the war, and was always found in the front rank of all public benefactions. He was at one time President of the Central City Street Railway Company, and continued to be one of its stockholders and directors for many years. He occupied a charming residence on the corner of Adams and Harrison Streets, where hospitality was dispensed with a generous hand so long as means would permit; and, when retrenchment became a necessity, it was acquiesced in with that dignified submission which stamped upon him the character of a true gentleman.

Mr. Brotherson died July 6, 1891. His funeral took place from Christ Church, which was filled with sorrowing friends anxious to pay their last tribute of respect to departed worth. Bishop Cheney, of Chicago, a lifelong friend of the family, assisted the Rector in the services.

WASHINGTON COCKLE.

Washington Cockle was born in New York City on May 2, 1811. His father was John Cockle, a descendant of an old English family, and his mother a direct descendant of John Leverett, one of the colonial Governors of Massachusetts in the latter part of the seventeenth century. Mr. Cockle's father was a wealthy merchant and owned several trading vessels. The son was given a thorough education in New York, engaged in teaching for several years while studying law with the Hon. David S. Jones, a famous lawyer of that time, and was admitted to the bar in 1832. Then after practicing some time, having caught the Western fever, he came to Peoria in 1838, but finally settled on a farm in Millbrook Township, where he remained until 1846, when he removed to Peoria. He became agent of many Eastern parties and banks, handling their real-estate transactions, his business calling him to all parts of the State. On these trips, which were made on horseback, he met Douglas, Lincoln, Logan and many others who then enjoyed, or afterwards gained, a national reputation. He was also interested in wool-growing and hauled all of his wool to Chicago in wagons to find a market for it. While living on his farm in 1840

he met and married Miss Caroline Tracy Robbins, daughter of Judge S. W. Robbins, formerly of the Supreme Court of Kentucky, and a granddaughter of Gen. Uriah Tracy, a distinguished member of the United States Senate from Connecticut. This estimable lady made him a most loving wife, who aided him with wonderful bravery to carry the burden of many business reverses that came later in life. They had seven children, of whom one daughter and four sons are still living.

Having removed to Peoria in 1846, he built a frame cottage on Jefferson Street where the Arcade building is now located. Soon after this date he formed a partnership with B. L. T. Bourland and Mr. Phelps and continued the real-estate business. In this he prospered, and later became identified in the banking business with Nathaniel B. Curtiss and others well known. The accumulation of wealth enabled him to start a distillery in partnership with Richard Gregg, under the firm name of Gregg & Cockle, which was continued in operation during the war. With the adoption of the national banking system Mr. Cockle became one of the leaders in the organization of the First National Bank of Peoria. He was for many years its President, and it was through his careful business management and tact that the bank was placed upon a sure foundation. Other business enterprises with which he was associated included the first bridge across the Illinois River; the old Peoria & Oquawka Railroad, of which he was a Director and Secretary; and the Bureau Valley Railroad, with which he was similarly identified. He was also a prominent factor in connection with Peoria schools, libraries, etc.

Up to this time Mr. Cockle's business ventures proved very successful, and he was rated as one of the wealthiest residents of the city. Misfortune began to overtake him, however, and his later enterprises wrecked his fortune and left him a comparatively poor man. He formed a partnership with Henry B. Dox and opened a large pork-packing establishment, which, after a few years, they were compelled to abandon. Previous to this Mr. Cockle had expended about $80,000 in the erection of the then finest residence in Peoria. It was at the corner of Jefferson and Hamilton Streets. Later it passed into the hands of Col. R. G. Ingersoll, and, when the National Hotel was erected, it was moved 100 feet northward to make room for that building. Upon disposing of this property Mr. Cockle purchased a residence at Monroe and Jackson Streets, which he occupied until the time of his death, which occurred July 15, 1886.

Mr. Cockle's could have been a life of political preferment, had he so desired. His early education had fitted him to grapple with and unravel the difficult problems of State, while his true politeness and gentleness of spirit made him popular with all who heard or saw him. To converse with him for a moment was to become his ardent friend and admirer. It seemed impossible for him to make an enemy. Although at one time a prominent figure in State politics, he steadfastly refused to accept office. He was prevailed upon three times to accept the nomination for the State Legislature—twice for the House and once for the Senate—and was elected, serving his first term in the House in 1846-7. His broad views and fair dealings won for him the respect of all. During his term of service he made a brilliant speech in favor of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill that had just passed the Senate. He was a great admirer and strong follower of Stephen A. Douglas, and a consistent Democrat. When the issue was brought to a question of the abolition of slavery and the disruption of the Union, he joined the Republican party and became a warm defender of Abraham Lincoln. His eloquence and high standing in the Legislature caused him to be chosen to present the name of John A. Logan for United States Senator. The speech was one of the best efforts of Mr. Cockle's life, and was indeed a brilliant one. Soon after General Logan secured the appointment of Mr. Cockle as Postmaster of Peoria, which position he held upwards of six years, and until he was succeeded by John Warner. Mr. Cockle was also engaged in newspaper work for a short time as proprietor and editor of the "Democratic Press," which he sold to Enoch Emery some time in the 'fifties.

ALFRED GOELET CURTENIUS.

Col. Alfred Goelet Curteneus, one of Peoria's earliest and most successful merchants, was born in the city of New York, February 17, 1807. His ancestors were from Holland and among the early settlers of New York City. He was ten years of age when his father died. His second name, Goelet, was derived from his grandmother, who was a daughter of Peter Goelet, a merchant of Hanover Square, New York. Mr. Curteneus was educated at Col. Partidge's Military Academy at Middletown, Connecticut, and was appointed Colonel of Illinois militia in 1843. Previous to coming West he was engaged in mercantile pursuits in New York City, and also in Pulaski in New York State. He first came to Peoria in 1835, but soon after returned to New York, and in 1836 came back and located here permanently.

In 1840 Colonel Curteneus and Mr. J. L. Griswold formed a copartnership and commenced business in October of that year. In January, 1841, they moved into the building erected by James Armstrong at the foot of Liberty Street, on the site of the present Chicago & Rock Island depot, and during the same year inaugurated the business of buying wheat for shipment, entitling them to be called the pioneers of all the wheat trade that has ever existed in Peoria. Wheat had, of course, been brought in and sold for milling purposes, but previous to August, 1841, there had been no cash market for this commodity here. Since that time—now over sixty years—it is believed that there has not been a single day when all the wheat that has been offered for sale has not found a cash buyer at a fair market price. The first large contract (as it was then called) was made by Curtenius & Griswold and the firm of Pettengill & Bartlett, the latter agreeing to furnish half the quantity. It was a contract for 4,000 bushels of wheat for shipment to Cincinnati, made with John J. Mitchell, of Alton, once President of the Chicago & Alton Railroad. Messrs. Curtenius and Griswold were the proprietors of large tracts of land in the western portion of the city, now known as "Curtenius & Griswold's Addition."

In 1845 Colonel Curtenius built a large pork-packing house on the bank of the river, near where the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad bridge now crosses, which was used in connection with Gurdon S. Hubbard, of Chicago, in packing pork for the New York market. Col. Curtenius was one of the strongest advocates of a bridge over the Illinois river at this place, and contributed largely to its success, holding the position of President of the company during his life.

He was married on October 20, 1841, to Miss Antoinette O. Tracy, of Utica, New York. In the midst of an active, useful and honored life Colonel Curtenius was stricken with typhoid fever, and died March 9, 1857. The following obituary and editorial remarks are taken from one of the city papers of that time:

"The business circle of Peoria has been invaded by a foe whose reign is omnipotent when the hour of his operation is upon us. Alfred G. Curtenius, one of the oldest and most valued of our citizens, a man whose influence upon the past prosperity of Peoria has been widely and deeply felt, has passed away. In the midst of his usefulness, his natural strength unabated, he is stretched upon a bed of sickness, from which he is destined never to rise. Mr. Curtenius died yesterday morning, of typhoid fever, at a quarter past 10 o'clock, after an illness of only two weeks."

In the paper of the same date the editor remarks:

"In another place will be found the announcement of the death of A. G. Curtenius, one of our earliest citizens, and one who, for a series of years, has filled a prominent place in the business affairs of Peoria. By care and strict attention to business he had amassed a competency, and was in circumstances, and at the time of life, that he could have soon retired to enjoy the reward of an industrious and successful career. His loss will be severely felt, and it will require a long period to fill the void created by his death in the circle where he moved."

NATHANIEL BANCROFT CURTISS.

Nathaniel Bancroft Curtiss, who established the first banking house in Peoria, was born in the little town of Calais, near Montpelier, Vermont, on September 11, 1819. Being the eldest of a family of eight children, he left his paternal home at the age of fifteen years to seek his own livelihood. After sojourning for some time in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, he travelled further west to Columbus, Ohio, to which State his parents, brothers and sisters removed some time between 1840 and 1850. Early in 1850 he came to Illinois, and on April 8th of that year was united in marriage with Miss Jane M. Warren, of Warrenville, Du Page County. Soon afterwards he came to Peoria and engaged in the banking business under the name of N. B. Curtiss & Co. During the greater part of his subsequent career he continued to be identified with the banking interests of Peoria, in which, as elsewhere related, he experienced various changes of fortune. He erected the building on the north corner of Main and Washington Streets which has been occupied by the First National Bank ever since its first organization, and was one of the first subscribers to the capital stock of that institution. He belonged to the Order of Knights Templar. His death occurred at the age of fifty-three, leaving his wife and two daughters surviving.

JOHN DIXON.

The following sketch of the life of the first Clerk of the Circuit Court of Peoria County is furnished by his great-grandson, Henry S. Dixon, a resident of the city of Dixon, Illinois, which John Dixon founded:

"John Dixon was born at Rye, Westchester County, New York, October 8, 1784. He was a son of John Dixon, who was an officer in the British army, and came to America with that army during the war of the Revolution and remained here after peace was declared. John Dixon, the younger, moved to New York City at an early age, and kept a clothing store and merchant tailoring establishment there for fifteen years. He was an intimate friend of Robert Fulton and, it is said, that he was present on the occasion of the first public trial of Fulton's steamboat on the Hudson, and, on that occasion, handed to Fulton a silver dollar, saying that he wished to be the first man in America to pay for such transportation.

"He remained in New York until 1820, when his health failing to a certain extent, he removed West, traveling by ox-teams to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, thence to Shawneetown, Illinois, by flat-boat, and then by ox-team to Fancy Creek, about nine miles north of the present city of Springfield, the entire trip taking about seventy-two days. He remained there until 1824, when he moved to Peoria, where shortly afterwards he was appointed the first Clerk of the Circuit Court and Recorder of Deeds of Peoria County, which was organized in 1825. He was also made Clerk of the Commissioner's Court of Peoria County. As there were no other organized counties north of Peoria at that time, the duty devolved upon him of giving notice of the time and places of elections, and the inspectors thereof, at the small settlements in Northern Illinois, north and west of the Illinois river, and extending as far east as Lake Michigan, including Cook and adjacent counties.

"Prior to 1830 Mr. Dixon received the Government contract for carrying the mails every two weeks from Peoria to Galena. To facilitate this work a ferry was established across Rock River at the present site of the city of Dixon, which was operated by a half-breed named Ogee. Ogee's management of the ferry was not satisfactory, and Dixon soon bought him out and removed with his family to that place. He was the first white settler in that vicinity, and so managed his affairs in his dealings with the Indians that he secured their confidence and friendship. This proved to be of great value to the Government and the scattering white settlers, when, in 1832, the country was devastated by the Indians in what was known as the Black Hawk War. Dixon's Ferry was the rendezvous for the troops during the war, and Dixon served both in the capacity of guide and in securing the friendship and alliance of many of the Indians who would otherwise have united their fortunes with the partisans of Black Hawk.

"Many of the men who have since become prominent in American history have testified to their obligations to John Dixon for his hospitality, fidelity and courage during those trying times, among the officers being Zachary Taylor, Abraham Lincoln, Gen. Robert Anderson, Jefferson Davis, Gen. Winfield Scott, Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, Gen. Harney and many others.

"During the time that Northern Illinois was being first settled and the counties and courts were being organized, Mr. Dixon took a prominent part, and was active in piloting strangers where he had no trail to follow, guided only by his compass and the recollections of such descriptions as he had obtained from the Indians in that new and uninhabited region.

"He was a man of medium height, spare in build, with long hair falling over his shoulders and prematurely gray. His long white hair gave him his Indian name, 'Nadah-chura-sca,' or 'Head-hair-white,' which by usage was contracted to 'Nachusa.' He outlived his wife and children by many years, dying at the city of Dixon on July 5, 1876." [Mr. Dixon was a delegate from Lee County to the first Republican State Convention held at Bloomington in May, 1856, and spoke on that occasion from the same stand with Abraham Lincoln. In 1874 he visited Peoria at the anniversary of the "Old Settlers' Union."—Ed.]

ENOCH EMERY.

Enoch Emery, who for many years was editor-in-chief of "The Peoria Transcript," was born in Canterbury, New Hampshire, on August 31, 1822. Until the age of eighteen his life was spent on a farm at his native place. He there received the advantage of a common-school education. Being of an inquiring and studious turn of mind, he extended his knowledge by reading and self-culture, and at an early age developed a taste for literary pursuits. From the age of eighteen to twenty-two his time was mostly spent in Boston and for several years thereafter he was engaged as clerk in the "Merimac House" in Lowell. He there found an opportunity to gratify his taste by furnishing contributions to the press, and acquired some local reputation as a writer. Soon afterwards he became associate editor of the "Vox Populi," a newspaper published in Lowell, in which position he continued about two years, when, in connection with three printers in the same office, he started "The Morning News," a humorous daily, which he conducted successfully for some years, when he sold out to his partners.

In the autumn of 1854 Mr. Emery came to Illinois, hoping that a change from the life of an editor to some other occupation would be beneficial to his health, which, from too close application, had become somewhat impaired. He accepted a situation on the Illinois Central Railroad and, for a few months ran a construction train, but not liking the change he returned to his former occupation. During the following winter he wrote for the "Bloomington Panta-graph," then a tri-weekly paper, and, in April of the next year, went back to Lowell and again took charge of the "Morning News." In the spring of 1856 he returned with his family to Illinois, and, feeling the need of rest from his editorial labors, spent the following summer on a farm in Macon County. In the year 1859 he took the position of local editor on the "Peoria Transcript," then conducted by Nathan C. Geer, in which capacity he continued until 1860, when he became editor-in-chief. The paper, started as independent, had now become an outspoken advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and it was Mr. Emery's short, terse, epigrammatic sentences that gave it great power as a leading organ of that political faith. On July 10, 1860, in company with Mr. E. A. Andrews, he became one of the owners of the paper, and for the next five years that firm continued its publication, Mr. Emery being all the while its editor-in-chief.

In the campaign of 1860, and during the administration of Mr. Lincoln, the paper was a staunch supporter of all the measures of the Republican party. After his re-election and very near the close of his life Mr. Lincoln appointed Mr. Emery Postmaster of Peoria, his commission being issued by President Johnson. After the assassination of Mr. Lincoln, and before the policy of President Johnson had been fully defined, while many in the party were ready to revolt against the new measures it was thought he was about to adopt, Mr. Emery's counsel was to wait and see, or to use his own words, "Have faith in Andrew Johnson." Holding a public office at the hands of the new President, he was not disposed to raise the standard of opposition. But when a new policy became clearly defined with which Mr. Emery could not agree, he did not hesitate to denounce it, although such a course might lead to the loss of his position. During his incumbency he removed the Postoffice from the Bestor (now Freeman) building on Main Street to one of the rooms in Rouse's Hall, where it had nearly double the room it had had at its former location. Here it was fitted up with a largely increased number of boxes and other conveniences which had long been needed.

In a little over a year, in consequence of the opposition of "The Transcript" to his policy, President Johnson removed Mr. Emery from the office of Postmaster, and appointed Gen. D. W. Magee in his stead. Mr. Emery then bought out the interest of his partner, Mr. Andrews, and conducted the paper alone until the year 1869, when a corporation was formed, called "The Peoria Transcript Company," with Mr. Emery at its head. For the next ten years the affairs of the Republican party in this district were somewhat mixed, but Mr. Emery remained true to his original principles. In consequence of unfortunate complications for which he was in no sense to blame, he became somewhat financially embarrassed, and had a hard struggle to sustain his paper. In 1880 a new company was formed to conduct the paper, but Mr. Emery continued for a time to be its editor.

In the meantime, however, in the year 1869 he had been appointed by President Grant Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fifth District of Illinois, a position he continued to hold for two years, when, in consequence of his opposition to Gen. Logan, the latter caused him to be removed.

During the exciting campaign of 1862 Mr. Emery was a candidate for the Legislature against William W. O'Brien, by whom he was defeated. In 1870 he was elected Alderman of the Fifth Ward in the city of Peoria, and was re-elected in the following year. It was during this period that the city established its water-works, Mr. Emery being on the committee appointed to superintend their construction.

Mr. Emery was twice married, his first wife being Mary Sargent Moon, by whom he had five children, two of them dying in infancy. In 1873 his wife died, and in 1877 he married Miss Mary Whiteside, by whom he had one son named Philip Enoch. Two married daughters, Mary and Gertrude, and this younger son survived him. The elder son, Edward, died in the winter of 1881.

The second wife, Mary Whitesides, had formerly been County Superintendent of Schools of Peoria County, in which capacity she had rendered efficient service. After the death of Mr. Emery, which occurred May 30, 1882, she was again elected to the same office and served another term. She has been for some years connected with the State Normal School of the State of Nevada.

A very graphic account of Mr. Emery's career as editor of the "Transcript," together with many well written reminiscences, may be found in the issue of that paper of December 17, 1895, to which the reader is referred.

JOHN C. FLANAGAN.

John C. Flanagan was the eldest son of John and Jane (Platt) Flanagan, both of whom were residents of Philadelphia, quite wealthy and owners of valuable real estate in that city. He was born July 17, 1806. His education was commenced at Montrose and finished in Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania. He read law with Colonel James Paige, of Philadelphia, where he remained four years, was admitted to the bar and entered upon the practice of his profession.

About this time a sad bereavement befell the family in the death of his father under peculiarly distressing circumstances. Having gone with a party of gentlemen friends on a pleasure excursion by a sail-vessel to the city of New Orleans, they were attacked on the way with ship fever, two of them dying at sea and Mr. Flanagan a few hours after the ship arrived in port. The son John was left at the head of a family consisting of his mother, two sisters and a younger brother. In 1830 he went to Pottsville, Pennsylvania, and entered upon the practice of the law, also dealing extensively in the coal business with his brother-in-law, David Maxwell. After remaining there three years they returned to Philadelphia.

In the spring of 1834 Mr. Flanagan came to Peoria and entered some land. In the fall of that year his family joined him in company with Mr. Maxwell and his wife, who was Mr. Flanagan's sister,—the family consisting of their mother, their brother, James A. Flanagan, a sister Louise and a lady friend. They first settled on a claim in Limestone Township. In the year 1836 Mr. Flanagan joined Mr. Maxwell in St. Louis, where they dealt some in lands. But, not being satisfied there, he returned to Peoria after one year. Being possessed of considerable means he bought lands adjoining the then rapidly growing town, which he laid out into additions, there being now three additions and subdivisions bearing his name. His brother-in-law, David Maxwell, was long a resident of Peoria, and occupied the office of Justice of the Peace for many years. He had a brother, Thomas Maxwell, a prominent business man who had three daughters: the eldest married William H. Cruger, contractor and superintendent of the Eastern Division of the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad; the second, Charles S. Matteson, son of Governor Joel A. Matteson, and the third, Edward, son of the Hon. Jacob Gale.

Mr. Flanagan served as Alderman of Peoria for some time, but, having very little taste for public office, he never aspired to public honors. During his term as Alderman he interested himself largely in the drainage of that portion of the city lying in front of the bluff, and, through his influence, a deep canal was dug on Morgan Street for the purpose of draining that portion of the city. In politics he was a steadfast Democrat, and, during the exciting times antedating the Civil War, he arrayed himself on the side of Senator Douglas, of whom he was a great admirer.

Mr. Flanagan never married, feeling it to be his lifelong duty to devote himself to the care of his invalid sister Louise. In manners and deportment he was a gentleman of the old school, happy in disposition and companionable in all his intercourse with his fellow men. Although coming to Peoria in the pioneer days, he never forsook his habits acquired in early life. He was scrupulously neat in his dress, always wearing a broadcloth Prince Albert and a silk hat. He wore side-whiskers, and his hair, which was a dark auburn and very silky in texture, fell in ringlets about his coat collar. He was tall and erect and commanded the attention of strangers wherever he went. He spent his time in looking after his own business interests and property, was well read in all topics of the day and was a great lover of home comforts.

Not long after his arrival in Peoria he erected on the bluff overlooking the city and commanding an extensive view of the river scenery, a substantial brick residence, which still remains. There being no other communication at that time between Peoria and Chicago, all the lumber, lime and glass used in the construction of the building were hauled from Chicago in wagons. It was at that time probably the largest dwelling house in the city. It is now occupied by his only niece, Mrs. Louise Williamson, widow of the late Judge Marion Williamson and daughter of David Maxwell. Mr. Flanagan died June 4, 1891, leaving surviving him his two sisters, Letitia J. Maxwell and Louise A. Flanagan. His brother James, who had been engaged in business in Peoria for many years, died June 13, 1876.

GOVERNOR THOMAS FORD.

The following biography of the late Governor Ford was found among his papers, having been prepared by him for a work about to be published giving succinct biographies of the Governors of the several States. We publish it as an interesting record of a portion of the history of our State, and had intended to have added a short history of the period of his life between the conclusion of the autobiography and the death of the Governor, but have been unable to do so at this time. As, however, this memoir embraces nearly his whole public life, it may be quite as well to leave it as it was found:—(Peoria Democratic Press, December 18, 1850.)

"Thomas Ford was born in the County of Fayette and State of Pennsylvania on the 5th day of December, 1800. His father, Robert Ford, belonged to a large family connection of that name in Delaware and on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, and his mother, Elizabeth, was the daughter of Hugh Logue and Isabella Delany, who were both natives of Ireland. His father died in 1803, and, in 1804, his mother, who was a woman of extraordinary courage and enterprise, with a married daughter and seven other children, most of them small, removed from Pennsylvania to St. Louis in Missouri. St. Louis at that time was a village of only a few hundred French and Spanish inhabitants. On Christmas Day, 1804, the family removed into Illinois and settled at a place called New Design, then in Randolph, but now in Monroe County. At that time the American inhabitants of Illinois did not exceed three or four thousand.

"Gov. Ford's father left his family very poor, and as its fortunes were now committed to a widow with some small children, settled far out in the wilderness, it may readily be imagined that their condition was not much improved. His widowed mother, however, managed to keep her children together and to give all of them the elements of an English education at such common schools as were then to be found in the country. At these schools Governor Ford learned to read and write, and cypher to the Rule of Three, and some of the English Grammar. But, as the family were very poor and all the children necessarily engaged at hard work on the farm (which was rented), there was but little opportunity for further progress at school. However, the subject of this memoir, by devoting a portion of his time at home to study, but without an instructor, succeeded in mastering the arithmetic and gained quite a knowledge of grammar and geography. At about ten years of age he became much addicted to reading poetry, and such other miscellaneous prose work as fell in his way.

"Before this time his half-brother, George Forquer, had gone to St. Louis and apprenticed himself to the carpenter's trade. After having this trade, he was successful in making money both as a journeyman and master-builder, so that by 1818 he had means enough to set up as a merchant and speculator, and was now actually the proprietor of two towns. About this time also, Hon. D. P. Cook, Member of Congress, had his notice attracted to young Thomas Ford, who was by him persuaded to commence the study of the law. He began first with Judge Cook, of Missouri, and afterward with D. P. Cook, of Kaskaskia, but finding his preparatory education insufficient, his brother George, who was a man of noble, generous and magnanimous nature, determined to send him to Transylvania University. Thither he repaired in April, 1819. In 1820 his generous brother failed in business, so that Thomas was obliged to leave the University after being there not quite a year. He made his way back to Illinois—400 miles on foot—but, in the State of Indiana, he ran out of money for his traveling expenses and was forced to stop on the road-side and take up a school for three months. The neighborhood was a new settlement; there never had been a school in it before; a school-house had to be built, and this young man, and a stranger as he was, induced the people to build, and he assisted with his own labor. He has been heard to say that he is more proud of this achievement than anything he ever did in after life.

"He returned home at intervals and, between labor on the farm and school-keeping, he pursued the study of the law, history and such books of general literature as fell in his way until the autumn of 1824, when he was invited by the celebrated Duff Green to assist him in conducting a newspaper in St. Louis, then engaged in the support of Gen. Jackson for the Presidency. Here he continued about six months. In the meantime his brother George had also studied law, was elected a member of the Legislature in 1824, and in the succeeding winter was appointed Secretary of State. The two brothers then agreed to enter into the practice of the law in partnership. For this purpose Thomas repaired to Edwardsville, then the most considerable town in the State, and resided there in practice from 1825 to 1829. In 1828 he married Miss Frances Hambaugh, and with her removed to Galena in 1829. He remained here a year, engaged in the practice of the law, and then, for the purpose of being nearer his wife's parents, removed to Quincy.

"In 1829 he was appointed State's Attorney by Gov. Edwards. In 1831 he was re-appointed by Gov. Reynolds and remained in that office until he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court in 1835. He was four times elected a Judge of the Circuit and Supreme Courts by the Legislature without opposition, and was one of the Judges of the Supreme Court when he was elected Governor of the State."

Of Governor Ford's ancestry little is known further than that which appears in the foregoing sketch. His mother was twice married, once to a man by the name of Forquer—probably Farquahar—a Revolutionary soldier, by whom she had several children, among whom was George Forquer, who, as above stated, became distinguished in the politics of this State. While she was the wife of Forquer, Governor Ford's mother seems to have lived at Uniontown, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, where George was born.

George Forquer was a member of the Legislature in 1824. In January, 1825, he was appointed Secretary of State by Governor Coles. In 1828 he ran for Congress, but was defeated by Joseph Duncan, afterwards Governor. In January, 1829, he was elected Attorney-General by the Legislature, which office he held until 1833, when he resigned to accept the office of State Senator. Before the expiration of his term as Senator he was, in 1835, appointed Register of the land office at Springfield. He died at Chicago in 1837.

Although it is stated in the foregoing sketch that Governor Ford was four times elected a Judge of the Circuit and Supreme Courts by the Legislature, he had only two commissions as Circuit Judge and one as Supreme Judge. The records show that he was commissioned as Judge of the Sixth Circuit January 19, 1835, resigned March 4, 1837; that he was commissioned as Judge of the Ninth Circuit February 25, 1839, and as Justice of the Supreme Court February 15, 1841. He resigned the latter office August 4, 1842, to accept the office of Governor. The journals of the Legislature, however, show that on March 4, 1837, the day he resigned the office of Circuit Judge, the two Houses met in joint session for the election of a Judge of the Municipal Court of the City of Chicago, a Court then recently established, and having concurrent jurisdiction with the Circuit Court within that city. O. H. Browning of the Senate and Abraham Lincoln of the House were appointed tellers. Upon the count of the ballots Thomas Ford was found to have received 86 votes to 3 scattering, and was, by the Speaker of the House, declared duly elected. On the same day a message was received from Governor Duncan that Hon. Thomas Ford, having resigned the office of Judge of the Circuit Court of the Sixth Judicial Circuit, a vacancy had been created to be filled by that General Assembly. So it appears that, although he did not technically hold the office of Circuit Judge from 1837 to 1839, yet, in effect, he did so; for he held an office of equal dignity and exercising the same jurisdiction as the Circuit Judges. His commission as Judge of the Municipal Court of the City of Chicago bore date March 16, 1837.

The Democrats in December, 1841, met and nominated Adam W. Snyder, of St. Clair County, for Governor, but he having died in the spring of 1842, by common consent Thomas Ford was taken up by the Democrats and elected over ex-Governor Duncan, the Whig candidate, by over eight thousand majority.

After his nomination and before the election, he announced his principles to the public in a letter to a friend. As there were no conventions held in those days, this letter must be regarded as his platform. Briefly stated, his principles ran as follows: He was in favor of a sub-treasury, opposed to all banks, State and National, and in favor of the constitutional currency of gold and silver coin; in favor of a tariff for revenue only; opposed to the distribution of the sales of public lands; opposed to contracting debts by either State or Nation; in favor of adopting all proper means on all proper occasions to reduce the State debt; and in favor of conventions to nominate candidates for office. In the great contest between Field and McClernand for the office of Secretary of State he believed that Governor Carlin had the right to appoint his own Secretary, and he (Ford) should claim the same right for himself. Believing that Van Buren had been unfairly beaten in 1840, he was in favor of his nomination for the Presidency in 1844; and, to use his own language, "To succeed him, I am in favor of Thomas H. Benton, the Great Statesman of the West."

Governor Ford came to the executive office in times of great excitement in Illinois. The failure of the great scheme of internal improvements, together with the financial crisis of the times, had left the State almost hopelessly in debt, and repudiation was openly advocated. But Governor Ford steadfastly set his face against disgracing the State in that way; and, through the aid of his wise counsels, the financial affairs of the State were much improved, and a feeling of confidence restored, which continued to prevail until 1848, when, by the adoption of the new Constitution, an annual tax was levied, applicable especially to the payment of the State debt. By this means the debt was finally liquidated; so that, for the past thirty years, the State has been entirely free from bonded debt. Another exciting topic of the times was how to deal with the Mormons. During Governor Ford's administration the Mormon War took place, so-called, in which their celebrated prophet, Joseph Smith, lost his life. It was during his (Ford's) administration that the Mexican War broke out, and, largely through his influence, the State of Illinois took a prominent position in that great contest. The volunteers from this State flocked to the support of the administration in numbers too great to be received.

After retiring from the office of Governor, Thomas Ford took up his residence in Peoria, where he resumed the practice of the law, and where he prepared an excellent History of Illinois from 1818 to 1847, which, after his death, was edited by General James Shields, and published for the benefit of his family. His practice at the bar in Peoria did not prove lucrative. Instances appear upon the records where his fees were exceedingly small. One of this kind is found in the fact that he rendered his services to the County of Peoria for the sum of seventy-five dollars a year, payable in quarterly payments. These services, of course, were supplemental to those rendered by the State's Attorney of the district, whose business it was to conduct all criminal matters, and to render services in civil as well as criminal business.

Governor Ford died at Peoria November 3, 1850, in very indigent circumstances, which were not fully known to the citizens until a short time before his death. His wife, Frances, worn out with watching over her husband's failing health (he died of consumption), and the care of the family of children, died October 12, 1850, aged thirty-eight years. The impoverished condition of the family having then been fully revealed, Governor Ford was taken to the house of Andrew Gray on Monroe Street (which house still stands), where he died as before stated. He left a family of five small children—two sons named Thomas and George Sewell, and three daughters, Anna, Mary F. and Julia E.—one of whom (Julia E.) died December 30, 1862, aged twenty-one years. The children were all taken by kind friends and reared to manhood and womanhood. After paying all his debts there remained for distribution among his children the sum of $148.06. The proceeds of the sale of his History of Illinois, amounted to $750—or $150 to each of the children, for whose benefit it was published. This money was invested by their guardian in Peoria & Bureau Valley Railroad stock, at the rate of $70 to $80 per share, and paid dividends at the rate of eight per cent. per annum upon its face value.

The remains of Governor Ford were first interred in the city cemetery, where a modest little monument costing five hundred dollars was erected by the State. Here they remained for some years, and were finally removed to Springdale cemetery, where they were interred in a beautiful lot near its entrance, and in 1895 the State erected a monument to his memory costing $1,200.

A few weeks before his death Governor Ford became a professed Christian, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. The estimate in which he was held by his neighbors and friends, is well attested by the action taken by the Grand Jury of Peoria County on November 23, 1850. This body was composed of leading citizens from all parts of the country, with Andrew Gray as Foreman and John Elting, Secretary. They resolved that, by the death of Governor Ford the State of Illinois had lost one of her purest and ablest statesmen, whose unerring judgment and practical wisdom had saved the State from the blighting effects of repudiation in the hour of great trial and emergency, and whose firmness and decision had contributed mainly to the lessening of our heavy State debt, and to the enactment of that series of measures which had produced so much prosperity and confidence among our people, restored the credit of our State and laid the sure foundation for beneficial results, such as no imagination could conceive or prophecy foretell. As State's Attorney he had discharged his duties faithfully and successfully; as a Judge he had been impartial, laborious and just, and, as a man and citizen, he had been one of "the noblest works of God." He had won his way from a fatherless boy to eminence, and had left a bright example to those behind him, that virtue, industry and fidelity insure success and will be crowned with triumph.

JACOB GALE.

Jacob Gale was born in the year 1814 at Salisbury, New Hampshire, of which place his parents, Benjamin and Achsah (Baily) Gale, were also natives. He received his education at Dartmouth College, where he graduated in the class of 1833. In the following year he came to Peoria, traveling from Detroit to Chicago on foot. Soon after his arrival he entered into partnership with Moses Pettengill in the hardware business, but, in the course of a year or two, gave up that business, began the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1837. He then formed a partnership with Onslow Peters under the firm name of Peters & Gale, with their office in the new Court House. This firm continued for some years. In 1844 he was appointed Clerk of the Circuit Court, the office being then an appointive one. After the adoption of the Constitution of 1848 he was twice elected to the same office, which he continued to fill until a vacancy occurred in the Circuit Judgeship occasioned by the death of Judge Peters. He then resigned the clerkship to accept the office of Circuit Judge, to which he was elected without opposition and commissioned April 10, 1850.

Thus it happened that he succeeded, as Circuit Judge, the man who had been his first associate in practice. Not finding the office congenial to his sensitive nature, its duties calling him into a more active life than the peaceful one he had been pursuing, he resigned after having served about seven months. He never resumed the practice of the law, but was active in other pursuits so long as his strength would permit. For some years he was Superintendent of Schools of Peoria and for two terms—the first, 1848-49, and the second, 1864-65—Mayor of the city. He also represented his ward for some time in the City Council. After retiring from public life he spent several years upon a farm, located on what is now Gale Avenue, which was named after him. Returning after a few years to the city, he became Secretary of the Peoria Gas Light and Coke Company, a position he filled during the remainder of his active life.

Judge Gale was a man of quiet demeanor, of studious habits, and of remarkably sound judgment. Having become somewhat proficient in the French language, he studied with great interest the history of Illinois during its occupation by the French, and had become very decided in his opinion that the location of Fort Creve Coeur was near Wesley City—a position he afterward maintained with vigor in an address made to the Peoria Scientific Association. He was a profound thinker and had read many of the standard authors in philosophy, history and political science, besides keeping abreast of the times in all scientific developments.

In politics he was a Democrat of the old school. In the exciting times before the war he took the side of Buchanan against Douglas, and was a candidate for Congress on the Buchanan ticket in 1858. He never swerved from the position then assumed, but remained a Democrat ever afterward. Although a man of strong convictions he never obtruded them upon others, but rested quietly upon his own consciousness of the right. He had the universal respect of all who knew him.

In early life he was inclined to skepticism in religious belief, and it was not until the great revival of 1866 that his views underwent a change; but, when it did come, the change was a thorough one. In a public meeting he avowed his belief in Jesus Christ as his personal Savior, and shortly afterward united with the Second Presbyterian Church, in which he maintained his membership and led an exemplary life until the end came.

In 1838 he became united in marriage with Charlotte, daughter of Dr. Peter Bartlett, one of the leading physicians of Peoria, with whom he lived in the happiest of wedlock for a third of a century. His brother, Stephen Gale, came from New Hampshire in 1852, and settled in Radnor Township, where he continued to reside during the remainder of his life.

Judge Gale died October 20, 1900, at the home of a grandson in Peoria. He left two sons surviving him, one of whom has since died.

ASAHEL HALE. . .

Asahel Hale was born in Pawlet, Vermont, on December 10, 1791, and after living a short time in the State of New York, came to Illinois in 1830. From 1831 until his death, on the 23d of March, 1864, he resided in Peoria, and was among our most intelligent and worthy citizens. In 1838 he received the appointment of County Treasurer and served one term in that capacity. He became one of the prominent anti-slavery men of the place at the time when few had the courage to advocate a cause so unpopular, but has since become so signally victorious. In those days Mark M. Aiken, Moses Pettengill, Mr. Hale and a few others were the forlorn hope who fought the battle of freedom in Peoria.

About 1840 Mr. Hale became connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and, until his death, remained a prominent member of the same. He and Mark M. Aiken donated the lot on which the First Methodist Episcopal Church was erected in 1844. By his will he provided for the erection of Hale Chapel, bequeathing the lot and about $12,000 for the purpose of building the edifice. It was his wish that a good, substantial house should be built, and if the money devised should not be sufficient, the balance should be raised by subscription. On June 22, 1867, the corner-stone was laid, and on the 15th of January, 1868, Hale Chapel was formally dedicated to the service for which it was erected.

Mr. Hale was a public benefactor in a deeper sense than the man who labors merely to organize the business interest of society. He devoted himself to that upon which the whole social fabric rests—morality and religion—which underlie and support education, civilization, business and everything which makes a Christian state of society. Without the conserving forces of religion, morality would be an empty name, and civilization would perish from the earth. The very bonds of society would be dissolved, and man would return to the savage life of the lonely forest or the mountain cave. Mr. Hale, therefore, in building a church that should perpetuate the sanctions and inspire the hopes of religion, by calling men to a remembrance of their solemn duties and obligations, and pointing them to a better world, did more for the real and lasting benefit of society than if he had covered his whole lands with most costly business houses. These are well, of course, and it is well that men should build them; but they should not forget their spiritual relations and duties, which are of paramount importance.

Standing as Hale Chapel does, on one of the most prominent situations on the bluff, it will be the first object seen by the traveler on his approach to the city, and situated as it is in a neighborhood where a church is growing more and more in demand, it will serve to perpetuate the memory of Asahel Hale so long as it shall stand, and so long as the surrounding people meet there to worship. The church first erected having become inadequate to the growing needs of the congregation, it has been removed and a new and elegant stone structure erected in its place.

Having in an early day acquired title to a tract of land on the bluff overlooking the city, he subdivided it into lots, known as Asahel

Hale's Addition. Several of these lots having been subdivided and renamed, now constitute valuable additions to the city.

WILLIAM HALE.

William Hale was born in Pawlet, Vermont, December 7, 1783. His early life was spent on a farm, where he received the advantages of a good common-school education, and, like many young men of the Green Mountain State, spent a portion of his time in teaching. He settled on a farm in Oswego County, New York, and, while living there, became one of the leading men of the county. For many years he held the position of Justice of the Peace. He was then appointed to the Associate Judgeship, held the office of Deputy Sheriff, and then Sheriff, of the county.

In 1835 he came to Peoria, and, in company with his brother, Asahel Hale, and George G. Greenwood, erected a saw and grist-mill on the Kickapoo Creek. At the first town meeting after township organization was adopted, on April 2, 1850, he was elected one of the first Board of Supervisors. He was also the first Mayor of the city of Peoria, receiving his election at the adoption of the city charter, on April 28, 1845.

The business life of Mr. Hale, after leaving the mill, was mostly spent in dealing in real estate, in which he became quite wealthy. He bought at an early time eighty acres in the central portion of the east part of the city, upon which some of the finest residences in that part of the city are now located, and laid it out into streets and lots, from which he received a handsome income. We are informed that he purchased the whole eighty for seven hundred dollars, only a fraction of the price of one lot at the present time. Mr. Hale added Hale's first, second and third additions to the city of Peoria.

Mr. Hale was a prominent member of the order of Free Masons, and donated the ground for a Masonic Cemetery. He also gave liberally to the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he was a member. In politics he was a Democrat, and his first vote was cast for General Jackson, the second term of his election to the Presidency.

He was married on March 27, 1830, at the age of forty-two years, to Miss Hannah Twitchell. Mr. Hale died November 25, 1859.

JOHN HAMLIN.

John Hamlin, one of the pioneer settlers of Peoria, was a native of Wilbraham, Hampden County, Massachusetts. He was born October 25, 1800, his parents being John and Lucy Hamlin. His early education was limited to that obtained in the public schools, with one term at an academy at Wallingford, Connecticut. Having been given his time, at the age of sixteen, he became a peddler, in which employment he traveled through several of the New England and Middle States, and finally, in 1818, reached Zanesville, Ohio, where he sold his stock, crossed the mountains on horseback to Richmond, Virginia, then sold his horses, went by schooner to New York and thence to his old home.

In the spring of 1819 he started West, stopping first at Cincinnati, thence, in company with three young men in a skiff, proceeding down the river toward Louisville, but being overtaken by a small steamboat they abandoned their skiff and took passage on the steamer for the remainder of the way. From Louisville he went to Madison, Indiana, and after three months started for Missouri. After crossing the Wabash at Vincennes he fell in with some emigrants bound for the Sangamon country in Illinois, with whom he cast his lot. This route lay through an uninhabited country infested with Indians; but they safely reached Edwardsville, which was then the largest town in the State. From that point the young man set out alone for Judge Latham's at Elkhart Grove, which point he reached after enduring great privations and incurring considerable danger. Having remained with the Lathams about a year, during which time he improved a piece of land, he became interested with the owner of a keel-boat which had commenced running on the Sangamon from St. Louis, and, in company, they erected a little log store to supply the sparse population with the necessities of life. The following extracts are taken from a biographical sketch prepared under his own supervision:

"Soon after this, in company with several other gentlemen, Mr. Hamlin visited Fort Clark, and found on his arrival here two log cabins, one of which was occupied by the family of Abner Eads; the other was a double log house, and was occupied by two families—one by the name of Bogardus, and the other by the name of Montgomery. This was in the early part of May, 1821. Mr. Hamlin enjoyed the natural beauty of the place at that season of the year, and had an opportunity of seeing a large congregation of its aboriginal inhabitants assemble at their rendezvous at the head of Lake Peoria to receive their distribution of annuities at the hands of the Indian Agent, who had just arrived up the river from St. Louis.

"In March, 1822, he employed Charles S. Boyd to move his effects to Fort Clark with an ox-team. This same Boyd had already become famous as an ox-teamster, having several years before moved his family and effects all the way from New York with the same conveyance. We do not know whether the oxen employed to move Mr. Hamlin were the same yoke that performed that Herculean journey or not, but we presume not. The only white families at this time in Peoria were those mentioned in connection with Mr. Hamlin's first visit—the families of Eads, Bogardus and Montgomery; but their Indian neighbors were very numerous, and many of them were making rapid progress in the first stage of civilization, by freely imbibing the whisky furnished them by the white settlers. These savages seemed to have a great liking for whisky; they would crowd around the trading-post—whether boat or cabin—and plead for it often for hours at a time; and when excited or intoxicated, would prowl about and make the night hideous with their yells. Well if they did not commit depredations and acts of fiendish atrocity. In some instances, a little later, murders were committed by drunken Indians. The famous case of Nomaque, which was tried in the first Circuit Court ever held in the county, was one of this kind; and the shrewd Indian justified himself and charged the murder of the white man on those who sold him the whisky. Who shall say that the judgment of the Indian was not at least half right in this case?

"In 1822 the county of Fulton was organized by act of the Legislature, and the Governor and council appointed Mr. Hamlin as one of the Justices for that county, which then included Peoria County—the latter not yet organized. The office of Mr. Hamlin was selected as the place for taking affidavits in the famous Eads and Ross contested election case. It appears that the contest had been for the office of Sheriff of Fulton County. Eads had been elected by one majority. Ross claimed that the vote was not fair, because some of the voters for Eads lived out of the jurisdiction, on the east side of the Illinois River. Judge Reynolds, who at that time presided, ordered depositions to be taken as evidence in the case, which was accordingly done by Mr. Hamlin, at his office, as Justice of the Peace for Fulton County, in company with his associate, H. R. Coulter.

"In 1823 William S. Hamilton took a contract from the Government to supply Fort Howard, at Green Bay, with beef cattle, and Mr. Hamlin, on account of his efficiency and knowledge of Indian character, was chosen to accompany the expedition to that distant garrison. It was a work of no ordinary difficulty. The country to be traversed with their herd was an unsettled wilderness, without roads or means of crossing the swamps or streams. The cattle had to be guarded and kept from straying, and, although the prairies afforded grass enough for their subsistence, yet the men of the party had to be supplied with provisions for the journey—enough at least to last them to Fort Dearborn (now Chicago), their first stopping place. However, they equipped themselves for the undertaking, and, after many vicissitudes and romantic experiences, which we have not space here to relate, arrived at Green Bay with their cattle, on the second day of July, 1823, having performed the journey in thirty days.

"On his way back Mr. Hamlin performed his first marriage ceremony, at Fort Dearborn, in the marriage of Dr. Alexander Wolcott, a graduate of Yale College, and a man of distinguished literary culture, who at that time was Indian Agent at Fort Dearborn. This was the first marriage ceremony ever performed in the (now) great city of Chicago.

"During his stay in Chicago Mr. Hamlin made an engagement to enter the service of the American Fur Company, which he did after a short trip home. In his adventures during the hunting season among the Indians, he had a rich experience, practicing somewhat in the French language in his conversation with the Frenchmen in his employ, and learning much of Indian life and character. But he had little taste for the life of a hunter. He made a successful trip, however, and returned richly laden with furs, being the first of the outfits of that season to arrive at Chicago.

"Mr. Hamlin, at this time, was only twenty-three years of age, but such was the confidence of Mr. Crafts (with whom he was employed) in his ability and integrity that, on leaving his trading establishment at Chicago, to go East for supplies for the next season's outfits, he entrusted the whole business of the concern to him—the youngest of several clerks in his employ. Nor was the confidence reposed in him misplaced or disappointed. He managed the business to the entire satisfaction of his employer, who, the year following, sent him to establish a new trading-post at his home in Fort Clark. Here he erected buildings and supplied goods, not only to the Indians, but also to the white settlers in the vicinity, getting but little money in his traffic, as in those days money was hardly to be seen, except in transactions with the Government, or with Eastern men newly arrived, or as the result of sales made in distant markets. There was no circulating medium to answer the purposes of local business, and so Mr. Hamlin was obliged to exchange goods for other articles of trade. Besides the usual fur business, he exchanged goods for pork, which he packed and shipped to the military post at Chicago, and also cattle, which he delivered at the same market in the spring.

"His method of getting his pork to Chicago furnishes a good illustration of the difficulties and other obstacles a resolute and ingenious mind may overcome in accomplishing its purpose.

"No attempt had yet been made to navigate the uncertain water route from Lake Peoria to Chicago with anything larger than a Mackinaw boat or an Indian canoe, nor was it thought practicable at the time of which we speak. But Mr. Hamlin conceived the bold idea of shipping his pork by a keel-boat. One was lying idly at the landing, which he could charter for the trip. His plan was to load his pork on board of this, pack his furs on board a small Mackinaw boat which he owned, and, thus loaded, to push on with all possible speed while the water was up in the spring. He loaded and started; his plan succeeded. He moved up the Illinois to the mouth of the Des Plaines. Here he unloaded the keel-boat and built a depot for his pork, leaving it safe and secure in charge of some of the boatmen, while he went on with the Mackinaw boat and furs, passing up the Des Plaines to a point called Summit, where the waters divide, part going by the Illinois and Mississippi into the Gulf of Mexico, and part by the Chicago river and lakes into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. At this point the water passes through a slough into Mud Lake, and thence by a gully into the south branch of the Chicago river, following which Mr. Hamlin arrived safely in Chicago with his boat-load of furs. The pork was conveyed in the same way, and in due time the whole experiment was crowned with success.

"Mr. Hamlin then returned home, gathered up what little means he had saved, amounting to a few hundred dollars, purchased a stock of goods in St. Louis and started business for himself. During the summer of 1825 he built a small frame house—the first ever erected in Peoria. It was eighteen by twenty-four, covered with split and shaved clapboards, and plastered with a kind of white clay procured on the bluffs. Mr. Hamlin purchased a trowel in St. Louis and did the plastering himself, making quite a good job of the walls, but not plastering overhead. He continued his mercantile business with success, and in the spring of 1826 purchased a keel-boat to run on the river to and from St. Louis, in order to control the shipment of his own goods and thus cheapen their transportation.

"In 1828, after the county-seat of Tazewell County had been located at Mackinaw Town, he established a branch store at that place, which he continued about a year. In the spring of 1829 he sold out his entire business and made a visit to his old home in New England, from which he had been absent ten years.

"On his return from the East Mr. Hamlin built a log cabin at the foot of the bluffs, and there engaged in farming. In 1830 he set out an orchard of four hundred apple trees, some of which continued to flourish until about two year ago (1873). The same year he purchased a stock of goods at his old stand and commenced mercantile business, at the same time living at the bluffs till late in the fall, when he moved into his new frame house, on the corner of Main and Perry Streets.

"In the spring of 1831 Mr. Hamlin, with two young men by the name of Sharp, commenced the erection of the first flouring-mill in this section of the country, which was completed in 1832. It commenced operations, doing only custom work at first, but soon added thereto barreling and shipping flour to St. Louis and New Orleans. This, at first, was not profitable, owing to the low prices. For example: In 1832 a lot of two hundred barrels sent to the New Orleans market only yielded, in net returns, $1.37½ per barrel. He continued, however, to run the mill till 1834, when he sold out to an Eastern purchaser.

"He next attempted to establish the first regular steamboat line between St. Louis and Peoria. Steamers had, of course, been running before, but not with a regularity that could be depended upon to meet the growing demands of commerce between the two places. He purchased a quarter interest in a steamer being built at Pittsburg, which was called the Peoria. She was built with an upper-deck cabin for passengers. But on her arrival at St. Louis the plan temporarily failed on account of another party being unable to fulfill his contract. The boat was chartered by other parties, and sent to Galena. But, after a while, Mr. Hamlin, having occasion to go to Galena on business, recovered the boat, and, through his energy and perseverance, succeeded in carrying out his original plan. This was the first regular steamboat, owned in part by a Peorian, that was employed in carrying freight and passengers between Peoria and St. Louis.

"Mr. Hamlin was a man of versatility, adapting himself easily to a change of circumstances, and in all conditions equally fertile in expedients and resources. He passed through many vicissitudes and was a many-sided man, without being changeable or equivocal in character. In his early history he seems to have been a natural born pioneer, taking easily to the hardships, emergencies and excitements of frontier life.

"In intellect Mr. Hamlin was above mediocrity, with a sound judgment and quick, active business faculties. He had also the powers of reason and speculation on abstract themes. Love of truth was one of his predominating traits. His honor and integrity were abundantly tested both in public and private life. As an illustration of his sense of justice and tendency to conciliate rather than exasperate the animosities of men, we need cite only the fact of his confidential and friendly relations with the Indians, with whom he had so much intercourse. While living in his log cabin it was not uncommon for him and his wife to retire to bed in one corner of the room with three or four Indians lying before the fire on a mat spread for them to sleep on; and during the long winter nights they would raise themselves up and smoke their pipes while their unconscious entertainers would be quietly sleeping. The Indians seemed always to be friendly to Mr. Hamlin. Having once been engaged in a regular trade with them, they looked upon his house as a sort of home, and when sober he always allowed them to sleep on his floor.

"Mr. Hamlin was not by nature a politician, yet he has officiated largely in public life. From the time during the Black Hawk War—when he assisted in organizing a self-constituted military commission to take charge of the ferry boat and rebuild Fort Clark, in order to prevent a general stampede of the settlers from the country, who were panic-stricken on the defeat of Stillman, thinking the Indians would come and tomahawk and scalp them in the night—down through the history of city and county, he has been more or less identified with official duties. At that time he did as efficient service at home as the rangers or the army did in the field. We find his name in the early records of the town and city of Peoria, filling the positions of Justice, Trustee, Alderman, etc. In 1834 he was elected by a large majority to the State Legislature, the issue then being on the proposed construction of the Illinois Canal. In 1836 he was elected a member of the State Senate, and again in 1838 re-elected to the same office."

In all public affairs Mr. Hamlin was one of our foremost citizens. As already seen, he was in an early day one of the County Commissioners and County Treasurer. In the contest regarding the county seat he took a conspicuous part and advanced his own credit to effect a settlement of that much vexed question. In all educational matters he took a foremost place and for many years acted as Treasurer of the Public School Fund. He prospered in business and in middle life had attained to a competence in pecuniary affairs. In 1864 he became one of the original stockholders in the Second (now Peoria) National Bank. He was a Republican in politics and always took a deep interest in the success of that party. In religion he embraced the Swedenborgian faith, and in all private affairs lived an honest, consistent and upright life.

Mr. Hamlin was twice married, his first wife surviving but a short time after their marriage. His second wife, who outlived him several years, was the daughter of Levi and Sarah Johnson, of Springfield, Illinois, to whom he was married April 10, 1827. They had no children. Mr. Hamlin died March 29, 1876, leaving a comfortable estate to his widow and their adopted daughter, the wife of Harry M. Van Buskirk, of Peoria, who still survives.

NORMAN HYDE.

Norman Hyde, the first Judge of the Probate Court and first Clerk of County Commissioners' Court of Peoria County, was born in Brown County, New York, on February 9, 1796, and was only twenty-nine years of age when he entered upon the duties of those important positions. His father's name was Calvin, who at the time of his son Norman's death still resided at the old home, but afterwards came to Peoria County.

About the year 1819 or 1820, Norman, in company with his brother Elijah, who was by four years his senior, set out from New York and went to Ohio, where they both taught school for one winter, and in 1821 drifted westward to Kaskaskia and Edwardsville, Illinois, and from there to Fort Clark, where they arrived a year later. Here they became associated in business for a short time, but Elijah becoming infatuated with the lead-mine fever then raging—but Norman not coinciding—they separated and Elijah went to Galena, where he lost all he had and returned to Peoria about 1834 or 1835, to occupy a farm which had been left to him by his brother Norman.

Upon the organization of Peoria County Norman Hyde was commissioned Judge of the Probate Court, but did not assume the duties of that office until the month of June following, there being no business to transact. He taught school at Peoria for two or three quarters in the winter and spring of 1824-5, but of his school little is known. Upon the organization of the County Commissioners' Court he was chosen and qualified as Clerk of that body, and continued to discharge the duties of the office until he qualified as Probate Judge, June 4, 1825. He was also a surveyor, and was chosen County Surveyor, but the date of his appointment to that office has not been ascertained. In that capacity he went far and wide to survey lands, being often called upon to survey claims to lead mines in the Fever River country about Galena, for which services he was often paid in mining claims, or an interest therein, which often proved worthless.

On February 23, 1826, he was appointed second Postmaster at Peoria, which office he acceptably filled until he was succeeded by H. B. Stillman, who does not appear to have held the office for any length of time, for Norman Hyde was again appointed on the 12th day of July, 1830, and was holding the office at the time of his death. On one occasion, while holding the office of Probate Judge, he made the journey to Rock River to marry a couple, carrying the license with him.

It does not appear that Norman Hyde enlisted in the regular service during the Black Hawk War, but he nevertheless performed no less arduous service as an independent ranger, and lost his life in the service of his fellow-citizens. These independent rangers—or scouts, as we would call them—performed a service in keeping a look-out for, and giving warning of, the approach of marauding bands of Indians, of no less value than were those of the regularly enlisted soldiers. It was while engaged in this service, and while on his return from the Rock River country Norman Hyde encountered a band of hostile Indians, and was obliged to hide in the tall grass and willows for a whole night and part of a day, getting wet and cold, in consequence of which a high fever set in and he returned to Peoria to die at the house of his friend, Henry B. Stillman, on July 9, 1832. He was a Mason and was buried in the Masonic Cemetery on Perry and Jackson Streets. He was never married. His father and mother both survived him, as did also his brothers, Elijah and Edward C., and his sisters, Harriet, Emeline, Clarissa and Betsy Hyde, Samantha Pratt and Mary Ann Beckwith. In the year 1837 Elijah went back to New York and brought to Illinois his father, mother and three unmarried sisters. One of the daughters married John Ferguson, another Marshall B. Silliman, father of E. C. Silliman, once County Treasurer.

Elijah Hyde continued to live in Peoria County until the year 1857, when he died, leaving his two unmarried sisters, Harriet and Betsy, surviving. The history of other members of the family has not been traced.

That Norman Hyde was a man of character and of more than average attainments is attested by the numerous positions of public trust he filled during the few years of his residence in Peoria. It is true that the duties of no one of them were very onerous, but to each and all of them he gave his best efforts. That his duties as Probate Judge did not occupy all his time is attested by the very small number of days he was required to be in court, and by the further fact that the records of his court for the first ten years of its existence are contained in a book of 250 pages, which was little more than half filled when he died. He therefore had plenty of time to act as County Surveyor and Postmaster, as well as Judge, all during the same period of time.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In the department of the law and oratory few men connected with Illinois history have achieved so wide a distinction as he whose name serves as the title of this article. Robert Green Ingersoll, lawyer and soldier, was born at Dresden, Oneida County, New York, August 11, 1833. He was the son of a Congregational clergyman of pronounced liberal tendencies, who removed to the West in 1843, and brought up his family in Wisconsin and Illinois. In the later '50s Robert was living at Shawneetown, Illinois, where he and his older brother, Ebon C., were admitted to the bar and almost immediately began to take an interest in politics, and in 1856 Ebon C. was elected to the Legislature from the Fourth District. The following year the brothers removed to Peoria, where they soon took a prominent position both at the bar and in politics. In 1858 Ebon C. was a candidate for the Legislature from the Forty-first District, but was unsuccessful. In 1860 Robert was the Democratic candidate for Congress from the Peoria District in opposition to Hon. William Kellogg, by whom he was defeated. In the fall of 1861, he assisted in organizing the Eleventh Regiment Illinois Cavalry, which was mustered in at Peoria in December of that year, and he was commissioned its Colonel, serving until June 30, 1863, when he resigned. In 1864 he was found in full accord with the principles of the Republican party. On February 28, 1867, he was appointed by Governor Oglesby, Attorney-General of the State of Illinois, being the first incumbent of the office under act of the Legislature passed at the session of that year. In 1868 he was prominently mentioned for the Republican nomination for Governor, but was defeated by Gen. John M. Palmer in the State Convention held that year in Peoria.

In subsequent years Colonel Ingersoll became a power upon the political rostrum and his services as a campaign orator were in almost universal demand throughout the country. Gifted with a remarkable fluency of speech and a highly poetic imagination, he gave utterance in his time to some of the most brilliant flights of oratory that have distinguished the American platform since the Civil War period. One of his most masterly efforts was in the Republican National Convention at Cincinnati, when he presented the name of James G. Blaine as a candidate for the nomination for the Presidency. Other oratorical efforts which brought him deserved distinction were "The Dream of the Union Soldier," delivered at a Soldiers' Reunion at Indianapolis; a eulogy at his brother Ebon's grave; and his memorial address in honor of Roscoe Conkling after the death of that distinguished orator and statesman. In 1877 he declined the appointment of Minister to Germany tendered to him by President Hayes.

Upon leaving Peoria, Colonel Ingersoll first went to Washington City, where he engaged in the practice of the law with his brother, and remained there until after the latter's death. He then went to New York City, where he gained as prominent a position at the bar as he had acquired on the political rostrum, being employed on many important law-suits in different parts of the country. One of the important cases with which he was connected was the trial of the so-called "Star Route Conspirators," which ended in their acquittal in 1883. In his later years he acquired wide notoriety by his written and spoken criticisms of revealed religion. Among his best known publications, comprised in twelve volumes, may be enumerated: "The Gods" (Washington, 1878); "Ghosts" (1879); "Mistakes of Moses" (1879); "Brain and the Bible" (Edgar C. Beall, Cincinnati, 1882); "Prose, Poems and Selections" (1894), besides a number of minor publications, lectures, etc.

After leaving the army Colonel Ingersoll married Miss Eva Parker, a woman of striking personal appearance and of high character. She was a woman of strong personality, and was the constant companion and adviser of her husband during the remainder of his life. Two children were born to them,—Maud, who is still single, and Eva, named for her mother, and who intermarried with Mr. Walston H. Brown, a broker of New York City.

Colonel Ingersoll's domestic life was unusually happy and placid. The early affection existing between himself and his wife continued unabated to the end. He was idolized by his family, and no wife ever had a more affectionate husband, and no daughters a more kindly, tender and considerate father.

Colonel Ingersoll was the soul of generosity. He made money freely, and he spent it as freely for the comfort and pleasure of his family, and in various personal charities. He was absolutely free from any spirit of greed. He loved to make money for the sake of spending it for the happiness of himself, his family and friends. He was warmly attached to his friends, and paid but little attention to his enemies. He was at times, owing to his peculiar views on religious theories, subject to severe and unmerited criticism, and oftentimes to slander and abuse. Of all this he never seemed to take any notice, believing that the best way to refute slanders was to leave them unanswered except by the life and conduct of the individual. He realized the fact that slanderers and calumniators do themselves more harm than the object of their attack. Col. Ingersoll lived to realize the truth of this assertion.

Colonel Ingersoll died suddenly of heart disease at his summer home at Dobb's Ferry, Long Island, July 21, 1899.

ELBRIDGE GERRY JOHNSON.

Elbridge Gerry Johnson, in his time one of Peoria's most notable lawyers, was born at Bath, New Hampshire, December 14, 1814, the youngest but one of a family of twelve children, all of whom but his youngest brother died before him. His father was a stalwart New England farmer, who owned a square mile of the rugged, stony soil of that locality, and expected his sons to cultivate it. At an early age the youthful Elbridge developed a strong taste for literary pursuits, in which he found encouragement and some aid from a Scotch Presbyterian clergyman of the neighborhood. Finding little sympathy at home in the desire to fit himself for a professional life, when about fourteen years of age, he placed himself under the tuition of Rev. Thomas Goodwillie, a Scotch Presbyterian (or Covenanter), of Caledonia County, Vermont, who had a farm upon which a number of students labored two days in each week in return for board and lodging and instruction, in preparing themselves for college. At sixteen he began teaching a winter school, but returned to work on the farm during the vacations of the Newberry Seminary, where he had entered upon a course of academic study. Later he located at Derby Line on the Canadian border, where he read law with Judge Redfield, and, at twenty years of age, was admitted to the bar. Notwithstanding his youth, his future was regarded as one of great brilliancy and promise.

A close friend and fellow-student of Mr. Johnson was Luke K. Poland, who afterward became Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Vermont, United States Senator and later in life a Representative in Congress. Other friends of his who became eminent were Senator Samuel Phelps, Judge Redfield, Chief Justice Royce and Porteus Baxter.

Mr. Johnson practiced law at Derby Line until 1850, when he came to Peoria, arriving here on July 1. In the early part of his residence here he held the office of State's Attorney for one term. In 1860 he was elected on the Republican ticket a member of the House of Representatives, and took an active part in the proceedings of the Legislature during the stirring times just preceding the outbreak of the Civil War and at the special session immediately succeeding that event. During the first session he was in close touch with Mr. Lincoln, then President-elect, with Governor Yates and with the leading Republicans of the State and nation, many of whom visited Mr. Lincoln during his occupancy of the Governor's rooms in the State Capitol, when the Legislature was in session. While Mr. Johnson did not push himself forward into prominence, his counsel was highly appreciated by the leading men of the times. After the enactment by Congress of the General Bankruptcy Law of 1867, he was appointed Register in Bankruptcy for the Peoria District, serving until the repeal of the law in 1878. During his residence in Peoria of nearly thirty-five years, he was associated at different times, as partner, with Judge

E. N. Powell, H. O. Merriman, George S. Blakeley, for thirteen years with Judge H. B. Hopkins, then with A. C. Hewitt, and, near the close of his life, with George B. Foster. He was married twice before coming to Peoria, first at the age of twenty-one years, his wife dying suddenly eighteen months later; his second wife, who accompanied him to Peoria with their three children, died after living with him only five years. His death occurred almost without warning on the evening of January 26, 1885.

Mr. Johnson is described by his contemporaries as "a man of dignified and imposing personal appearance," strong, both physically and mentally, "with Nature's emphatic stamp of superiority." Of an unselfish and unambitious nature, he lived a quiet and unobtrusive life, while giving evidence, under special circumstances, of a great reserve of mental and moral power. Possessing an imaginative temperament, his flights of fancy most frequently took the form of sarcasm, in Hudibrastic verse, or witty, sharp repartee, but occasionally gave evidence of a deeper feeling due to sad experience and a spirit of serious meditation. Of a type of mind called "skeptical," yet one who knew him best has said of him: "In a way of his own, or at least by means addressed to his own comprehension, he reached such a state of certainty that he should enter upon life after death, as to doubt it no more than he doubted, when the evening faded with the setting sun, that the morning would brighten with its rising."

LUCIEN H. KERR.

One of Peoria's most promising young men was a son of Samuel N. Kerr, a prominent lawyer of Ohio, who, upon retiring from the active duties of his profession, had located on a farm near Elmwood in Peoria County.

Lucien H. Kerr was born in the town of London, Madison County, Ohio, on May 4, 1831, and died in his forty-third year. He remained at home with his parents studying and working occasionally, until he was eighteen years old, when he came to Illinois. For several years he engaged in the business of buying and shipping live stock at Elmwood. Leaving that pursuit, he came to Peoria, read law and was admitted to the bar about the year 1861, but almost immediately thereafter enlisted in the Eleventh Regiment of Illinois Cavalry commanded by Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, and was Adjutant of that regiment when it was mustered in. He earned the successive ranks of Major and Lieutenant-Colonel, and, when Colonel Ingersoll resigned, he took command of the regiment. He served through the war with distinction, and, although he had acted with the Douglas wing of the Democratic party up to the time of his enlistment, his ideas soon underwent a change, and, during the campaign of 1862, when at home on furlough, he made a strong speech at Elmwood severing his connection with the Democratic party. Thereafter he acted with the Republican party, and, upon receiving his discharge, returned to this city and resumed the duties of his profession, at once becoming an acknowledged power in the Republican ranks.

In 1870, he was elected a member of the State Senate from this district, which he ably represented for two years. In the campaign of 1872 he was a candidate for re-election but was unsuccessful. He was then appointed City Attorney for the City of Peoria, which position he held at the time of his death. This was occasioned by a gun-shot wound which he accidentally received while out gunning on the river, the fatal effects of which did not at first seem apparent. When informed of the fatal character of his wound he bore the announcement with heroic courage. He died at the house of Mayor Brotherson, from whose family he had received tokens of the warmest appreciation and friendship.

A meeting of the City Council was called by the Mayor and a series of resolutions was adopted by that body testifying to his manly and outspoken life of truth and independence; to his culture as a well-read and accurate lawyer; to the faithfulness with which he had discharged all his duties as a soldier and a citizen; to his fidelity as a friend; to his genial and social qualities; to his every-day conduct as a courteous and high-toned gentleman—that, as a State Senator from this district, his general acquaintance with the current events of the day, with the history and legislation of the country, and with the circumstances and wants of his constituents, united with a conscientious faithfulness in the discharge of his duties, had given him a standing and influence with his fellow-members not often acquired by legislators of greater age and experience.

He was a man of rare talent, and had not neglected the cultivation of the gifts that nature had bestowed upon him. Although his occupation, for some years, was among a class of men not always the most refined in manners, but generally open-hearted, frank, generous, honorable and honest, he never forsook the use of the means adapted to the highest culture of his intellect. He was well read, not only in the current literature of the day, but in the best of English classics. Gifted with a rich melodious voice and excellent memory, he was fond of committing and audibly reciting passages from the leading poets, selecting always such as touched nearest the sympathetic chords of nature. He was a natural orator and accustomed to embellish his speeches with quotations from the leading statesmen. Possessed of a pleasing address and courteous manner, he drew friends around him wherever he went. His popularity was bounded only by his acquaintance, and his society was sought after and appreciated by the most cultivated of the community. He made no public profession of religion, but his reverence for all that was pure and good, high and holy, made him a lover of the sublime in poetry and prose, a man whose natural instincts were reverential. He was a devoted and consistent member of the Masonic Order, under whose rites his body was laid in the tomb, regretted by the whole community.

ALEXANDER MCCOY.

Alexander McCoy was born October 26, 1818, in West Finley Township, Washington County, Pennsylvania. His father, John McCoy, was of pure Scotch parentage, and son of Daniel McCoy, a Captain in the Revolutionary War. His mother, Jane (Brice) McCoy, was a daughter of Rev. John Brice, who organized, and was the first pastor of, the First Presbyterian Church of Three Ridges, now West Alexandria, Pennsylvania.

At the classical school at West Alexandria, under the instruction of Rev. Doctor McClusky and others, he was prepared to enter the junior class half-advanced, at Washington College, Pennsylvania, in the fall of 1842, where he graduated in the class of 1844. Having spent some time after graduation in teaching at home, and subsequently as teacher of languages in Vermilion Institute, at Hayesville, Ohio, he entered the law office of Given & Barcroft, as a student, at Millersburg, Ohio, where he made rapid progress in the rudiments of his profession, and, after a thorough preparation, was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Ohio, in the winter of 1850. He then removed to Peoria, Illinois, where he located to practice his profession.

A great contest was then in progress in the courts in Peoria and adjoining counties, between parties holding lands under tax-titles accruing under the State authorities, and parties claiming the same under patents given to soldiers for said lands by the General Government. To prepare himself for this litigation he spent nearly a year in the County Clerk's office of Peoria County, where the tax-titles originated.

February 1, 1851, he formed a partnership with Henry Grove, at Peoria, and they at once entered upon the successful practice of the law, doing a very extensive business, with a still increasing practice. In the fall of 1856 he was elected State's Attorney for the then Sixteenth Judicial District, for a term of four years. The duties of his office, together with the increased labor of his partnership, proved to be too severe for his health, and a dissolution of the partnership took place in 1858. His health gradually improving, he continued to discharge the duties of prosecutor in his district with such ability and fidelity that, at the expiration of his term, in 1860, he was re-elected for another term of four years.

In 1861 he formed a partnership with Hon. Norman H. Purple, ex-Judge of the Supreme Court of the State, under the firm name of Purple & McCoy. This partnership continued until dissolved by the death of Judge Purple, in August, 1863.

In the fall of 1864, at the urgent solicitation of the people, he became the Republican candidate for the Legislature, and was elected. During the session of 1865 he was awarded the chairmanship of the Committee on Judiciary, an honor rarely conferred upon a new member, thus giving him the first place upon the floor of the House as a legislator. Mr. McCoy was soon an acknowledged leader; his counsel was always sought when important matters were up for consideration; and he devoted his time and attention strictly to the interest of his constituents. He was of great value to the State, and particularly to that section represented by him. It was upon his motion that the emancipation amendment to the Constitution of the United States was adopted.

In the spring of 1867 he formed a partnership with Judge Marion Williamson, Lorin G. Pratt and John S. Stevens. This partnership was dissolved by the death of Judge Williamson in 1868, soon after which Mr. Pratt retired and the business was carried on under the firm name of McCoy & Stevens. Their business was large and lucrative, embracing not only practice in the surrounding counties, but in the Supreme Court of the State, and the Circuit and District Courts of the United States at Chicago.

The domestic life of Mr. McCoy was one of varying light and shade. He was married, October 7, 1857, to Miss Sarah J. Mathews, of Lee, New Hampshire, an estimable lady, of fine accomplishments, a graduate of the female seminary of Mount Holyoke, Massachusetts, and who, for a time, had been Principal of the Female Academy of Peoria. She was a member of the Second Presbyterian Church, a lady of varied accomplishments, a true Christian and beloved by all who knew her. It was the greatest affliction of his life when, in 1863, she was suddenly called away.

He was married a second time, June 23, 1869, to Miss Lucinda E. Dutton, of Chicago, a very worthy lady, possessed of high intellectual and social qualities, and surrounded by many friends. With his wife and daughter he immediately went abroad, visiting England and making the usual tour of the continent. In 1870 he returned to Peoria, and resumed the practice of his profession, in company with John S. Stevens, his former partner.

In May, 1871, at the urgent solicitations of his many friends in Chicago, he removed to that city, and entered into partnership with George F. Harding, and with him actively engaged in the practice of his profession. In the great conflagration of October 9, 1871, he lost his extensive and valuable library. In the year 1872 Mr. Pratt, his former partner, who, in the meantime, had been engaged in other pursuits, became associated with him and Mr. Harding, under the firm name of Harding, McCoy & Pratt. Mr. Harding retired from the firm in 1875. The business was then carried on in the name of McCoy & Pratt. From this time on their business continued to increase rapidly. All branches of litigation were committed to their charge. Important suits involving the most intricate questions of commercial law, such as arise in great cities, were daily intrusted to their care, and, for some years, they were largely employed in railroad litigation. September 23, 1881, Mr. Pratt died suddenly of heart disease, and the firm was broken up, but the business of the firm was continued by Mr.

McCoy, who had as his subsequent partners a relative named C. B. McCoy, and Mr. Charles E. Pope. Mr. McCoy retired from business about the year 1887, and, in January, 1889, removed to California, where he died, February 10, 1893, at his home in Pasadena. As a lawyer of integrity, as a patriotic citizen, and as a man of noble character, Peoria has had few that were his equals, and none his superiors.

NATHANIEL COFFIN NASON.

Nathaniel Coffin Nason, founder of the "Peoria Transcript," and publisher of several periodicals, was born at Gorham, Maine, April 4, 1827. His father, Rev. Reuben Nason, was a Congregational minister, a graduate of Harvard University, and Preceptor of Gorham Academy from its foundation in 1806 to 1834, except from 1810 to 1815, when he had pastoral charge of a church. Having removed to Clarkson, New York, in 1834, to establish a similar institution at that place, he soon afterwards died, leaving his widow, Martha Coffin Nason, who, with a large family of children, returned to Gorham. There the son, Nathaniel Coffin, received an education in the preparatory branches sufficient to admit him to college. When a lad of fifteen years he left home on May 31, 1842, for Jacksonville, Illinois, where his uncle, Nathaniel Coffin, after whom he had been named, was Treasurer and Financial Agent of Illinois College. For this journey he was placed in charge of Edmund Mann, who was coming to Trivoli Township. The trip was made from Portland to Boston by steam-boat, from Boston to Albany by rail, from Albany to Buffalo by the Erie Canal, from Buffalo to Chicago by the steamer Great Western, from Chicago to Peru by stage-coach, from Peru to Peoria by Frink and Walker's steamer "Frontier," on which Henry Detweiler was serving his apprenticeship as pilot. Arriving at Peoria they put up at the Clinton House, kept by John King, where the young man became acquainted with Lord Morpeth, then making a tour of this country, and who inquired of him particularly about the route over which he had travelled. From Peoria young Nason went by the steamer "Embassy" to Pekin, where he had a brother, a civil engineer who had been one of the corps who, a few years before, had laid out the railroad projected by the State from Bloomington to Pekin. From Pekin he went by steamer to Meredosia, and thence to Jacksonville by the only railroad then in the State. He then became a member of the family of his uncle, and entered the Freshman class in Illinois College, where he remained until the completion of his Sophomore year in June, 1844. He taught school during vacation and afterwards until 1845, when he went to Mississippi to assist his oldest brother, who was conducting an academy at Middleton in that State. After teaching one year there, he spent the two following years teaching in private schools, during which time he occupied much of his leisure time in a newspaper office at Carrollton, writing and setting type for exercise. This was his introduction into his life-work.

Alfred F. H. n

Early in 1848 he became a partner in the publication of the paper, the "Whig Flag," in which he remained for about one year. Returning to Illinois in February, 1849, his employment alternated for the next year between working in a printing office at Pekin, teaching school, and clerking in the store of Paul N. Rupert at Wesley City. On January 7, 1850, he began work for Pickett & Davis, publishers of "The Peoria Register," and was there at the time their establishment was wrecked, as elsewhere related; was sent by Pickett & Davis to Chicago, where he printed for them the Township Organization Laws and Forms prepared by Hon. Onslow Peters; worked some in the office of the "Chicago Evening Journal," and returned to Peoria in the latter part of March. His employment for the next three years alternated between Rupert at Wesley City and the publishers of the "Peoria Republican."

In the spring of 1854 he was visited at Wesley City by William Rounseville, Grand Master of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, with a view of starting an Odd Fellows' Magazine at Peoria. After due consideration the enterprise was deemed feasible, and, armed with a letter of introduction and recommendation from Edward J. Cowell, a book-seller of Peoria, to L. Johnson of the type-founding firm of L. Johnson & Co., Mr. Nason went to Philadelphia in June of that year for the materials needed to print the proposed magazine and such other books and pamphlets as might offer, and to do the lighter classes of job printing—the only press purchased being a super-royal hand press with self-inker. In those days of slow transportation his purchases were shipped through Pennsylvania by canal, down the Ohio and up the Mississippi to St. Louis and up the Illinois by boat to Peoria, where they arrived about the middle of July. The office was established on the third floor of a new brick building, now No. 202 Main Street, where it remained until the fall or winter of 1855, when the business was enlarged by the starting of the "Transcript," when a removal took place to the second and third floors of a building on the upper corner of Fulton and Water Streets, afterwards the site of the Metropolitan Hotel and now the J. W. Franks & Sons Publishing House. Of Mr. Nason's connection with the founding of "The Transcript," and the publication of "The Memento," "The Illinois Teacher," and "The Christian Sentinel," a full account will be found in the chapter on "The Press."

Mr. Nason has been prominently connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows from an early day. Soon after his return from the South in 1849, he became a member of Covenant Lodge, No. 48, at Pekin, and, in 1852, a charter member of Fort Clark Lodge, No. 109, afterwards a charter member and the first Noble Grand of Central City Lodge, No. 163, of Peoria, and its first representative in the Grand Lodge. He was elected Grand Scribe of the Grand Encampment of Illinois in 1864, and, in 1869, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, retiring from the former office in 1874, and from the latter in 1886. In the fall of 1886 he removed to a farm which he purchased, near Shelbyville, Illinois, where he now resides.

He was a charter member and first Chancellor Commander of Calanthe Lodge, No. 47, Knights of Pythias, and for some years an active member, both as representative and in important offices, of the State Grand Lodge.

He was a charter member and first Dictator of Lake Lodge, No. 715, Knights of Honor; participated in the organization of the State Grand Lodge in September, 1877, when he was elected Grand Treasurer, which position he has held continuously since, now serving his twenty-fifth year in that capacity.

He was a charter member and first Regent of Ajax Council, No. 216, of the Royal Arcanum, and assisted in organizing the State Grand Council, of which he was one of the first Board of Trustees.

He retired from the printing and publishing business in 1881.

MOSES PETTENGILL.

Moses Pettengill, one of the most prominent citizens of early Peoria, was the son of Benjamin and Hannah Pettengill, born in Salisbury, New Hampshire, on April 16, 1802. His father was a prominent farmer and an influential man, and, in his day, filled many offices of responsibility and trust, in his native town and county, and was also a member of the State Legislature. He was a neighbor of New Hampshire's greatest son, Daniel Webster, and lived about two miles from the birthplace of the eminent statesman and about three miles from his country-seat on the Merri-mac, where he used, in later years, to spend his seasons of rest from the turmoil of politics and the active duties of statesmanship and of his profession, and where Mr. Pettengill knew him intimately. The senior Mr. Pettengill died in 1853. Moses lived on the farm, attending school and an academy till the age of twenty years.

He then taught school till 1827, when he gave up that pursuit and engaged in mercantile business in Rochester, New York. This continued only about nine months, when a fire put a speedy end to his business career in that place. During the balance of that year he travelled most of the time, visiting Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburg, Wheeling, Columbus and Sandusky, and returning again to Rochester, and finally to New Hampshire, his native place. In the summer of 1830 he established himself in mercantile business in Brockport, New York, remaining four years, when he sold out and came to Peoria.

When Mr. Pettengill reached Peoria, on the last Saturday in December, 1833, he found about thirty log-cabins and three frame dwellings, the population being about one hundred and fifty. There were about four log-cabins above Washington Street, and John Hamlin had built a frame house near the corner of Main and Perry Streets.

In January, 1834, Mr. Pettengill purchased of Alva Moffatt, a man who had built a saw-mill near the southern part of the city, the lot on the corner of Washington and Main Streets where the Peoria National Bank now stands, paying $200 down and giving his note for $100 payable in one year. When the year came round the lot was worth $1,000.

After the above purchase Mr. Pettengill returned to New York and moved his family, arriving in Peoria on the 1st of June, 1834. They came on a sail vessel by the way of the lakes and were about two weeks from Detroit to Chicago. In order to get a place for his family to live in, Mr. Pettengill bought a lot with a log-cabin on it, which is the same lot now containing a block of stores erected by Mr. Pettengill in 1855, just above the Peoria National Bank. It was a small log-cabin chinked and plastered between the logs, and although a rude and unpretending home, was one they were glad to get at that time in Peoria.

In the fall of 1834, in company with Jacob (afterwards Judge) Gale, he opened the first hardware and iron store in Peoria. The partnership lasted about a year, when Mr. Pettengill bought out Mr. Gale's interest, and continued the business, alone and with other partners, for thirty years, till 1864. Mr. A. P. Bartlett was partner with him from 1836 till 1843.

Mr. Pettengill worked his way into a very extensive business in the hardware line, disposing of goods at various other young towns in this section of the State, and making the business upon the whole the basis of a successful mercantile career. He was always a conscientious man in business and had a reputation for honor and integrity unsurpassed by any citizen of Peoria. He was always a temperance man, and at an early time, when many were selling liquors in connection with their other business, he was circulating the temperance pledge. Mr. Pettengill was always governed by the principle of making his money by fair and legitimate means. At an early day he espoused the anti-slavery cause, and suffered odium and even persecution on account of his opinions. The murder of Lovejoy at Alton aroused his indignation, as not only a base and cowardly act, but an outrage on the principles of free discussion, which the abettors of slavery seemed determined not to tolerate. In those days the few anti-slavery men and women who came to this country with fixed and conscientious opinions on the subject, had to suffer in a righteous cause. Mr. Pettengill and his wife and some others of the early settlers were of that number; but they stood firmly to their principles and have lived to see them almost universally accepted—by war, to be sure, and in many instances, accepted as a necessity; but still there is a general acquiescence in that order of Providence which blotted out the institution, and no longer any strife or bitterness occasioned by it.

Mr. Pettengill was a man of remarkably pacific disposition, although firm and decided in what he believed to be right and just.

In 1862 he built a residence on the west bluff overlooking the city, which was destroyed by fire in 1865. In 1868 the elegant and substantial mansion, now owned by Samuel M. Clark, was erected on the same grounds.

Mr. Pettengill was twice married, first to a distant relative, Miss Lucy Pettengill, on the 23d of May, 1833, by whom he had two children; both died young. On the 17th of May, 1865, he married Mrs. Hannah W. (Bent) Tyner, formerly of Middlebury, Vermont.

In December, 1834, he and his first wife were among the original eleven who united to form the First Presbyterian Church. In 1847 this church adopted the Congregational polity by a vote of sixteen to six. It is now the First Congregational Church of Peoria.

SABIN D. PUTERBAUGH.

Sabin D. Puterbaugh, jurist and author, was born in Miami County, Ohio, September 28, 1834. His father, Jacob Puterbaugh, moved with his family to Illinois, in 1839, and settled on a farm near Mackinaw, Tazewell County. Here the son grew up, receiving a common school education, and, in 1854, taught school two terms at Hope-dale, the following year removing to Pekin, where he became Deputy Circuit Court Clerk, and entered upon the study of law. In January, 1857, he passed an examination before a committee of which Abraham Lincoln was a member, and was admitted to practice by the Supreme Court, at once becoming a partner of Hon. Samuel W. Fuller, then of Pekin, and State Senator from that District. Mr. Fuller having removed to Chicago in 1858, the firm of Fuller & Puterbaugh was dissolved, and, in 1860, Mr. Puterbaugh formed a partnership with John B. Cohrs, which lasted until the fall of 1861, when having enlisted in the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, Mr. Puterbaugh was commissioned by Governor Yates First Major of the regiment under Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

Going with his regiment in February, 1862, to Camp Benton, near St. Louis, Major Puterbaugh was soon after detached with the First Battalion to join General Grant in the advance up the Tennessee, but later was rejoined by the remainder of the regiment just before the battle of Pittsburg Landing, in which they took part. While reporting with two companies of the Eleventh Regiment to General Prentiss on the morning of April 6, 1862, the first day of the battle of Shiloh, Major Puterbaugh and his command were about the first to receive the fire of the enemy in that historic conflict, sustaining considerable loss in men and horses. The regiment afterwards took part in the advance on Corinth, and, in July, 1862, Major Puterbaugh was ordered with two companies to Bolivar, Tennessee, after which they were engaged in scouting through West Tennessee and Northern Mississippi, during which they had several skirmishes with the rebels. They also took an active part in the battle of August 30th, near Bolivar, and Major Puterbaugh and his command were especially commended for their part in that affair by General Leggett in his report. The regiment was also present at the battle of Corinth of October 3d and 4th, 1862, and joined in the pursuit of the rebel forces under Generals Price and Van Dorn after their repulse.

In November, 1862, Major Puterbaugh tendered his resignation and, returning home, immediately removed to Peoria, where he resumed the practice of his profession. In 1864 he formed a partnership with the Ingersoll brothers—Hon. E. C., and Col. Robert G.—under the name and style of Ingersolls & Puterbaugh. This was continued until June, 1867, when Mr. Puterbaugh was elected Judge of the Circuit Court, serving until March, 1873, when, within a few months of the expiration of his term, he resigned and resumed practice—a few months later removing to Chicago, where, for nine months he was engaged in practice and in the preparation of his legal works for publication. Then returning to Peoria (October, 1874), he was in partnership some three years with John S. Lee and M. C. Quinn, and still later with his son, Leslie D. Puterbaugh—now Judge of the Circuit Court—until the election of the latter Probate Judge in 1890.

Judge Puterbaugh was author of "Puterbaugh's Common Law Pleadings and Practice," which was first published in 1863, but of which five other editions were issued between 1866 and 1888. In 1874 he published "Puterbaugh's Chancery Pleadings and Practice," of which a second edition was published in 1876, and a third in 1888. In 1882 an edition of the latter work, especially adapted to the statutes of the State of Michigan, was published, with a second edition in 1890.

During the ante-Civil-War period Judge Puterbaugh was a Democrat, but, with the firing on Fort Sumter, he espoused the cause of an undivided Union and the Republican party. He was chosen a Presidential Elector in 1880, and assisted in casting the vote of Illinois for James A. Garfield for President and Chester A. Arthur for Vice-President.

On November 18, 1857, Judge Puterbaugh was married at Pekin, Illinois, to Miss Anna E. Rye, who still survives him, together with their three children: Leslie D. and Walter Puterbaugh, and their sister, Frances L., now Mrs. Blanchard H. Lucas. Judge Puterbaugh's death occurred at the National Hotel in the city of Peoria, September 25, 1892.

WILLIAM REYNOLDS.

William Reynolds was born at Roxbury, Pennsylvania, a small town situated at the foot of the Kittochinny Mountain which borders the beautiful Cumberland Valley, and extends from the Susquehanna River in Pennsylvania to the Potomac in the State of Maryland. This valley was originally settled by Presbyterians from the North of Ireland, who have transmitted to their descendants a character for stalwart manhood, patriotism and fidelity to religious principles which has made them leaders in every community with which they have become identified. No one community took a firmer stand nor furnished a more patriotic contingent of soldiers for the achievement of our independence than did the inhabitants of this valley.

Rev. Robert Cooper, the great-grandfather of William Reynolds, was at that time pastor of the Middle Spring Church, and not only rallied his congregation to enlist in the service of their country, but went as chaplain with a company composed of members of his own congregation. His son, John Cooper, was a man of fine scholarship, and for years conducted a classical school known far and wide as "Hopewell Academy," situated near the Conodoguinet, or "Long Crooked River," which flows through the valley, the Middle Spring being one of its chief confluents. Sarah Kearsley Cooper, the eldest daughter of John Cooper, became the wife of John Reynolds of Roxbury, whose father, William Reynolds, and grandfather, John Reynolds, had both been elders in the Middle Spring Church. William Reynolds, the eldest of their children, was born in the year 1830. When he was six years old his parents removed to Peoria, where they resided during the remainder of their lives. Of the eminent piety and usefulness of this devoted couple it would be superfluous to speak, for their names are embalmed in the history of the Presbyterian Church of the city.

Of the labors of William Reynolds in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association of Peoria, of his work in the United States Christian Commission and of his agency in the founding of the Calvary Presbyterian Church of Peoria, mention has been made in other parts of this work. While yet engaged in labors abundant and, as he wished it might be, with his armor on, he was overtaken by death at Louisville, Kentucky, on September 28, 1897.

Immediately after his death testimonials as to his useful Christian life began to pour in, not only from this country but from foreign lands. These testimonials have been published in a small souvenir volume—the most enduring monument to his devoted life.

In the year 1854, William Reynolds was united in marriage with Martha Brotherson, daughter of P. R. K. Brotherson and Frances B. M. Brotherson, with whom he lived in happiest wedlock for forty-two years. A valuable epitome of his career was furnished by one of his co-workers, B. F. Jacobs, of Chicago, from which the following extracts are taken:

"His conversion occurred during the great revival of 1857 and 1858, and was manifest to all. The wonderful public meetings held during that season brought converts into active service. Mr. Reynolds' near companion at that time was Mr. Alexander G. Tyng, whose wife, Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, is a sister of Mrs. Reynolds, and whose active Christian work has endeared her name to all Christians in this State. Mr. Tyng was the son of Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, D. D., of New York, who for many years was a leader in Sunday-school work, from whom the son inherited his natural abilities, and by whom he was trained for wide usefulness. Thus, at the beginning of his Christian life, Mr. Reynolds was turned towards the work that he loved unto the end. Another link, and an important one in the chain, was formed about a year after his conversion, when, with his wife, Mr. Reynolds visited Philadelphia and listened to a sermon by Rev. Dudley A. Tyng, brother of Mr. A. G. Tyng, from the text—"Quench not the Spirit." This sermon was greatly blessed to Mr. Reynolds, who, to use his own expression, 'received a quickening.'

"It should be remembered that the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago grew out of the revival, and was organized in the spring of 1858, and that the Illinois State Sunday School Association held its first convention the year following, 1859. Mr. Reynolds' business led him frequently to Chicago, and, in 1860, he became acquainted with Mr. Moody and his Mission Sunday School. He occasionally visited the Noon-day Prayer Meeting of the Y. M. C. A., then held in the Clark Street Methodist Episcopal Church block, and it was there that the writer first met him.

"In 1861, at the beginning of the war, Mr. Moody, Mr. Tuthill King and the writer, were appointed the 'Army Committee' of the Chicago Y. M. C. A., and began holding meetings with the soldiers who stopped here on their way to the front. Similar meetings were held in the East, and these led to the organization of the United States Christian Commission. Mr. Reynolds entered enthusiastically into this work, and his campaign in Morgan County, with Chaplain (now Bishop) McCabe, will long be remembered. He also visited the army at the front, and did much to encourage and maintain religious work among the soldiers. It was in connection with the Christian Commission that he became acquainted with its chairman, Mr. George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, with Morris K. Jessup and William E. Dodge, of New York, Edward S. Tobey and Charles Demond, of Boston, Bishop Janes and Samuel Crozier, of Philadelphia, John V. Farwell and others, of Chicago. * * * The State Reform School, at Pontiac, was established by act of the Legislature of 1867, and Mr. Reynolds was a member of the first Board of Trustees. In connection with this work he visited other similar institutions, and rendered valuable service.

"In 1864, when it was hoped that the war was drawing to a close, Mr. Moody urged that every effort be made to deepen the interest in Sunday-school work in this State. The convention of that year was to be held in Springfield, and Mr. Moody, Rev. J. H. Harwood and the writer reached that city Saturday morning to hold some meetings preparatory to the convention; these were held morning and evening, and a number of persons were converted. When the convention met Tuesday morning there were manifest tokens of the Spirit's presence and power. This was the first State Sunday-school Convention attended by Mr. Reynolds. Mr. Tyng was chosen President, and from that meeting forward these brothers were united in their devotion to this work. The convention grew in power, and at Decatur, in 1867, a tabernacle was built to accommodate two thousand people. Mr. Reynolds was elected President, the enthusiasm was great, and five thousand dollars was pledged for the work. A canvass of the whole State was planned and counties were divided among the committee, Mr. Reynolds taking the southeastern counties.

"For many years the National Sunday-school Convention had been suspended, but, in 1868, a National Convention of the Y. M. C. A. was held in Detroit, and was attended by many prominent Sunday-school workers. The suggestion was made that a National Sunday-school Convention be held the following year, and a committee was appointed to arrange for it. This convention met in Newark, New Jersey, in 1869. It was attended by many great leaders; the three secretaries of that convention were Rev. (now Bishop) J. H. Vincent, Rev. H. Clay Trumbull and B. F. Jacobs. Among the delegates from Illinois were William Reynolds, Rev. Edward Eggleston, A. G. Tyng and others. From that day Mr. Reynolds became prominent in the National and International Sunday-school Work. Many will remember him in Indianapolis in 1872, when the International Lesson System was adopted and the first lesson committee appointed, of which Mr. A. G. Tyng was a member.

"Mr. Reynolds continued his work in Illinois, attending County Conventions in different parts of the State. In 1880 the State Convention was held at Galesburg. The Association was then twenty-one years old, and a great meeting was planned. Messrs. Moody, Sankey, Whittle, McGranahan, Morton, Farwell, Miss Lucy J. Rider and many others were on the program. Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan held meetings for ten days previous to the convention, and many came from nearly all parts of the State. Mr. Reynolds was elected President for the second time because of his eminent fitness for this place. At this meeting delegates were appointed to the Robert Raikes Centennial to be held in London, England, that year.

"In 1881 the International Sunday School Convention met in Toronto, Ontario. At that convention the present plan of International Sunday School Work was inaugurated. Mr. Reynolds was Chairman of the Nominating Committee and was prominent in the convention.

"In 1884, at Louisville, he rendered great service, and was especially useful in the debate on the temperance question, and the proposed instructions to the Lesson Committee. But his work was chiefly in this State until the year 1887, when the International Sunday School Convention met in Chicago. At that meeting Mr. Reynolds was elected President, and his splendid ability as a presiding officer was seen, and his influence over men was recognized. Following this convention he was urged to accept the position of Field Superintendent of International Sunday School Work for the United States and British North American Provinces. After much consideration he gave up his business, and that year he entered upon the great work of his life.

For more than ten years he has visited the States, Provinces and Territories, and his words have been inspiring and helpful. He has been permitted to organize some State Associations and to revive others that were ready to die. He has rendered great service in securing contributions from business men, and for the past two years addressed special meetings in Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Wilmington, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Louisville, Providence, Toronto and St. Louis. Men prominent in the councils of the Nation and of many States have responded to his appeals.

"He was permitted to render a remarkable service during the Columbian Exposition held at Chicago in 1893. Among the many buildings dedicated to Agriculture, Art, Commerce, Education, Electricity, Horticulture, Manufactures, Mining, Music, Science, Transportation and many other things, one building stood for the religion of Jesus Christ—it was the International Sunday School building. It was, in some respects, a model Sunday-school building, and it was thought best to have daily meetings during the week, and services on the Lord's Day, in this place. Mr. Reynolds took charge of this building and superintended the work, his principal helper being Mr. W. A. Burnell, well known to many. Rev. Mr. Pierson and wife held evangelistic meetings there, and Mr. Moody and others made addresses. These meetings and services were very helpful and were much enjoyed. Nations and States, Arts, Commerce, Manufactures and Science had chosen representatives there, but the special representative of evangelical religion and organized Sunday School work was our beloved brother, William Reynolds.

"In my estimation, his place is with Illinois' greatest men. He was of princely form and manner, bold and courageous, but gentle as a child. He was a leader of men. If greatness consists in influencing others, and if it is measured by the number influenced and the result of that influence on their lives, William Reynolds was very great. His work has called him to every State and every Canadian Province from Newfoundland to Florida, across to California and up to Vancouver's Island. In hundreds of cities men who are themselves leaders have been influenced by him, and millions of children have been, and will be, helped by his life and his words. No other American has spoken to such companies in so many places, and certainly no one has ever presented a more important subject that the moral and religious training of our children and youth. There are few men whose death would be mourned by such a multitude of good people in America as William Reynolds'."

ENOCH P. SLOAN.

Enoch P. Sloan was born in Cambridge, Dorchester County, Maryland, January 27, 1822, and died at Peoria, Illinois, March 10, 1897. He was the youngest of ten children, and, when his parents died in 1825, he was taken into the family of his brother-in-law, John S. Zieber, with whom he lived many years. Mr. Zieber published a paper at Cambridge, Maryland, and at the age of eleven years Mr. Sloan entered his office and learned the printing trade. In 1839 Mr. Sloan came to Peoria with Mr. Zieber and worked in the office of the "Peoria Democratic Press," which the latter soon afterward established, the first number being issued February 22, 1840. In a year or two thereafter Mr. Sloan became one of the proprietors, and so remained until 1846, when the paper was sold to Thomas Phillips. Three years later Washington Cockle bought the paper. Mr. Sloan continued to work in the office, and, in 1851, bought the paper and conducted it till 1856, publishing it for the last two years as a weekly, tri-weekly and daily.

In 1856 Mr. Sloan was elected Circuit Clerk and Recorder on the Democratic ticket, and four years later was re-elected. When the war broke out, being a Democrat, he took strong grounds in favor of sustaining the Government and gradually drifted into the Republican party. In 1864 he ran for Circuit Clerk on the Republican ticket, but was defeated. He studied law while attending to the duties of the office, and, in 1865, was admitted to the bar. He practiced law two years only, and then engaged in the Abstract Business, which he continued to the time of his death.

In the early '70s he was a member of the Board of Education. From 1877 to 1881 he served as Alderman from the old Fifth Ward. When the Peoria branch of the United States Court was established in Peoria he was appointed Chief Deputy Clerk, and held the office at the time of his death. For a number of years he was President of the Central City Loan and Home-stead Association.

Mr. Sloan was married, on April 15, 1845, to Miss Elizabeth M. Banvard, and eight children were born to them, six of whom still survive.

When the Red Ribbon temperance movement was inaugurated in Peoria Mr. Sloan took an active part in it, making speeches and helping to sustain the rooms of the Club. This was one of the most vigorous temperance movements Peoria has known, and its influence is yet felt in many quarters.

Mr. Sloan was an able and judicious writer, always maintaining his views with a calm firmness which gave great weight to his editorials and other writings. In the days of the Kansas-Nebraska controversy he took the side of Douglas, and maintained his side of the controversy so long as he remained editor. Later in life he became much interested in the labor question, and, while discouraging strikes and violent resistance to law, he wrote much on the side of the laboring man as against the domination of unprincipled capitalists. He gave much study to the growing controversy between capital and labor, always maintaining there should be no antagonism between them, but recognizing the fact that a man's labor was as much his capital, and entitled to as much protection, as the money or property-capital of the employer.

In early life Mr. Sloan united with the Methodist Church of Peoria, and during life adhered to its faith, but for many years, on account of the position of antagonism with some of his fellow-members into which he was forced by his occupation, he ceased to be a communicant. But none could doubt the sincerity of his heart or say much against his conduct, either in private or public life. In all things he brought a conscientious effort to the performance of every duty.

ASAHEL AUGUSTUS STEVENS.

Of the many pastors who have left an impress for good upon the religious life of Peoria, no one is held in more affectionate remembrance than Rev. Asahel Augustus Stevens, who, for more than forty years, was Pastor and Pastor Emeritus of the First Congregational Church in this city. He was of Puritan and Revolutionary stock, born at Cheshire, Connecticut, December 24, 1816, son of George and Sarilla (Hitchcock) Stevens, both his grandfathers having served in the army of the Revolution, one belonging to the "Minute Men" of Connecticut. He was the youngest of four brothers; and, while yet in the paternal home, developed a character for uprightness and integrity which was a predominant feature of his after-life. His academical education was begun at Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, in the autumn of 1835, and continued there with some interruptions until 1839, when he entered Yale College. He did not, however, complete the course of studies there, but after being in the ministry for some years, he obtained the degree of Master of Arts from that institution in 1851. In 1847 he graduated at the Yale Theological Seminary and, in September of that year, was married to Mary C. Bristol, daughter of Gideon and Julia (Parker) Bristol, of Cheshire, Connecticut. He began his ministry soon after leaving the seminary, his first charge being Center Church, Meriden, Connecticut. After remaining there one year he retired from the ministry, and for the ensuing year engaged in agricultural pursuits at his old home in Cheshire. From 1855 to 1856 he was pastor of a Presbyterian Church at Newton, Iowa. In the autumn of 1856, the Main Street Congregational Church of Peoria being without a pastor, he was introduced to it by Rev. Flavel Bascom, who twenty-two years before had been present at and assisted in its organization as a Presbyterian Church. Mr. Stevens' coming to Peoria is thus described by himself in an address delivered at the semi-centennial anniversary of the church:

"In the autumn of 1856, twenty-eight years since, after spending a pleasant Thanksgiving with the family of that patriarch of Illinois ministers, Rev. Flavel Bascom, I was conducted by him to this Central City and introduced to the family of Deacon Moses Pettengill. Partly in consequence of a night ride in the cars, and partly, perhaps, as a natural result of Thanksgiving festivities, I was not feeling well. It was, too, a time of depression in our political status, and of discouragement in the church; for our campaign, under Fremont as leader, had ended in seeming failure; and the church, after trial of three ministers in as many years, had been rent asunder and was left, not only greatly depleted in numbers and resources, but resting under a cloud as to its reputation and character. But the next day was the Sabbath, and we must "not forsake the assembling of ourselves together." Casting around for a subject to meet in some good measure these conditions, this text seemed fittest of all for an introduction to this field: 'The Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoice.' It enabled me to define at once my position, make known my principles, strengthen my faith and brighten my hopes, as well as comfort and encourage my brethren. I think it may truly be said that some degree of affinity and real friendship sprung up between us from that first hour of our meeting.

"After a few weeks further acquaintance, a call was given and accepted at a salary of $1,000, and we proceeded quietly to do our work and fulfill our mutual relations as well as we knew how. As already indicated, the church and congregation were small. Something over thirty names were on the books, but some of these were in a transition state, and some, I fear, in a state of suspended animation."

His relations to the political events of those stirring times are shown by the following extract from the same address:

"When the campaign of Lincoln came on, it began to be acknowledged that we were on the right side. When the Civil War began, it was declared emphatically that this church stood right in the matter. There was never any uncertain sound or holding back in respect to what the Government demanded or the cause of the oppressed required."

The pastorate, commenced under the discouragements mentioned, continued for a period of ten years, when impaired health induced him to resign and to seek a less laborious field. Of the character of this period of his ministry the following testimony was borne by one of his successors, Rev. E. Frank Howe, on the same occasion:

"I will only say what he would not say—but what all of you who know him and are familiar with his labors here know to be true—that what this church now is, is very largely due to his patient and conciliatory spirit, his wise leadership, his great and general acceptableness as a preacher, and his character, which has won for him the heartiest respect and the warmest affection, not only of this church and congregation, but of the entire community."

He then for a time returned to his early and loved occupation of tilling the soil, occupying a small farm in the immediate vicinity of Peoria, where he commenced the raising of fruit, which he continued for many years thereafter. Having been in a measure restored in health he began, in the fall of 1866, supplying the Congregational Church at Lacon, where he continued to preach for over three years. In the fall of 1870, he was recalled to the pastorate of the Main Street Church, and continued to serve it as pastor until 1882. It was during this period that the union took place between the Main Street Church and the New School Presbyterian Church, out of which grew the present First Congregational Church of Peoria; and, during the same period their present elegant church was erected. Immediately after his second resignation, by a unanimous vote of the congregation, he was made Pastor Emeritus, which position he held until the time of his death, which occurred July 16, 1901.

At a commemoration service held on October 23, 1901, in addition to the adoption of a suitable memorial, it was resolved to place a tablet dedicated to his memory in the auditorium of the church.

Mr. Stevens was of medium height, rather slender, of exceedingly meek and quiet demeanor, yet always standing firm for the right as he understood it, graceful but not florid in speech, convincing in argument and persuasive in his appeals. During a residence of nearly half a century in the city of Peoria, more than half of which was spent in the active ministry, no man of any calling commanded a higher degree of respect and confidence than he.

He was a man of remarkable foresight in regard to the future of Peoria, and, on one Thanksgiving occasion more than thirty years ago, when the city was confined between the bluffs and the river, he provoked the smiles of his congregation by the prediction that, one day in the not distant future it would extend its domain over the bluff as far as Dry Run, a prediction that is already fulfilled. Although of limited means himself, he had the happy faculty of so influencing the charitable inclinations of others as to direct them towards the formation of charitable institutions, and, were the whole truth revealed, it is not at all improbable that more than one of our most important charities would be found to have originated in his counsel and advice.

He was also an earnest advocate of popular education, as well as of every measure calculated to elevate the moral and intellectual tone of the community in which he lived, and to this end he took an active part in the organization and became a charter member of the Peoria Library.

His domestic life was one of great felicity. He and his estimable wife had the rare good fortune of celebrating both silver and golden weddings among the people whose warmest affections they so fully enjoyed. Soon after the golden wedding Mrs. Stevens died at the age of eighty years. There are four surviving children: Walter B., Mary E., Edward A. and Moses Pettengill Stevens—the first named being now Secretary of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, and formerly Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Globe Democrat, the second and fourth residing in Peoria, and the third in the State of Kansas.

WILLIAM W. THOMPSON.

William W. Thompson, who for some years represented Peoria County in the State Senate, was born at Brimfield, Massachusetts, on February 23, 1786. In the year 1826 he removed to Northampton in the same State, where he resided until his removal to Peoria County in 1839. During his residence in Massachusetts he became a member of the Legislature and, as that State was in the fore-front in the matter of public education, he became well qualified to take a leading part in his new home. The settlement about Charleston, as it was then called, and the neighboring one at French Grove, were made up of an exceptionally intelligent class of people, mostly from the East, among whom Mr. Thompson found congenial companionship. Amongst others may be mentioned the Wolcotts, Wileys, Freemans, Fessendens, Haywards, Willards, Churches, Belchers, Guyers, Cutters, Tuckers, Metcalfes, Sutherlands, McRills, Cockles, Wellses and Riggss, many of whom became prominent in the affairs of the county. As stated elsewhere, they formed a lyceum association in which Mr. Thompson took a prominent part.

When only three years in the State he was elected to the State Senate, and, at the expiration of his term, was re-elected, serving in that capacity from 1842 to 1846. While a member of the Senate he attended and took a prominent part in the educational convention held in Peoria, in 1844, as elsewhere noted. He was also elected a member of the Convention which framed the Constitution of 1848, in which body he was a strong advocate of all measures having as their object the establishment of a system of common-school education. From early manhood he almost constantly held some office in the gift of the people. While a member of the State Senate he procured the passage of a bill changing the name of the village of Charleston to that of Brimfield after his native town. He was a "Democrat," not only in politics, but in personal feeling and demeanor, according to the high and low alike, not only equality in civil rights, but equality in that personal courtesy and consideration which mark the true gentleman. His influence in moulding the character of the community in which he lived was of a lasting character.

Mr. Thompson died at his residence in Brimfield, Peoria County, on February 24, 1850, aged sixty-four years.

ALEXANDER GRISWOLD TYNG.

Alexander Griswold Tyng was born in Prince George County, Maryland, on July 28, 1827. His father was Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, D. D., for so long a period Rector of St. George's (Episcopal) Church, New York, and his mother Ann De Wolf Griswold, the daughter of Rt. Rev.

Alexander Viets Griswold, Bishop of the New England Diocese for many years, and presiding Bishop at the time of his death. Along with his fine ancestry flowed into his blood a choice endowment, mental and spiritual. His home nurture was of the carefullest and wholesomest. His training in academy and college was under the best masters. His childhood and youth were chiefly spent in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where his father was, during that time, Rector of the Church of the Epiphany. He was for three years a student in the University of Pennsylvania, but spent his final college years in Columbia College, New York, from which he graduated with honor in 1845, being second in his rank in the class. He afterward entered upon the course of study for the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, Virginia, but was obliged, on account of failing health, to relinquish it after the first year. He spent more than a year in foreign travel, visiting Europe, where he was introduced to many notable persons through his father's previous acquaintance and visits, and had the rare pleasure and distinction of sitting with University dignitaries, famed scholars and government officials in the banqueting hall at Cambridge. Later he made an extended ocean voyage on board a merchant vessel, going to China and spending some months there.

He came to Chicago in 1848 to enter into mercantile life in the vast lumber interests conducted by his brother-in-law, George M. Higginson, Esq. A very unexpected Providence led him to Peoria, Illinois, in 1849, where the remainder of his life was spent. He was married on January 9, 1851, to Lucie Brotherson, eldest daughter of P. R. K. Brotherson, Esq., with whom he spent a most happy and useful life. He has been actively identified with the religious and business life of this city. "Mr. Tyng's residence here stretches over nearly half a century. During all this period he was in active business on his own account; one of the oldest, if not the oldest, grain-dealers in Illinois, a record which can scarcely be duplicated among our surviving citizenship. When he came here Peoria was just an ambitious, booming western village, without railroads or telegraph, and with the scantiest means of intercommunication and transport. No one has contributed more than he to its commercial advancement. He gave employment to hundreds of laborers, advertised the town and attracted enterprises to it. His sanguine temperament, his optimistic views, his boldness and enterprise may now and then have brought loss upon himself, but they have benefited the community at large."

Mr. Tyng's business career in Peoria was a conspicuous one. As early as 1852, in conjunction with P. R. K. Brotherson, he was engaged quite extensively in the pork-packing industry, which they carried on for a number of years. Later the same firm were leading factors in the grain and general produce trade, Mr. Tyng having erected here one of the earliest grain-warehouses, which was located at the corner of Water and Walnut Streets. After the opening of the first railroad lines into Peoria, by the establishment of local agencies in the more important towns reached by the railroads, this firm did much to promote trade between the city and the country, and probably Peoria is indebted as much to Mr. Tyng for the development of its general produce trade as to any other single individual. In the latter part of his life Mr. Tyng was for a number of years Secretary and Manager of the Peoria Marine and Fire Insurance Company.

He was one of the wardens of St. Paul's Episcopal Church for twenty-five years, and of Christ Church (Reformed Episcopal) for twenty-three years. In Sunday-school work he was actively engaged during his entire life, and both Church and Mission Sunday-schools, as well as State and International Associations, were benefited by his interest and labors. He was a member of the first International Committee to select, for seven years, the Sunday-school lessons, representing with Rev. Richard Newton, D. D., of Philadelphia, the Episcopal Church on that committee. He was very public-spirited and patriotic. "He was at the head of the Christian Commission work in this State, went to the front with supplies and personally ministered to the wounded, sick and dying, needy and desolate. The members of the Grand Army he counted heroes, every one, to whom we owe an unspeakable debt. To every good cause, philanthropic, educational, reformatory, he gave a helping hand. He never grew old, was the friend of young men, rescued not a few, and aided many in life's struggle." A citizen interested in the prosperity of the city, he was for years a member of the School Board, and a liberal donor to every project for the general good. "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," applies truly to him. Since the organization of the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union" it has had in him a devoted coworker and its staunchest friend. "For more than twenty years his presence every week at Gospel Temperance meetings brought cheer and delight; his beautiful, stirring messages, his humble, faith-filled prayers awakened and quickened every heart. His loving word and sympathy reached to the lowliest and blessed many. At least one thousand times has his voice been heard in the local work, while his help and interest went out to State, National and World's W. C. T. U. workers, among whom his name and memory are cherished."

His sons, who yet survive, are: Alexander G. Tyng, of Peoria; Dudley Atkins and Philip Brotherson Tyng, of Chicago; and Pierre Kissam and Lucien Hamilton Tyng, of Buffalo, New York.

Mr. Tyng entered into rest July 8, 1897. His funeral services were held in Christ Church, and he was laid among his beloved relatives in Springdale Cemetery, near the city he loved so well, and in whose future he had great faith—the city of his labor and love, and in which "his works do follow him." He will live in the intellectual and religious life of this city, and in the institutions which he helped to found.

ISAAC UNDERHILL.

[The following sketch of Isaac Underhill is taken from the "Atlas of Peoria County," published during the life-time of Mr. Underhill, and believed to have been revised by him:]

Isaac Underhill was born in Westchester County, New York, January 4, 1808. His father's name was Solomon Underhill, who settled in Sing Sing, New York, about the year 1806, and carried on mercantile business until the war of 1812, when he purchased a farm, one mile east of Sing Sing, and lived there till he died, about 1844.

The early life of Isaac Underhill was spent on his father's farm, where he had the advantage of a good common-school education. At the age of nineteen he went to New York City, and was engaged as a clerk in a wholesale and retail provision store, remaining about two years in that capacity, when he engaged in the wholesale and retail grocery business for himself, which he continued about three years.

On the 11th day of March, 1830, he was married to Miss Jane S. Underhill, a distant relative.

On the 9th of November, 1832, he loaded a ship, mainly with groceries, and with his wife sailed for New Orleans. They remained in New Orleans until the 10th of May following, when, not daring to stay through the summer for fear of yellow fever, they went by the river to St. Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Niagara Falls and thence back to New York. In the following December, having shipped his merchandise by sea to New Orleans, Mr. Underhill went by way of Baltimore and the Ohio River to St. Louis, arriving there about the 20th of the month. The water being low and the boats not running, and having heard of the magnificence of the Illinois prairies, he took stage with a friend for Peoria, arriving here on Christmas Day, 1833. Peoria then contained about forty people. There were two frame houses and seven log cabins. Being charmed with the beauty of the town site, he concluded to remain and purchase some lots. Finding one of the County Commissioners, Aquilla Wren, in town, in charge of the sale of the lots, he and his friend purchased each two lots, 77 feet front by 171 feet deep, on the corner of Washington and Liberty Streets, at $40 a piece, one quarter cash and the balance in three half-yearly installments, at six per cent. interest. At that time there were no buildings on any street in Peoria above Washington. After purchasing these lots Mr. Underhill made a trip by steamer to New Orleans, whence he returned to Peoria the following summer. The town by this time had started to grow, and lots were rising in value.

On the 5th of August, 1834, Mr. Underhill purchased of John L. Bogardus the Peoria ferry, and the land then known as the "ferry fraction," now known as "Bigelow & Underhill's Addition to the city of Peoria," paying for all $1,050. On this addition was located, in part, the old French village. In July, 1836, Underhill and Bigelow platted their addition into lots, and offered them at public sale, subject to French claims, Mark M. Aiken making the facetious remark that "Underhill was willing to guarantee against anything but the rightful owners."

From 1834 to 1840 Mr. Underhill's time was divided between St. Louis and Peoria, being engaged a portion of his time as a merchant in St. Louis. In the spring of 1840, quitting the latter place, he came to Peoria, and commenced farming on two hundred acres of land near the town of Rome. In 1841 he built on the bluff where St. Francis Hospital now stands a stately residence, with a colonnade in front, at a cost of $10,000, where he resided thirty years; also in the same year built three pork-houses, of brick, where the Armour building now stands, and a two-story slaughter-house below the present Union depot, and fenced and broke five hundred acres of land, in addition to his farm operations at Rome. Subsequently the farm at Rome was increased to twenty-two hundred acres. In the fall of 1841 Mr. Underhill sowed three hundred acres of winter wheat, and had an excellent crop, cutting it all with the old-fashioned cradle. This he sold at thirty-two cents per bushel, which was that season the highest market price. Expecting wheat to pay better the next year, he put in one thousand acres, and did not cut a bushel of it, from the fact that it was all winter-killed. That was the hard winter of 1843. The river closed that year on the 13th of November and remained closed until the first of April. In the year 1846 Mr. Underhill set out on his Rome farm an orchard of ten thousand grafted apple trees, and six thousand peach trees. He cultivated them seven years, and on the first of April, 1853, sold his farm to Clapp and Butler for $40,000. This immense plantation gave the name of Rome Farms to the locality.

In 1853 Mr. Underhill helped to organize the Peoria & Bureau Valley Railroad Company, was made its first President, and by the aid of Farnham & Sheffield (contractors) was enabled to put it in operation in eleven months from the time of first breaking ground. By a vote of the stockholders he signed a lease for ninety-nine years to the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad Company. On the first of April, 1855, he organized the Peoria Marine and Fire Insurance Company, and was President of the company thirteen years, until succeeded by B. L. T. Bourland, Esq. In 1865 he helped to organize the Mechanics' National Bank of Peoria, and was its first President. In 1866 he sold out his interest in the bank, and built the Metropolitan Hotel on the northeast corner of Water and Fulton Streets. On the first of March, 1868, it was destroyed by fire, involving a heavy loss.

In 1870 Mr. Underhill went to reside at Marseilles, La Salle County, where on the first of April, 1867, he had organized the Land and Water Power Company, of that place, and was President of the same five years. He also, at the same time, organized the Marseilles Bridge Company, of which he was President, and built a bridge, at a cost of $31,000, which, after being open for travel about ten days, was swept away. The following year it was rebuilt.

Mr. Underhill was elected one of the Trustees of the town of Peoria in 1842; served three terms as an Alderman of the city; was twice elected Supervisor, and once Township Assessor. He was Chairman of the committee that built a fence around the court house square and planted the square with trees, also to alter the interior arrangements of the old court house. He had picked strawberries where the court house now stands, had seen the prairie fires burn over where the central part of the city now is, and had hunted prairie wolves where are now its most densely settled western portions.

In 1836 the jockey club of Peoria, of which Mr. Underhill was a member, got up three days' races on the prairie below the town. Horses came from Kentucky, Indiana and Michigan, and a high time was had. Six shanties were put up by the sporting fraternity for gambling purposes and for the sale of liquor. The Grand Jury met soon afterward and made diligent inquiry into the violations of the license law, but could get no witnesses to prove the sale of liquor, except a saloon-keeper, living on Water Street, by the name of William C. Terry. He testified that "there was a great deal of liquor sold there, but he got so drunk he could not tell who sold it."

During the war of the Rebellion Mr. Underhill conceived and carried into successful execution a scheme for insuring able-bodied men against an impending draft by furnishing them substitutes. He was during most of his life successful in business, but, in consequence of losses incurred in his enterprise at Marsellies, he lost all his property and finally closed his life in the State of Texas, in very reduced circumstances. To his energy and business enterprise, however, Peoria owed much of its early prosperity.

JOHN WESTON, D. D.

John Weston was born in Rutherglen, Scotland, on December 8, 1838. In the veins of his ancestors (on both his father's and his mother's side) flowed the blood that has made the stalwart Christians of the centuries. They were all members of the Established Church of Scotland, and were brave defenders of "the faith once delivered to the saints." When but ten years old, in company with his parents, he left Scotland, coming by sailing vessel from Liverpool to New Orleans, where they took a steamer and went up the river to Cincinnati. Here they resided for a few years, when they went to St. Louis, making their home for a short time in that city. They then removed to Galena, Illinois, then an important city of the Northwest to which the Illinois Central Railroad had been completed during the previous year. Shortly after his arrival in Galena, his father died.

It was about this time Mr. Weston became impressed with the thought that he had a call to enter the ministry. This conviction deepened upon him, and he determined to surmount the financial difficulties that stood in his way. A born hero, he could "endure hardness" and was "willing to plunge through the rapids of life in his own canoe." He availed himself of an opportunity to pay his own way through Hanover College, Indiana, graduating in the class of 1864. His summer vacation was spent in the army, and, being mustered out at the expiration of his term of service, he at once entered the McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago, graduating in 1867.

About this time there was need of laborers in a large mission field in Peoria. William Reynolds, a man of extensive business interests, and afterward the Field Superintendent of International Sunday School Work, had organized a Mission Sunday School, and so rapid was its growth the demand for a church organization was urgent. He felt that a young man, adapted to the work, should at once be called to this field. In consultation with Mr. D. L. Moody and a relative in Chicago, Mr. Reynolds was directed to John Weston, then about to graduate from McCormick Theological Seminary, and regarded as eminently furnished for the work, having, during his period of study in the Seminary, been engaged in practical work in one of the Missions of Chicago.

Mr. Reynolds was so favorably impressed with him that he invited Mr. Weston to Peoria to look over the field. He came, and the result was a ministry extending over a period of nineteen years. The record of these nineteen years can only be written in the hearts of the countless number it has blessed.

The secret of Mr. Weston's wonderful success has been a single-hearted devotion to the cause to which he has devoted his life. One of his marked characteristics was a righteous indignation against those who assaulted the infallibility of the Scriptures. The harshest words he ever utters in the pulpit now are in impatience with those higher critics who, "wise above what is written," would take from and add to the word of God. His life itself is a gospel for this age of skepticism and backs up strongly his denunciation of it. It is doubted if in the length and breadth of this land, or other lands, there can be found a more ideal pastor than Mr. Weston. Full of a strong Christian sympathy and cheer, his presence is a benediction to every home he enters.

Mr. Weston commenced his labors in Calvary Mission in April, 1867, just before entering upon his work being married to Miss Alice C. Stephens, in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. She has proved a true helpmeet in the work in which he is engaged. They have five children, all of whom are now holding positions of usefulness and proving a blessing to their home, to the Church and to the world.

In 1886, after these nineteen years of faithful service in Calvary Church, he told the Presbytery of Peoria that the care and strain of so large a field had well nigh broken his health and spirit, and asked to be relieved of this charge. His resignation was a sorrow to every member of the Church, and it was feared that the Church would go to pieces, but,

"The storm that blows can never kill

The Tree God plants."

A call came to Mr. Weston from an inviting country church in the midst of a Scotch settlement in Elmira, Illinois, and there he remained four years. Then, with renewed health and strength, he began to feel that the work in this country charge was too limited, and he accepted the position of Superintendent of Missions of the Presbytery of Chicago. This place he filled with great ability for three years. At the expiration of that time he felt a longing desire to have once more his own church and people, and he accepted a call from the North Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, where he remained five years, doing good work and adding many to the membership of the church.

In 1898 there was a vacancy in the pulpit of Calvary Church, and it was the unanimous desire of the people that a call should be extended to Mr. Weston. Twelve long years had not impaired the love that bound them together as pastor and people, and his return was warmly welcomed to the Church he was pleased to call his first love. He had lost none of his old time fervor, and is still the same faithful, fearless minister that he was in the early days of his charge. He still retains the beautiful simplicity and consistency of the old time in spite of the honor of D. D. having been conferred upon him by Gale College, Wisconsin. Nor is Dr. Weston's usefulness confined to his church. Like his Master, he goes about doing good, and the city at large appreciates his life and his work. He is wielding an influence for good in the Grand Army of the Republic, where his lot has been cast as Chaplain of the Old Soldiers, of whom he is proud to count himself one.

HORACE G. ANDERSON.

It is a pleasure to review the acts and some of the incidents in the lives of the older citizens of Peoria, who have in the past contributed to its prosperity and development, and have set an example worthy of imitation. Among these is Mr. Horace G. Anderson, the subject of this brief sketch. He was born in the town of Portland, Chautauqua County, New York, on September 13, 1822. He came to Illinois with his parents, in March, 1833, and settled upon a farm in Will County, near Lockport, where the family remained for seven years, and then removed to a farm near Naperville. Mr. Anderson remained with his father upon the farm, until he was twenty-one years old, attending the country district school, for a part of the year, until he was nineteen years old. He then went to the Rock River Seminary, at Mt. Morris, in Ogle County, where he remained for two years. After leaving school he was engaged as a clerk in various places, for three years, until June, 1848, when he came to Peoria and established himself in the lumber business, which he followed for eleven years. Subsequently, he operated the Peoria Pottery for two years, with more of loss than profit. After quitting the management of the Pottery, he engaged in the foundry business in connection with the old Peoria City Foundry, which he conducted for six years with success, but finally closed it out, near the end of the Civil War, because of a general collapse all over the country in this branch of manufacture. Soon after the great fire in Chicago, he established himself in the wholesale hat, cap and fur business, in the city of Peoria, but learning that it could not be profitably conducted here, finally abandoned it.

Mr. Anderson's active business career was continued for many years; he was a well-known citizen, and one who was interested, at all times, in whatever pertained to the welfare and growth of the city. He always had confidence in the location and future of Peoria, and encouraged, at all times, the bringing in of new brains and money. He was never an office-seeker, but always ready to do his part, officially or otherwise, for the development of Peoria. He served as School Inspector for a number of years, was a member of the City Council, held an appointment as Canal Commissioner for four years, and Gauger in the United States Revenue Service for seven years. He was also a member of the Board of Supervisors that planned and constructed the present Court House, which was quite an evidence of enterprise for the conservative county of Peoria, as many of the people of that time believed that the old structure was sufficient for all needs.

Mr. Anderson married Miss Melinda Arnold, of Collins Center, Erie County, New York, in 1850. Several children have been born to them, some of whom are still at the parental home, while the others reside in the immediate vicinity.

The latter years of Mr. Anderson's life were spent in the society of his wife in the peace and quiet of their beautiful home upon the bluff, overlooking the business portion of the city. Here he died on the 16th day of February, 1902, his wife surviving him. Their life was a serene and happy one, in which they set an example that may be followed with profit by others. Always devoted to each other, to their family and their home, they grew old gracefully, without any of that hardness and bitterness that sometimes seems to develop with increasing years.

CLIFFORD MASON ANTHONY.

Clifford Mason Anthony, son of Charles S. N. Anthony and Elizabeth Bulkelev Anthony (nee Emerson), is a native of Washington, Tazewell County, Illinois. His ancestors were among the most notable of the early New England colonists, the names of the Anthonys, the Bulkeleys and the Emersons appearing on almost every page of colonial history, while their descendants have ever since been prominent in almost every field of American enterprise and development.

Mr. Anthony received his education in the public and private schools of his native village and at a military school at Stamford, Connecticut. Upon leaving school he found his first employment as clerk with his elder brother, Charles E. Anthony, who, in company with Henry Denhart, was carrying on a general mercantile and private banking business at Washington, and in a short time he was given a clerkship in the banking department. Later he became a partner with Messrs. Charles E. Anthony, Henry Denhart, Dr. R. B. M. Wilson and Charles A. Wilson in the founding of the bank of Chatsworth, at Chatsworth, Illinois, of which he was made the general manager. While occupying that position he gave special attention to the loaning of money on farm mortgages, which soon became an important feature in the business of the firm and was attended with a remarkable degree of success. Three years later the firm sold out the bank at Chatsworth, but transferred the mortgage loan department to Washington, where Mr. Anthony became partner and cashier in the bank of Anthony & Denhart and manager of the loan department. In 1885, Mr. Anthony disposed of his interest in the bank of Anthony & Denhart, retaining to himself the farm loan branch of the business, which, under his personal supervision, had grown largely and had become one of its most profitable features. He then removed to Peoria, where, a few months later, being joined by his brother Charles, the firm of C. E. & C. M. Anthony, Investment Bankers, was established at 424 Main Street, where the business is still carried on. In 1889, they opened a branch office at Omaha, Nebraska. In 1891 the firm was incorporated under the name of the "Anthony Loan and Trust Company," with Clifford M. Anthony as Vice-President and General Manager, and in 1898, Mr. Anthony became President, a position which he still occupies. In 1885, as a branch of the business, "The Peoria Safe Deposit Company" was organized, with C. M. Anthony as President. The safety deposit vaults are of the most approved style and the company is doing a prosperous business.

In all these various enterprises Mr. C. M. Anthony has been a prime mover, and it is to his business enterprise, energy and skill their great success is largely due. As the outgrowth of a business founded thirty-six years ago, the Anthony Loan & Trust Company has become one of the largest and most prosperous financial institutions of its kind in the United States. Through it millions of dollars have been loaned upon farm and city property, and its securities have been sold to all classes of investors, such as savings banks, bankers, trustees of estates, churches, schools, and charitable institutions, as well as to individuals. The high character of its loans as safe investments will be appreciated from the well authenticated fact that, in no instance has a client foreclosed a mortgage made by them, nor lost a dollar on any of their securities; no title approved by them has ever been successfully attacked, and no client has withdrawn his dealings through dissatisfaction. These results have been attained through strictly conservative management and careful personal attention to the nature and character of all securities and investments. Nearly all the stock of the company is owned by the men who founded the business, and through whose management it has been built up to its present proportions.

Through prudent and conservative business methods, strict attention to business and fair dealing in all his business transactions, Mr. Anthony has secured for himself a standing in public, social and private circles second to none in the city. In politics he is a Republican; in religious faith, as were his parents, he is a Presbyterian. He has attained unto the thirty-second degree in Masonry, is a member of the Creve Coeur Club, and other clubs of Peoria, and of the Union League Club of Chicago. His business has brought him into close relationship with leading business men and capitalists of the country, whose confidence he enjoys in a high degree. Possessed of a fine physique, a genial temperament and affability of address, Mr. Anthony makes his way easily and pleasantly with all classes of society. On November 14, 1895, he was united in marriage with Miss Flora Thomas, daughter of Dr. D. E. Thomas, of Lacon, Illinois, by whose companionship his life has been greatly blessed. They have one son, Emerson Thomas, born July 9, 1898, a promising lad, in whom they take great delight and in whom they entertain great hopes for the future.

GILMAN WILLARD AVERY.

Gilman Willard Avery was born in Greenville, New Hampshire, March 14, 1835, to Amos and Lydia (Evans) Avery. His father was engaged in the farming business in that country of rocks, where the most earnest effort and economy were necessary to secure a living. When the subject of this sketch was ten years of age his father removed to Jaffrey in the same State. Mr. Avery was educated in the common schools of his native State and at the Kimball Union Academy, located at Meridan. After leaving the Academy he taught for a time in Westmoreland, New Hampshire, but at nineteen years of age went to Missouri and taught school at Greenfield and in Greene County during the years 1857 and 1858, subsequently starting a high school at Ebenezer, Missouri, which he conducted successfully for a few years. Having left that employment, he started a general store at Lebanon, Missouri, which was continued successfully until compelled to leave the State on the breaking out of the Civil War, losing all he had. Mr. Avery then went to Brocton, New York, and taught school for a winter. In August of that year he located at Gridley, Illinois, and engaged in general merchandise, but the following fall came to Peoria, and has ever since remained here.

In 1864 he engaged in business under the firm name of Comstock & Avery, dealing in furniture and house supplies. The business was carried on by the firm until about ten years ago, when it was incorporated under the style of the Comstock-Avery Furniture Company. Mr. Avery has been in the management of the Peoria store from its inception and has conducted the business with marked success, enlarging it to meet the growing demands of a growing city. He has always had the reputation of being thoroughly honest and reliable. This fact has done as much to increase his trade and intrench him in business as all others combined. He still enjoys the confidence of his fellow citizens and his trade, at the present time, is by no means confined to the limits of the city of Peoria. He has always been public spirited and interested in whatever pertains to the welfare of the city. He was at one time a member of the City Council. He has been for many years an influential member of the Baptist Church, and had much to do with erecting the fine stone edifice now occupied by that denomination.

He was married to Ellen Haywood, of East Jaffrey, New Hampshire, January 18, 1859. She died, April 19, 1890. She was a well educated, domestic woman, devoting herself exclusively to the care of her household and the comfort and happiness of her family—a woman of a gentle, happy, sunny disposition.

Mr. Avery married, for his second wife, Alice J. Sawyer, at Peterboro, New Hampshire. Three children were born of the first marriage, namely: Frank E. Avery, Preston A. Avery and Fred H. Avery. The oldest and youngest still survive. The second son died in 1864. Mr. Avery, while an active church member and strictly temperate in all his habits, has never been narrow or bigoted. He is, and always has been, willing to concede to every other man or woman the rights and privileges he claims for himself. His word has always been regarded as good as his bond. His reputation for integrity and uprightness has never been questioned, and his business career furnishes a good example to young men about to enter into the active business of life.

ROBERT H. AVERY.

Probably no city in the United States owes more of its development in wealth and population to the manufacturing enterprises with which its history has been identified, than does the city of Peoria. This is especially true of its manufactures of agricultural implements which, in extent and variety, equal, if they do not surpass, those of any other city of its size in the country. For a generation Peoria has been recognized as the center of this great industry so intimately connected with the growth and development of one of the richest and most prosperous agricultural regions of the American continent; and the demand and source of supply have kept pace with each other, until now the products of Peoria manufacturing establishments are found in almost all the markets of the world. This has been due not alone to the advance made in the methods of cultivation and harvesting the products of the soil within the last two or three generations, but to the skill and enterprise of individual inventors and manufacturers in meeting the wants of the agriculturist and in pointing the way to new and profitable lines of production.

To the above Robert H. Avery contributed his full portion. He was the founder of what is now known as the Avery Manufacturing Company. Born in Galesburg, Knox County, Illinois, January 21, 1840, he grew up as a farmer's boy, receiving a common school and academic education in his home town. Like thousands of the patriotic young men of his time he had barely reached his majority, when the war for the preservation of the Union having come on, he entered the army as a volunteer, serving for three years, about eight months of this time being spent in rebel prison-pens. It was while confined as a prisoner at Andersonville awaiting the time of release, that he devised his first farm-tool—a cultivator—and, while he was deprived of the means of perfecting his invention there, at least in the construction of a practical machine, he did afterwards complete it from the plans which he had there designed, and thus began an industry which has grown to such large proportions in connection with the Manufacturing Company of which he afterwards became the head.

The Civil War over, the youthful soldier and inventor returned to the farm, but not to remain. In 1869, taking his brother, Cyrus M. Avery, as a partner, he built from the plans devised in the Andersonville prison, his first cultivator, known as the "Avery Cultivator." Then followed the Avery Stalk-Cutter and the Avery Planter, both of which have come into extensive use and received the approval of the most enterprising and progressive agriculturists, as shown by their wide sale at the present time. In 1882 the Avery brothers removed their establishment from Galesburg to Peoria, and during the following year the partnership of R. H. & C. M. Avery was organized into a stock company and chartered under the name of the Avery Planter Company, of which Robert H. Avery continued to be the President during the remainder of his life. Around this establishment in the next few years, grew up the flourishing village of Averyville, now a suburb of the city of Peoria near its northern border. The products of the concern embrace many devices required in the cultivation of the soil and the harvesting of its crops by machinery—including corn-planters, check-rows, stalk-cutters, cultivators, stackers, threshing machines, etc. Its output, amounting in 1883 to $200,000 and employing 150 men, has increased in less than twenty years to one and a quarter millions annually, furnishing employment to over 750 men, and finding a market in both hemispheres.

The first ten years after the removal of the Avery Manufacturing plant from Galesburg to Pe-

Peoria not only saw its success assured, but its business vastly increased. Unfortunately, however, Mr. Avery was not destined to witness the still greater development of an enterprise to which he had devoted so many years of persevering and assiduous labor, backed by the intelligence and mechanical genius of the inventor. His death occurred in the very zenith of his successful business career while on a trip to California, September 13, 1892, at the age of a little more than fifty-two years. Mr. Avery was a man of rare integrity, in his every act considerate of the interests of others—an inventor of absolute originality, he was never accused of appropriating the ideas or labors of others. His intimate friends were few but well-chosen, and those who knew him most intimately valued his friendship most highly. Surely, if "He is a public benefactor who makes two blades of grass grow where only one grew before," Robert H. Avery proved himself by the results of his life-work a benefactor of his race.

OLIVER JOSEPH BAILEY.

Oliver Joseph Bailey was born, September 6, 1846, in Arcadia, Wayne County, New York. He was a son of Morrison and Mary Bailey and the eldest of six children. When he was two years old his father removed to Illinois and located government land in Will County, about sixteen miles southwest of Joliet. In 1852, selling to good advantage the farm he had improved in that county, he removed with his family to Blackhawk County, Iowa, on the frontier, locating at Waterloo, a town then existing only in name. He was a man of high character. He served a term in the Legislature of that State, and, in 1862, having enlisted in the Thirty-second Iowa Volunteers, was made Quartermaster of his regiment, serving throughout the war. At the age of thirteen years Oliver left the farm to enter the store of Nathan S. Hungerford, where he remained for five years, ever enjoying the full trust and confidence of his employer, in whose family he is yet thought of and cherished as a son and brother. After the close of the war and his father's return, so that the mother and children were no longer his special care, Oliver, following a strong inclination for the study of law, returned to Illinois, securing the position of Deputy Circuit Clerk and Recorder of DeKalb County at Sycamore, and at once entered upon his studies with General F. P. Partridge, an able lawyer. The hard life of a farmer's son on the prairies of Iowa, in those early days, had limited his educational advantages to the common schools, but Mr. Bailey is only one of many of our prominent men who have made up for the lack of early schooling by a study of Blackstone and the English Common Law. Given a sturdy ancestry, a farmer boy's good health, a resolute will, high moral purpose and a diligent study of the great underlying principles of law, as explained in the lucid English of Blackstone, a young man, although conscious of deficiencies in his school training, will, nevertheless, have acquired a habit of exact thinking, a discipline of mind and a preparation for future success that will always stand him in good stead in the business affairs of life. The successful business career of Mr. Bailey in our city affords a striking illustration of this fact. Mr. Bailey was admitted to the bar in 1868, and at once, and with good success, entered upon the practice of his chosen profession. In 1872 he entered into partnership with James H. Sedgwick, an able lawyer practicing at Sandwich, and the firm removed to Chicago, where they built up a successful law practice, but later came to Peoria. In 1875 the Aetna Life Insurance Company consolidated at Peoria its Springfield and Peoria investment agencies. The Peoria agency had been under the able management of Mr. B. L. T. Bourland and the business had grown to large proportions. Mr. Bailey was at this time given the position of General Attorney for the company in association with Mr. Bourland as Financial Agent. This was the origin of the firm of Bourland & Bailey, one of the most widely known, successful and honored firms in Central Illinois. The legal interests of the company in charge of Mr. Bailey have carried with them large responsibilities in municipal bond litigation, regularity of titles and proceedings in the issuing of securities and many other intricate points of law, demanding the utmost care and vigilance, combined with legal acumen and good judgment. Outside of his law business, which has been mostly in the Federal Courts—having been admitted to the United States Supreme Court in 1878—Mr. Bailey has been a successful business man. He has faith in Peoria, and his investments here, made with far-sighted shrewdness, have resulted in placing him among the wealthy men of the city, one of its leading and most highly respected financiers. He is President of the Central National Bank, of the Title & Trust Company, of the Board of Trustees of Bradley Polytechnic Institute, of the Peoria Young Men's Christian Association, the Cottage Hospital Association and the Training School, and is Vice-President of the Dime Saving Bank.

During the past sixteen years Mr. Bailey has been a member of the Peoria School Board, and, to his prudent financial management as Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Board, the city owes a greater debt of gratitude than any but a few are aware of, in gradually paving off a heavy indebtedness and in keeping the Board out of debt. It hardly need be said that, in all that concerns the welfare and prosperity of the city, materially, morally or educationally, he is a sympathetic, broad-minded, public-spirited citizen, generous with his time and with his means in the support of every good cause. In politics, Mr. Bailey is a Republican; in church relations, a Congregationalist. He was married in 1865 to Miss Mary E. Needham, of Geneva, Illinois. Their children are Ralph Needham and Edna Lilian.

EUGENE F. BALDWIN.

Peoria has no more widely known member of the editorial profession than he whose name heads this article. Mr. Baldwin is a native of the staid old "Nutmeg State," which will account for his strong Puritan proclivities. His birthplace was Watertown, Connecticut, where he entered upon his mundane career on December 1, 1840—the son of Stephen and Julia (Pardee) Baldwin, who were natives of the same State. Stephen Baldwin came West in 1818, stopping for a time at Shawneetown, Illinois, and going as far South as New Orleans, whence, a year or so later, he returned to his home in Connecticut. The elder Baldwin, we are informed, "was a Deacon in the Congregational Church," as was his father before him. Hence we have the testimony of the son that he was himself "brought up on a strict diet of Calvinism. He read the Bible through twice before he was seven years old, and this mental diet," as we are assured, "powerfully contributed to give his mind that religious cast that is, perhaps, his strongest characteristic. His father was a builder by profession, and he conceived the idea that he was designed by an overruling Providence to devote his life to the construction of churches. He removed to the western part of New York, and instructed his son, at an early age, in all the mysteries of the carpenter's trade. One of the earliest recollections of the latter is that of being propped up, while an infant, and holding a candle at night while his father carved some enormous capitals that were to adorn a Presbyterian Church in one of the small towns in the Genesee Valley. When not engaged at the labors of the bench, it was the delight of the elder Baldwin to teach his children the 'Shorter Catechism,' the Gospels and Psalms, 'Watts' Hymns,' 'Baxter's Saints' Rest,' and Jonathan Edwards' 'Call to the Unconverted.'" None will be prepared to estimate more accurately the depth of the impression made upon the infantile mind of the younger Baldwin by this early training, than those most intimately acquainted with its subject.

Again, in 1855 or '56, the elder Baldwin came West bringing his family with him, and finally settled in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where Eugene attended the Milwaukee High School, intending to fit himself for the vocation of a teacher. In 1860, young Baldwin went to Clinton County, Illinois, where he engaged in teaching; in the fall of the same year, entered the State Normal School at Bloomington, but in the following spring, rejoined his father's family, then living at Fort Wayne, Indiana, and there resumed work at the carpenter's bench. The War of the Rebellion having commenced about this time, he enlisted in the Twelfth Indiana Volunteers, but was captured by the Confederates at Richmond, Kv., bringing his military career to a close, in the fall of 1863. The hardships of the campaign broke him down physically, and he was discharged from the army as an invalid, when he returned to Normal to resume his studies; was soon after engaged as a teacher and Principal of the schools at Chillicothe, Peoria County, which he successfully conducted until he was employed as Principal of the First Ward School in Peoria. A year later he accepted the position of local editor of the Peoria Transcript, remaining three years, when he became political editor of that paper, occupying this position one year. He then resigned his place on the Transcript, and bought the El Paso Journal, but the next year returned to Peoria and, in company with A. R. Sheldon, afterwards of the United States Court for Arizona, established the Peoria Review, which they conducted for three years. His next experience was upon the Rock Island Union, which he edited for a few months, when he purchased his old paper, the El Paso Journal, with which J. B. Barnes was soon after associated as partner. In the fall of 1877, they removed their plant to Peoria and established the Peoria Journal, which they conducted until 1891, when Mr. Baldwin withdrew, and, in company with Charles H. Powell, started the Sylvan Remedy Company, for the purpose of dealing in patent medicines. This they operated for several years, but financially it proved a failure, according to Mr. Baldwin's frank statement, leaving "the two partners without a dollar in the world." Having determined to start anew in the newspaper line, they began the publication of the Peoria Star, the first number being issued, September 27, 1897. Quoting again from Mr. Baldwin—"Neither partner had any money. They bought a press on credit, and so poor were they that, when it was shipped down to them, they did not have the $21.00 necessary to pay the freight." They fought an up-hill fight but, in the last four years, the paper has grown steadily in circulation and influence, until it now has confessedly the largest circulation of any paper in the State outside of the city of Chicago.

As every successful newspaper man must be, Mr. Baldwin is a hard worker, putting in, when occasion requires, sixteen hours of labor per day, and, with his partner, Mr. Powell, as business manager, they have carried forward their great enterprise without a break. One secret of their success is the fact that they do not allow one day's work to interfere with another. Everything is taken up and finished at the time appointed. Mr. Baldwin has done considerable other literary work, being the author of several pamphlets, a novel, and a work on hypnotism, although his work in this line, of late years, has been confined to lectures and speeches. He was also one of the projectors and builders of the Grand Opera House, erected some twenty years ago, which still continues to be Peoria's most popular place for high class entertainments.

On April 23, 1866, Mr. Baldwin was married to Miss Sarah J. Gove, a lady of New England birth, whose intelligence and refinement have won for her, in a high degree, the respect of the community in which she resides. Mr. and Mrs.

W. A. Rugg

Baldwin have had three children: Ethel (deceased), Frank Eugene, and Mildred. As for Mr. Baldwin himself, we have his own modest assurance, that "he is now spending a serene old age, happy in the feeling that, in the language of the English prize-fighter, he has 'bested as many fellows as ever bested him.'" Gifted with a remarkable fluency both as to tongue and pen, he takes as keen delight in "scoring" an enemy as in lauding a friend. Probably his greatest passion is a fondness for satire, which a long journalistic experience has developed in a marked degree, while an original acumen, combined with a retentive memory, has placed him in possession of a rare fund of fact, fancy and anecdote, which he does not fail to draw upon for the confusion of his opponents when circumstances may seem to require.

GARDNER THURSTON BARKER.

Gardner T. Barker was born in Moriah, Essex County, New York, January 10, 1814, the son of Gardner T. and Harriet (Lyon) Barker. He received a public school education, came west in 1838, and associated himself with the then but dimly outlined fortunes of Peoria. His almost immediate success presaged, in no measured terms, a future in which he should be regarded as one of the strongest, most substantial, wisely conservative and reliable members of the community. He engaged in the general mercantile business with Almiran S. Cole, under the name of Cole & Barker, the business afterwards being carried on under the firm name of Barker & Stearns, and ultimately by Mr. Barker alone. He advanced rapidly to the front in the affairs of the city, and in 1867 engaged in the distilling business and various public enterprises, which netted him large returns for capital and labor invested. His devotion to business, evinced in his constant personal attention to the same, won for him conspicuous success. He continued in active business until 1887, when he retired, devoting his attention to the care of his property and to his duties as President of the Commercial National Bank. He was also President of the Allaire-Woodward Chemical Company. With innate discernment and wise business sagacity, he mastered the surrounding opportunities and directed his efforts into channels of permanent and logical results. As one of the wealthy men of Peoria, he took up the bonds when the city borrowed large sums of money, and negotiated them in New York.

Mr. Barker was, for many years, prominent not only in business, and in business circles in the city of Peoria, but also in politics. He was always an active, stanch Democrat. In 1852 he was a member of the City Council, was Mayor of the city in 1862, and elected a second time, serving in 1870 and '71. His management of city affairs, and particularly the finances of the city, was attended with the same success that had marked his personal business career. He always prided himself upon his strict business habits, upon his integrity and his honor as a man. His word, when given, could always be relied upon, whether in business or politics. August 20, 1840, Mr. Barker was married to Helen White, of Champlain, New York, daughter of Elial and Mary B. (Lewis) White, natives of Massachusetts, the former born at Medway, December 21, 1794, and the latter at Amherst February 9, 1799. Of interest is the fact that Mr. and Mrs. White, the grandparents, were married by the Rev. Daniel Morton, father of Vice-President Levi P. Morton.

Mr. Barker left his fortune to his son, Walter, who succeeded to the business formerly conducted by him, and also succeeded him as President of the Commercial National Bank; to his daughter, Ellen B. McRoberts, and her two sons, Walter and W. G. McRoberts, and to his grand-son, Jesse, who was the son of the youngest daughter, who had died while Jesse was an infant. The latter was adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Barker. Mr. Barker died October 26, 1894, leaving the record of a busy, honorable upright life as an inheritance to his descendants. Mrs. Barker's death preceded that of her husband by about three years.

AMOS P. BARTLETT.

Amos P. Bartlett was born in Salisbury, New Hampshire, May 14, 1812. He was the son of Samuel C. and Eleanor (Pettengill) Bartlett, and the brother of Reverend Joseph Bartlett, a prominent Congregational minister in the East; Dr. Samuel C. Bartlett, late President of Dartmouth College, and William H. Bartlett (deceased), a member of the Supreme Bench of New Hampshire.

Mr. Bartlett received an academic education at Salisbury and Derry, fitting for Dartmouth College, but declined to enter College, choosing to follow a business life. He commenced the dry-goods business for himself in Brockport, New York, in 1832, remaining in that place until 1836, when he came to Peoria and formed a partnership with the late Moses Pettengill in the stove and hardware business. Prior to coming to Peoria, on October 4, 1836, he married Sarah M. Rogers, of Dansville, New York, who still survives him. He continued in partnership with Mr. Pettengill for five years. In 1843 he entered into partnership with Leonard Holland and continued with him for a period of five years, afterwards conducting the business on his own account until 1861, when his cousin, P. C. Bartlett, became a member of the firm. Mr. Bartlett continued in the business until 1877, when he retired from the dry-goods trade and became interested in the business of his sons, Samuel C. and William H. Bartlett, doing a grain and commission business in the city of Peoria, under the name of S. C. Bartlett & Co. He continued with his sons until about eighteen months prior to his death, which occurred at Peoria on April 11, 1895. His two sons subsequently removed to Chicago, where they established the firm of Bartlett, Frazier & Company, an extensive grain and commission firm, of which Mr. William H. Bartlett is the senior member. The business is still continued in Peoria, under the old firm name. Samuel C. Bartlett, the senior member, died in Winnetka, Illinois, in March, 1893.

Mr. Bartlett, early identified himself with the cause of education in the city of Peoria, bringing with him the New England ideas upon that subject. He came of an educated ancestry, prominent in politics, in law, in medicine and in business, and, although declining a college education, he believed in it to the fullest extent, and actively interested himself in establishing a school system in Peoria, which resulted in the organization of the "Peoria Academy" for girls, and the "Peoria Academy Association" for boys. These were stock or subscription schools, and were practically the beginning of public education of the boys and girls of Peoria. They continued for four or five years, until about February 15, 1855, when the Board of Education of Peoria was organized by act of the Legislature. Mr. Bartlett was a member of that Board and, for five years, its President, actively interesting himself in the establishment of the free-school system in this city. He was instrumental in bringing educated young men and women from the East as teachers in the public schools. When these schools became firmly established he declined longer to serve upon the Board, but continued his interest in the public school system to the day of his death.

His sons were both graduates of Dartmouth College; his daughters were graduates of the Peoria High School, and his youngest daughter was a graduate of Abbott Female Seminary, Andover, Massachusetts, and of Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania. She took a post-graduate course at the latter institution, and received her Doctor's degree. She also studied abroad three years, and was connected, for a time, with Newnham College, Cambridge. She is now Dean of the Women's Department of the Bradley Polytechnic Institute. Mr. Bartlett thus exemplified, in his treatment of his own children, his belief in the value of a thorough education. During his life in Peoria he was identified with all that pertained to the growth and the best interests of the city.

Mr. Bartlett had no ambition to be an office holder, but was always active in local politics in the interest of honesty, morality and good government. He believed in and advocated a high standard of civic and social life. He was the active foe of all that was low, unclean, immoral and dishonest. He lived to see the small country village become a commercial and manufacturing center—a city of cultivated homes, churches and schools, second to none in the country, largely through the active efforts of himself and his associates.

PETER COLCORD BARTLETT.

It has been said that a man is not to be blamed for his ancestry, nor is he entitled to any particular credit for their characters or careers; but that man is fortunate who can point to a long line of ancestry with pride and satisfaction.

The subject of this sketch, Peter Colcord Bartlett, can go back over his ancestry, step by step, and find nothing of which any descendant should be ashamed. He was born, February 13, 1826, in Salisbury, N. H., to Peter Bartlett and Anna (Pettengill) Bartlett. His father was an educated, prominent physician and removed to Peoria, Illinois, from Salisbury, New Hampshire, in 1836. He died, after residing here for a short time, of over-fatigue and exposure in the discharge of the duties of his profession. Dr. Bartlett belonged to the Bartlett family of New England, prominent in the legal and medical profession. The names of the family are found prominently identified with the educational institutions of New England, and have an honored place in the records of the bar and medicine.

Mr. Bartlett was employed as a clerk for a time in a general store in Peoria, and then entered the employment of Pettengill & Bartlett, who were also engaged in the selling of general merchandise—the last named member of the firm being a cousin of the subject of this sketch. P. C. Bartlett established himself in Peoria in the retail grocery business, which he conducted with fair success for a period of twelve years, and then engaged in the dry-goods business with A. P. Bartlett, formerly connected with Mr. Pettengill. This firm was dissolved in 1877. A. P. Bartlett retired from business, and P. C. Bartlett entered the revenue service in 1878, in which he continued for seven years. He then engaged in the retail grocery business, which he is still conducting with success. November 12, 1851, he married Abigail Thompson by whom he had four sons. She died September 2, 1861. One son only, Henry T. Bartlett, survives, and is now cashier of the Peoria National Bank. He married for his second wife Margaretta Culbertson. Five children have been born during this second marriage, namely: Sue Herron, Nancy Culbertson, Edward Peter, Lucy Ellen and William Culbertson Bartlett—all of whom survive and are an honor, comfort and credit to their father and mother. Edward P. is in business with his father; Sue H. is a prominent teacher in the Peoria High School; William C. has an important and responsible position with the Acme Harvester Works; Nancy C. and Lucy E. are at home.

Mr. Bartlett is peculiarly happy in his domestic relations, and no man has a pleasanter home, or a wife and children of whom he can be prouder, or in whom one can find more satisfaction. Mr. Bartlett has always maintained a reputation for the strictest integrity and uprightness, and bears an honored name in the city of Peoria, where he has resided and been in active business for so many years. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, but broad, charitable and catholic in his views, always ready and willing to concede all rights to another which he claims for himself.

MARK MITCHELL BASSETT.

Mark Mitchell Bassett was born in Schuyler County, Illinois, March 27, 1837, a period of stress and hardship for early settlers in Illinois. For years prior to that date there was a dearth in his family of everything but labor for the necessities of life. Beyond the fact that his father's people were Kentuckians, but little is known of his paternal ancestry. His earliest remembrance is of a widowed mother, who, with "little Mark," shared the home and meager fare afforded by some relative for such return as could be rendered by a delicate woman crippled by rheumatism—chiefly knitting. Thus his childhood was spent, at times a nearby school-house affording a few weeks "schooling," where lessons were learned from Webster's Spelling book. An only sister, ten years his senior, having married when Mark was about seven years old, shared her home in Fulton County with her mother and brother almost continuously so long as the mother lived. Under the direction of a thrifty farmer, he assisted in reclaiming many acres from the hand of Nature, and thus acquired habits of industry, energy and perseverance which—based upon an inheritance of strict honesty and integrity, the ruling characteristics of the Carlocks of Virginia, from whom the maternal side of his house was descended—made strong the foundations on which his after-life was reared. In such hard but wholesome experience as clearing and tilling the soil, and rafting logs to the St. Louis market, were gained that tenacity of purpose and those powers of endurance which served him so well in after years.

In August, 1857, Mr. Bassett was induced to leave the plough, and, with a partner—but with no other capital than an intent to be honest—to engage in the management of a store, which was operated successfully until he bought his partner's interest. Later he conducted the concern alone and profitably, doing a considerable business in grain and stock, besides managing the farm, until December, 1861, when he enlisted in the war for the preservation of the Union, and was assigned to Company E, Fifty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry. The story of heroic endeavor and endurance which followed is gathered, not alone from Captain Bassett's memory, but from the diaries of comrades-in-battle, comrades-in-prison and comrades-in-escape, and from the most tragic pages in our national history, as also from the letters of Union men in North Carolina and East Tennessee who afforded them shelter, a hiding-place, food, clothing and a guide to the next point of safety nearer the Union lines. The record of the Fifty-third is only partly told in the battles of Shiloh and Corinth, and Hatchie (where Lieutenant Bassett was ordered to take the insignia of rank from the lifeless body of his superior officer, First Lieut. Armand Pollisard, of Kankakee); in the siege of Vicksburg and the battle of Jackson, Mississippi, of July 12, 1863, in which last engagement, in a charge by his brigade upon the rebel breastworks, orders ignorantly given but faithfully obeyed, sent many a gallant soldier needlessly to his death, and hundreds of others into the hands of the enemy as prisoners—among the last being Lieutenant Bassett who was leading his company in the fearful onslaught, thus winning the commission as Captain which was issued while he was a prisoner. Capt. John D. Hatfield, of Company H, now living at Neligh, Nebraska, was Captain Bassett's close companion in the long months of imprisonment in Libby Prison which followed, and his fellow-toiler in digging the famous tunnel by which, with 107 other prisoners, they succeeded in escaping on the night of February 9, 1864. Having been recaptured on the fourth night out when near the Union lines on the Pamunkey River, Captain Bassett was thrust into an underground dungeon and kept on bread and water—if a composition of corn, cobs and husks ground together could be called "bread." After the battle of the Wilderness, through fear of the capture of Richmond by Grant's army, came the removal of the prisoners from Libby; first to Danville, Virginia; next to Macon, Georgia—where another unsuccessful attempt was made to escape; then to Charleston, and and finally to Columbia, South Carolina. Here they were held in an open camp called "Camp Sorghum"—but no sweeter as a home on account of its name. On the night of November 10, 1864, just before the completion of a stockade around the camp, a squad of nine made a third attempt at escape by running the guard. After being out thirteen nights, the blood-hounds with which the Confederates were pursuing them got on their track, when the fugitives separated into groups of four, three and two. The four having soon been overtaken, were shot where they surrendered; the two were recaptured and taken back to their prison-pen, while the three—consisting of Capt. A. S. Stuart, now of Osceola, Missouri; Lieutenant Tom Payne Young, since deceased, and Capt. Mark Bassett—set their faces towards the west and north and, after wandering fifty-two days and nights among the mountains of the Blue Ridge, reached the Union lines at Sweet Water, Tennessee, and Knoxville on January 1, 1865. They were not alone, having been joined in the mountains by other escaping prisoners, Union men who had deserted the rebel ranks and others who had become separated from their commands. The picture of that ragged group of twelve, taken at Knoxville on that Happy New Year's Day, is one of the cherished relics of a historic past, which the Captain could not be induced to part with. The appearance of the same picture on page 130 of Vol. III, of "Lossing's History of The Civil War," as a group of "Union Refugees," illustrates the errors which sometimes creep into "history." Another relic highly prized by the Captain is a lithograph of a highly embellished chart containing the names and rank of all the prisoners in Libby at the time, the origi-inal having been prepared with pen and ink by Capt. B. F. Fischer, of Cincinnati. It would be difficult to conceive anything more thrilling than the reminiscences related by these heroic comrades of their experiences of prison-life, and their terrible suffering in mind and body while attempting to make their escape. These eighteen months of hardship and peril left Captain Bassett physically unfitted for a return to duty; so, at the expiration of his leave of absence, on the order of the Secretary of War he repaired to Camp Blair, at Jackson, Michigan, where he received his discharge, April 12, 1865, three days after the surrender of Lee at Appomattox. Having spent a year and a half on his farm and in buying and selling grain, he engaged in the study of law with Capt. A. W. Bull, at Pekin, Illinois, (under whom he enlisted), later with Hon. B. S. Prettyman, and, within the next two years, in the face of many difficulties and meager educational advantages, he was admitted to the bar, thus realizing his early ambition to become a lawyer. In 1872 Captain Bassett moved to Peoria and has at different times been associated with some of the leading lawyers of this city. As a Republican he was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly in 1884; four years afterwards was advanced to the State Senate, and, in 1898, was elected Probate Judge of Peoria County, which office he still holds discharging its duties honestly, faithfully and acceptably. Judge Bassett's family—though there are now none left to bear his name—includes all deserving young people of his acquaintance in whom he takes a practical interest, which is shared by his wife. Although not identified with any church organization, his "religion is of the life, and the life of his religion is to do good."

WILLIAM HENRY BINNIAN.

William Henry Binnian was born, January 29, 1857, at Peoria, Illinois. His grandparents were William and Ann (Jasper) Binnian, and Charles and Ann (Allbut) Walford, born in England. His parents, Henry and Elizabeth (Walford) Binnian, were born in Kidderminster, England, where they married and came to Peoria in 1852. They were of sterling English stock and of high character. They were upon the right side of every question involving public and private morals.

W. H. Binnian was educated in the public schools of Peoria and graduated from the High School. His public career and that of many others in recent years, testify to the high character and efficiency of the public schools of Peoria. After graduating from the High School he was employed in the wholesale leather and shoe-finding business conducted under the name of Burnham, Binnian & Company, his father being a member of the firm. Later he entered the employment of James T. Rogers & Company, lumber merchants, as bookkeeper. In 1880 he became a member of the firm and so continued until 1889, the firm doing business as Rogers &

Binnian. They did a very large and prosperous business, extending over a large portion of the country. In 1889 Mr. Binnian sold his interest in the business to his partner, James T. Rogers, and entered largely into real-estate, buying land in the vicinity of Peoria, laying it out into lots and selling it to settlers. In this business, which was carried on with his usual spirit and energy, he was very successful.

In 1890, in connection with the late William E. Stone and E. C. Foster, he built and equipped the Peoria Strawboard Mill, the second largest in the world, and was elected President of the company. The successful operation of the mill was very largely due to the energy, foresight and business skill of Mr. Binnian, who had become one of the best business men in the City of Peoria; always enjoying perfect health he was full of energy and untiring in his devotion to business.

In the fall of 1890 he joined with William E. Stone in the purchase of what was known as the Acme Harvester Works, operated in Pekin, Illinois, by A. J. Hodges & Company. They organized a company known as the Acme Harvester Company, and Mr. Binnian became its Vice-President and general business manager. In 1894, upon the death of Mr. Stone, he became President of the company. Mr. Binnian's peculiar business traits, his energy, industry, courage and foresight have borne marvelous fruit in the development of the business of the Harvester Company, which has grown from small dimensions into a world-wide reputation and has required a very large increase of capacity. To meet the growing demands of the trade the company purchased sixty-one acres of land for its plant at Bartonville, with a capacity four times as great as the old works at Pekin. The company purchased forty-seven acres of land for its factory site, and has already erected buildings covering a floor-space of over fifteen acres. The sale of harvesters made by the Acme Harvester Company was originally confined to a small portion of the Northwest and California, but now extends over the entire range of wheat-growing countries. Its export business to South America and elsewhere is very large. Mr. Binnian keeps well in hand all of these different branches of business in which he is engaged. He is fortunately situated in never allowing anything to discourage him or undermine his courage. He is cool, calculating and carefully plans all his business enterprises, and then deliberately and persistently goes about their execution.

Although still a young man, Mr. Binnian is regarded as one of the strongest and safest business men in Peoria. He has not interested himself in office holding, but has taken an active interest in all that pertains to the good of the city. In politics, he is a Republican. He is a regular and generous contributor to the various charitable and benevolent institutions of the city, and stands deservedly high in the estimation of his fellow-citizens.

He has always enjoyed the companionship of good books, and, from the time he was a boy, has regularly added to his library, until he now has one of the choicest and best selected private libraries in Peoria.

A recent Trade Journal, in reviewing his success in the manufacture of agricultural implements, says tersely: "He had the will power to grasp opportunities, and the ambition to make the most of them. He was not afraid; he did not hesitate; he did not put off his decision from day to day until some other man stepped in and seized the opportunity. He acted quickly and with unconquerable determination. No one could stop him." This quotation very fitly characterizes Mr. Binnian and his business career in this city and vicinity.

He was married, November 27, 1883, to Elizabeth Ann Babcock, daughter of Colonel William Babcock, of Canton, Illinois. Two sons were born to them; Walter Babcock Binnian, born November 27, 1884, now a student in Phillips Academy at Andover, Massachusetts, and Robert Binnian, born July 29, 1886, died January 10, 1887.

ROBERT BOAL.

Robert Boal, M. D., veteran physician and surgeon of Illinois, now of Lacon, Marshall County, was born near Harrisburg, in Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, November 15, 1806, the oldest of a family of four children, his parents being Thomas and Elizabeth (Crain) Boal. Both of his parents were natives of Dauphin County, but of Scotch descent, their ancestors having come to America at an early period. The father was a merchant who, having removed to Cincinnati with his family in 1811, conducted his business there until his death, which occurred in 1816. The son then became a member of the family of an uncle, also a resident of Cincinnati, for whom he was named, and, after receiving a rudimentary education in the public schools, took a partial course in the Cincinnati College. Having determined to enter the medical profession, he spent a year and a half reading medicine with Dr. Wright, of Reading, Ohio, which he afterward continued with Drs. Whitman and Cobb, who were professors in the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, which he finally entered as a student, graduating therefrom in 1828. He then began practice at Reading, but four years later returned to Cincinnati, where he continued in practice for three or four years, a part of the time holding the position of Demonstrator of Anatomy in his Alma Mater. Meanwhile, in 1834, he made a tour through Central Illinois with a view to settling in the State, which he carried into effect two years later by his removal with his family to Lacon (then Columbia), Illinois, which continued to be his home until 1862, when, having been appointed Surgeon on the Board of Enrollment for the Fifth Congressional District, he removed to Peoria. His service in this capacity continued until the close of the Civil War in 1865, and, during that period he examined some 5,000 volunteers and drafted men, a large majority of whom were mustered into the service and fought for the preservation of the Union. While discharging the duties of this office and some twenty-five years afterward Dr. Boal continued in the practice of his profession at Peoria, being a prominent member of the Peoria Medical Society, and, for a part of the time, its President, as well as a member of the American and State Medical Associations, of the last of these being elected President in 1882. He was one of the organizers of the Edward Dickinson Medical Club (of Peoria), of whom only three of the nine original members now survive—Drs. Boal, Steele and Murphy. He was also one of the founders and original incorporators of the Cottage Hospital of Peoria, of which he served for a time as director.

Dr. Boal, while not neglecting his profession, was an earnest opponent of the extension of slavery during the period following the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and one of the potent factors, in this section of the State, in the organization of the Republican party—being a delegate from his county to the historical convention at Bloomington, in May, 1856, which nominated the first Republican State ticket in the history of the party in Illinois. In 1860 he was an alternate delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for the Presidency for the first time.

The civil positions held by Dr. Boal included those of State Senator from 1844 to 1848, and Representative in the General Assembly for two terms (1854-58)—during the first of these two terms (1855) being one of the most earnest supporters of Abraham Lincoln for United States Senator, at whose personal request he finally cast his vote for Lyman Trumbull, thereby defeating the hopes of the opposition for the success of their candidate, and contributing to the beginning of the career of one of the most conspicuous members of the United States Senate during the war period, and which was continued for eighteen years. During the session of 1855 he was appointed upon a joint Legislative Committee to investigate the affairs of the State Institutions at Jacksonville, serving as Chairman of the committee, and, on the accession of Governor Bissell in 1857, was appointed one of the Trustees of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb—a position which he occupied continuously by successive re-appointments for seventeen years, under the administrations of Governors Yates, Oglesby, Palmer and Beveridge—for the last five years of the time being President of the Board.

On May 12, 1831, Dr. Boal was married, at Reading, Ohio, to Christiana Walker Sinclair, their wedded life extending over a period of more than fifty years. Mrs. Boal was of Scotch descent, and a lady of intelligence and refinement. She died in June, 1883, leaving, besides her venerable husband, a family of three children—two sons and one daughter. Charles T., the older son, is now a business man of Chicago, while the younger son, James Sinclair, studied law, and was for some ten years Assistant United States District Attorney, under various administrations, but died in 1888. The daughter, Clara B., became the wife of Col. Greenbury L. Fort, who was a soldier of the War of the Rebellion, and afterward served for four terms as a member of Congress from the Lacon District.

About 1893 Dr. Boal removed from Peoria to his former home at Lacon, where, in the ninety-sixth year of his age, with unimpaired faculties and remarkable vitality, he is spending the evening of a busy and earnest life with his daughter, Mrs. Greenbury L. Fort. His career has been as conspicuous for its usefulness to the State and the community in which he resides, as it has been for its long continuance and the results which have been achieved within the period which it has covered. Dr. Boal is at the present time (1902) the oldest living alumnus of the Medical College of Ohio—now the Cincinnati University—at which he graduated nearly three-quarters of a century ago.

FRANK CARL BOURSCHIEDT.

The reputation of Dr. Bourscheidt as a scholar, chemist, and medical exponent, is undoubtedly largely due to the depth of scientific research required of the German student who would enter the ranks of the professionally great, a consummation rendered practically certain of accomplishment, owing to the luminously profound and philosophical mind of the upper class scholar of Teutonic ancestry. In contrast therewith is the more or less superficial training received in the money-getting atmosphere of many American institutions, and where concentration and singleness of purpose are drowned in a multiplicity of distracting influences. The calm, trained and reflective intelligence of such men as Dr. Bourscheidt is, therefore, of incalculable benefit to any community, and sure of the recognition and appreciation of all thoughtful people.

A native of Cologne, on the Rhine, Germany, Dr. Bourscheidt was born, January 15, 1851, a son of Frank C. and Christina Bourscheidt, the former of whom was a furrier for many years, but has long since retired from business. The parents appreciated the benefits of a thorough education, and their son graduated from the scientific and classical courses at the Gymnasium in Cologne, in 1868. He then spent one year at Dolhain-Limbourg, France, and devoted himself to acquiring a knowledge of the French language. In 1869 he came to America, locating in Saint Louis, where he began the study of medicine at Pope's College, but in 1871 removed to Kansas to practice medicine, and, at the same time, conducted a drug store at Howard City, Elk County. Owing to the prevalence of malaria in the region in which he had located, he came to Peoria in 1874, and accepted a position as clerk in the drug store of W. H. Davis, where he remained for two years. A similar position was afterwards maintained for the same length of time with the late A. W. H. Reen. In January of 1879, Dr. Bourscheidt opened a drug store in the old library building, and conducted the same until he disposed of his interest in the drug business to W. M. Benton in 1885. Desiring then to return to the practice of medicine, he attended Rush Medical College in Chicago for two years, graduating therefrom in 1887. From that period until the present time, he has devoted himself to his chosen profession. While engaged in general practice he makes a specialty of gynecology, or the diseases of women.

In his younger days Dr. Bourscheidt devoted much thought and study to microscopical and analytical chemistry, and was ranked among those who are more than ordinarily proficient in these directions. The knowledge thus acquired has been particularly efficacious in many of his most important services to the State of Illinois, for the best interests of which he has labored long and faithfully. He was one of the founders in 1879 of the Illinois State Pharmaceutical Association, of which he served as President in 1881, and was one of the committee which drafted and helped to pass the State Pharmacy Law. From 1880 until 1890 he was a member of the committee on the revision of the United States Pharmacopœia—which revision takes place once in ten years, the treatise being issued by official authority, and everywhere accepted as an authoritative standard in reference to drugs and their preparations. From 1899 until 1901 the Doctor was the Health Commissioner of Peoria, and, during his administration, a high order of service was maintained, and more accomplished in the way of systematizing the work of the office and rendering it efficient, than by any other incumbent of the office in the history of the city. Dr. Bourscheidt is Gynecologist to Saint Francis Hospital; is a member of the Peoria Medical Society, of which he was President for one year, and Secretary for two years, and is also a member of the American Medical Association.

The marriage of Dr. Bourscheidt and Dora Stewart, of La Crosse, Wisconsin, occurred June 14, 1873, in Kansas, and of this union there are two children, Frank Carl, Jr., and Jennie M. Dr. Bourscheidt is a Republican in national politics, and has ever been an active participator in the undertakings of his party. Fraternally he is associated with the Masons, having joined that organization in 1872. He is affiliated with the Episcopal church. Like the majority of his countrymen, he has derived much consolation from music, which noble art has been a relaxation from the worry and struggle of an unusually active life. He was an active member of the Peoria Choral Union, which was disbanded in 1881, was also one of the organizers of the Peoria Chorus and has been one of its most ardent and staunch supporters. He is a believer in the beneficent and uplifting influence of music, and has earnestly labored to secure its dignified elevation among the residents of his home town. In all ways this disciple of medicine and all-around medical expert has contributed, to the extent of his ability, to the improvement of the conditions of the city, and his purse and counsel are at the disposal of all worthy appeals.

ABRAHAM BRAYSHAW.

The Mexican Amole Soap Company of Peoria, of which Abraham Brayshaw is President and General Manager, is entitled to more than passing consideration, for the manner of its conduct, and the excellence of its productions.

From a long line of ambitious ancestors devoted to the manufacture of cloth, Mr. Brayshaw inherits the requisite force of character, tact, and knowledge of human nature, for the management of a concern fast attaining a world-wide reputation. He was born in England, December 21, 1838, and is a son of Benjamin and Anna (Berry) Brayshaw, who were also born and reared in England. It was but natural that Abraham Brayshaw should emulate the example of his forefathers, and, for some time at least, engage in the manufacture of cloth. Of the twelve children in the family he was the one exception who found a larger field of enterprise in America, and he came hither when thirty years of age as superintendent of the woolen mill of James Stranding, in New York. At the expiration of two years he came to Illinois and located in Peoria, and until 1884 engaged with varying success in the carpet business. In the meantime, about nineteen years ago, he became interested in the prospects of a company organized for the manufacture of a high-grade soap, and which was incorporated under the firm name of Albaugh's Mexican Soap Company, the president being M. H. Haverhill. The realization of the original promoters falling far short of expectations, and more or less money being lost in a venture at bottom containing real merit, an emergency was created into which the shrewd business sagacity and common sense principles of Mr. Brayshaw came in recognition of an undeveloped opportunity. When the new order of things was brought about the name also was changed to that under which the firm now conducts its business.

The Mexican Amole Soap Company's products have long since passed the experimental stage, and have stood the test and approbation of several years. At the present time the company does a business amounting to $100,000 per annum, and, judging from the unprecedented increase within the last two or three years, much larger returns may be expected in the near future. Much of the soap manufactured is composed entirely of vegetable ingredients derived from the Mexican Amole Soap tree, the peculiar qualities of which are utilized by a patent process. Aside from bath and toilet soaps, the latter of which is best represented by the fragrant and refreshing Amole-ine, a shaving soap has been perfected by the company which not only gives a fine and lasting lather, but is as well a great skin tonic. The Amole Shampoo is most efficacious for all scalp disorders; the Amole Rose Cream is an excellent balm for the skin, and the Amole-ine Washing Powder is unexcelled for the laundry. As evidencing the more than local prominence of the articles manufactured by this enterprising firm, it is necessary only to state that the United States Army specifications for 1901, for supplies to be furnished to the post commissaries of our American and foreign possessions, call for an amount of Amole soap larger than all other kinds combined, the soap specified being the Amole Diamond King. The soaps turned out from this factory, which has the most modern equipments possible, are in demand in all parts of the world, large shipments being made daily to different parts of the United States, Canada and Cuba, as well as frequent consignments to England, France, Germany, Australia and the Philippines. It will thus be seen that, in the war of competition, Peoria may boast an enterprise in this line based upon genuine superiority, and therefore of lasting benefit at home and abroad.

Not long after arriving in America Mr. Brayshaw was united in marriage, May 13, 1868, to Caroline Wilby, who also is a native of England. Mrs. Brayshaw, who is a woman of rare intelligence and social tact, is the mother of three living children: Benjamin W., Walter and Clarence. The sons are all interested in business with their father, and the better to qualify them as practical manufacturers of soap, took special courses in chemistry in the Illinois University at Champaign, Illinois, and at Ann Arbor, Michigan. Benjamin Brayshaw was married, first, to Mamie Le Page, who died April 15, 1897, his second marriage occurring, April 25, 1901, to Mrs. Nellie (Zipprich) Haessel. Walter W. married Florence McIntyre on April 18, 1900, and of this union there is one child, Lena. In political affiliations Mr. Brayshaw is a Democrat, and is a believer in the doctrine of Free Silver. He is a man of broad intelligence, unusual business ability and of unquestioned integrity, and is popular in the commercial and social world of Peoria.

CHARLES MONTGOMERY BROWN.

Charles Montgomery Brown was born in Limestone Township, Peoria County, Illinois, March 25, 1859. He is a son of Isaac Brown, for many years conspicuous in politics and business in the City of Peoria. The father and mother of Mr. Brown removed to Peoria with their family in 1864, where Charles M. was educated in the public schools, graduating from the High School in the class of 1877. Soon after graduation he entered the employ of the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville Railway Company, at Peoria, and continued in the railroad business for eight years, the last three as General Agent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company's Fast Freight Line.

In 1885 he embarked in the insurance and loan business, in which he has continued to the present time. He has held several important general agencies of leading insurance companies, at Peoria, and now holds the important position of General Field Agent of the Aetna Life Insurance Company in the States of Illinois and Indiana.

June 2, 1887, he married Netta A. Cole, who is a pianist of rare skill and a woman of charming personality.

Mr. Brown has been an active member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church for many years, and for a long time a member of its official Board. He is also interested in, and is a Director of, the Young Men's Christian Association and the Peoria Lyceum Association, and is prominent in the Chautauqua work of the latter organization. Mr. Brown is a member of the Peoria Board of Trade. He has been actively connected with the Masonic Fraternity, being a Past Commander of Peoria Commandery, Knights Templar.

By his genial manners and uniform courtesy Mr. Brown commends himself to all with whom he comes in contact. His peculiar qualities have proved very advantageous to him in building up a business wherein he has had strong competition. He commands the respect and esteem of all who know him. Now in the prime of life, he has the promise of many years of success in the business world.

DELOSS STODDARD BROWN.

Deloss S. Brown, President of Brown, Page & Hillman Company, dealers in pianos and other musical instruments, was born in Cummington, Massachusetts, May 22, 1840, the grandson of William Brown, and son of Hiram and Eveline (Bradt) Brown. His father was born in the "Notch," Cheshire, Massachusetts, October 24, 1797, and his mother at Canajoharie, New York, March 11, 1800; the former died at Elmwood, Illinois, October 20, 1891, and the latter at Cummington, Massachusetts, May 4, 1866. Deloss S. received his early education in the common schools of his native place, and, at ten years of age, began working in a factory in which he was employed in the manufacture of various kinds of wooden implements; was next engaged in making scythe whetstones, after which he worked for a time in a sewing-machine factory. In 1863 he removed to Elmwood, Illinois, where he opened a wholesale and retail jewelry store, which he conducted for thirteen years, when (1876) he came to Peoria and purchased a half interest in the distillery of William R. Bush, afterwards known as the Bush & Brown Distillery. In this he continued for a period of ten years, when he sold out his interest to the Distillers' and Cattle Feeders' Company. His next business venture was the purchase of the stock of Brown, Page & Hillman, dealers in books, stationery, music and musical instruments, which has been continued ever since under the old firm name,—the business now being restricted to pianos, organs, sheet music and musical goods, which is conducted on a large scale. Mr. Brown's principal business, however, is in the line of Peoria real estate in which he is largely interested. At the present time, in connection with others, he is engaged upon some improvements in East Peoria, which promise to result in the future rapid development of that growing suburb. His business career has been conspicuously and uniformly successful, due to early acquired habits of application and industry, supplemented by business acumen. His influence upon the business development of Peoria has been as potential as it has been successful from a personal point of view. Although his business life has been of a strenuous character, he permits no business entanglements to interfere with his social and domestic enjoyments. His genial temperament and courteous bearing have secured for him a wide popularity, and no really deserving cause appeals to him in vain. Mr. Brown inherited from his ancestors those doctrines in favor of free speech, a free press and free soil for free men, which constituted the essential principles of the Free Soil or Abolition party before the days of the Civil War, and on the organization of the Republican party, as a protest against the attempt to carry slavery into free territory, espoused the cause of the party of Lincoln and an undivided Union with zeal, and has supported it ever since. Although not a politician in the professional sense of the word, he served his Ward as Alderman for a period of four years. He has been twice married; first, at Elmwood, Illinois, to Eunice Whiteside, who died in 1866. On October 12, 1869, he was united in marriage to Frances L. Bush, daughter of his long-time business partner, William R. Bush, and they have had five children: Eveline A., born August 24, 1870, died January 8, 1895; Alice J., born October 8, 1872; Eugene de A., born August 9, 1875; Edna K., born July 22, 1877, now Mrs. William Turnbull, and Deloss S. Jr., born November 4, 1879—the three first named having been born at Elmwood, Peoria County, and the last two in the city of Peoria.

ISAAC BROWN.

Isaac Brown was born in South Shields, England, August 16, 1817. His parents were Jabez and Margaret Brown. His father was Superintendent of one of the large collieries near New Castle on the Tyne, England, and was killed in a mine by the falling of coal when Isaac Brown was a mere boy. Soon after the death of his father, in 1835, young Isaac sailed for America, going first to Cape Breton Island, off the coast of Nova Scotia, where he remained but a short time, when he sailed for the United States, landing at New Orleans. He removed to Galena, Illinois, in 1836, and soon after traveled over various sections of the country seeking a more desirable location. He finally settled at St. Louis, where, in 1839, he was married to Anna Mary Catherine Gaussmann, a native of the Province of Westphalia, Prussia, where her father was a well-to-do farmer and land-owner, who, with his family, had removed to the United States about one year before her marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown, with two small children, removed to Peoria County, in 1844, first locating on a farm in Rosefield Township, and afterwards in Limestone Township, and in 1864 came to Peoria, where Mr. Brown died January 30, 1888, and where Mrs. Brown still lives. The married life of the couple was a very happy one. They had five children: William J., who died in New Orleans in 1878; Henry I.; Margaret E., now Mrs. O. R. Clough; Mary E., who married Mr. John R. Schnebly, and died August 9, 1900; and Charles M.

Mr. Brown was for several years a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was for many years active as a Trustee of the First Church of that denomination in Peoria.

He was the first Supervisor from Limestone Township. In 1860 he was elected County Treasurer, and was twice re-elected, in 1862 and 1864, and subsequently filled several important offices in the City of Peoria.

Mr. Brown was a man of the strictest integrity, and filled with fidelity every official position to which he was elected or appointed. He was originally a Douglas Democrat, but always a strong Union man. During the Civil War, from 1861 to 1865, with Lucius L. Day and Washington Cockle, he served upon the Committee of Public Safety, having in charge the Government's interests in Peoria and vicinity. He was a man of strong physique and marked personality, with a pleasant and sunny disposition, and was universally trusted and esteemed. No man had the public confidence to a greater extent than Mr. Brown. He was careful, frugal and economical, without being parsimonious or mean. He left a name and reputation for his family, unsullied and clean.

JAMES L. BROWN.

One should scarcely desire a higher position in society than the reputation of a good physician—not "good" alone in the ordinary sense of proficiency in his profession, but in that broader sense, embracing not only qualifications but character and reputation as well. There is some danger, even in the medical profession, of a controlling influence of the commercial spirit so characteristic of the present day. It is to be hoped, for the honor of the profession, that it may be kept from the degradation that necessarily follows the purely commercial aspect of it.

James L. Brown belongs to that class which has not yet departed from the old straight-forward professional course; not yet put a purely monetary value upon his services. He was born at Goshen, Clermont County, Ohio, on January 5, 1841, to Benjamin and Elizabeth (Lafferty) Brown. His father followed the occupation of a farmer. The stock from which Dr. Brown descended came from England before the Revolutionary War and obtained a grant from the King of some three thousand acres of land in the State of Pennsylvania, where the father of Dr. Brown was born. On the mother's side, his ancestors were descendants of the French Huguenots.

Dr. Brown received a common school education at Clermont, and also took a course in Main-ville Seminary, in Warren County, Ohio. After leaving school he taught for a time, whereby he acquired the means for his medical education. He graduated at the Medical College of Ohio, at Cincinnati, in 1868, and began practice in that city, continuing until 1873, when he came to Peoria, where he has ever since resided, continuously and successfully practicing his profession.

The immediate ancestors of Dr. Brown were conspicuous in the War of 1812, among them being General Jacob Brown, who commanded at Lundy's Lane, and later at Fort Erie. Thus, it will be seen that he comes of good stock, and he has in every respect, during his life in Peoria, honored his ancestry. He has devoted himself assiduously to his profession and has, with economy and care, provided himself with a reasonable competence, all of which has been done without wrong or oppression, robbery or fraud. He has never hesitated to give his professional services to the poor, as well as to the rich, without compensation as well as for it. He has been free from the petty jealousies and envies that sometimes have marred the reputation of men of his profession. Fortunately, all that is passing away. He has always been regarded in this city as an honorable, upright, high-minded man and a thoroughly conscientious physician.

In politics, Dr. Brown has been a Republican, although he has never taken any very active part in politics, but has in this respect been ready and willing at all times to discharge his full duty as becomes a good citizen.

He married, June 28, 1881, Miss Lida Black, who died January 4, 1883. October 3, 1894, he married for his second wife Miss Margaret Pfeiffer, by whom he has one son, James L. Brown, born August 4, 1895.

Dr. Brown enjoys the respect and confidence of all who know him, and will, to the end, be regarded as an efficient, kindly, charitable physician. He has been for years an active member of the Peoria City Medical Association, having twice been its President, and is now an honorary member thereof by reason of his long connection and his standing as a physician. He is a member of the Illinois State Medical Society and of the American Medical Association. Such men honor the community in which they live and, in dying, leave behind them a monument, in the love and respect of those whom they have befriended and served, more desirable than the most costly marble.

WILLIAM FREDERICK BRYAN.

William Frederick Bryan was for some years prominently identified with the legal profession in this city. He was descended from Anglo-Irish ancestry. The name Bryan is derived by English heraldry from Bryn, which is the Anglo-Saxon name of a hill. It is now found among old family names of England, buried under titles. Ireland, however, has her familiar O'Brians and O'Briens, and France her Chateaubriands, Briens and Briens. The great-grandfather was Samuel Bryan a native and resident of Dublin, and a prominent shipping merchant of that place. He married a Miss Dennis, who was also born in that locality and brought the pure Irish strain into the paternal ancestry, although France claims title to this name also, through her national Saint Denis, deriving it from Dionysius (Dionese), of Gracca.

George Bryan, their eldest son, and the grandfather of our subject, was born in Dublin, in 1730, and in 1750 crossed the Atlantic to the new world, locating in Philadelphia, where he also engaged in business as a shipping merchant. He was then only twenty years of age. He not only won the respect and esteem of his fellow men, but also received at their hands high honors, and left the impress of his strong individuality upon the early history of the State. He had acquired a collegiate education and his tastes and ambition soon inspired him to other than a mercantile life. From 1764 until his death, in 1790, he was the popular favorite and active recipient successively of judicial, ministerial, executive and legislative honors, and finally, in 1780, won the highest judicial honors within the gift of the people of the State, serving as Judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania until the time of his death. In his first contest for political office, in 1764, he was elected burgess over Dr. Franklin and another opponent. "Franklin," writes the chronicler naively, "died like a philosopher; his associate agonized in death, and afterward General Reed went over to the British." (Life of General Reed, Volume I, page 30.) "An active political opponent, a Federalist, accredits Judge George Bryan as the author of the first constitution of Pennsylvania, which the Federalist denounces as the inevitable precursor of anarchy. (Life in Pennsylvania, I, 302.) An electric flash of sarcastic humor now exhibits Dr. Franklin as an 'oily gammon,' who had discovered that 'oil would smooth the ruffled surface of the sea.' So had he found it most effectual in assuaging the troubled minds of his fellow men. Hence he was claimed by both constitutionalists and antis."

He was also a delegate to the Congress, held in New York in 1765, to protest against the British Stamp Act. (Life of Reed, Volume II, page 481.) As Vice-President and as acting President of Pennsylvania, in 1778, he urged the Legislature to abolish slavery, and in 1779 secured the passage of the first act abolishing slavery in this country. (Ibid, Volume II, page 173.) In 1779 he was appointed, in connection with James Madison and others, to establish the boundary line between Pennsylvania and Virginia, and while so engaged, advised and secured the adoption of the Mason and Dixon line, which was subsequently (1780) ratified by Congress. In 1780 he was appointed Judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and served in that capacity for ten years, when death ended his career. He was married in Philadelphia, to Elizabeth Smith, and they had five sons and two daughters. One of the sons, Arthur Bryan, became the father-in-law of Commodore Turner of the navy.

George Bryan, Jr., father of William F., was born in Philadelphia and acquired a collegiate education. His early manhood was devoted to mercantile pursuits in that city. He was a man of domestic tastes and retiring disposition, and the only public office which he held was that of Auditor General of the State, and at the time of his elevation to the office he removed to Lancaster, Pennsylvania, which was the capital of the State from 1799 until 1812. On its removal to Harrisburg, Mr. Bryan took his family to that place; but, on his retirement, he returned to Lancaster, where he carried on merchandising until his death, in December, 1838. He married Anna Maria Steinman, a native of Lancaster and of German (Moravian) parentage. She was educated in the noted Moravian Academy, at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, the first school for young ladies in America. Her father, Frederick Steinman, was an active and prosperous hardware merchant and manufacturer, and her mother was Margaretta Sybilla (Mayer) Steinman.

W. F. Bryan was born in Lancaster, August 28, 1810, and, when only two years of age, was taken by his parents to Harrisburg, where he began his education. He afterwards studied in his native city, the family returning there on the father's retirement from office. He pursued a regular college curriculum in private schools, and soon after laying aside his text-books, he was sent to Washington, D. C., to learn the art of printing. His father had a wealthy cousin who had retired from an active and successful career of politics and journalism, and was then enjoying the fruits of his labors in an elegant country villa near that city. The ultimate object of this choice of a profession, as he afterward learned, was to equip him for the higher career of editor; but setting and distributing type became monotonous to him and he returned home. While preparing for the bar in the city of Lancaster, he realized, in his small way, though incognito, his father's aspirations for him by assuming the editorship of a weekly political paper. His residence there was enlivened by weekly visits to the hospitable mansion of his relative, Samuel Harrison Smith, and there he was often brought in contact with many distinguished statesmen of the time, which, of course, had its influence upon his life. After his return from Washington, Mr. Bryan was sent to Chillicothe, Ohio, to be initiated into the vocation of merchandising; but the business pursuits selected for him by others did not accord with his tastes and temperament, and he ultimately drifted into a profession more in harmony with his tastes and desires. It was while in Chillicothe that he became a member of a debating club, where he frequently met Allen G. Thurman, afterward the distinguished Senator from Ohio, and the eminent lawyer and jurist. From that time the bar became the pole-star of Mr. Bryan's ambition.

He bent all his energies toward reaching the goal, immediately returning to Lancaster, where he began the study of law.

In due course of time he was admitted to the bar. About that time the cry of "Westward, Ho!" resounded through the land, and, on the tide of emigration steadily drifting toward the setting sun, he made his way to Illinois. The journey was made by stage to Pittsburg and thence by the Ohio and Illinois Rivers, stepping from the steamer to the levee at Peoria in the spring of 1839. For many years thereafter he engaged in the practice of law and secured a large clientage. He was a close and diligent student and gained a broad and comprehensive knowledge of the science of jurisprudence. He won some important suits, yet the theory and the science of law were ever more attractive to him than the contests of the forum. His cases were prepared with the greatest thoroughness and precision, and his arguments were logical, forceful and convincing. Possessed, however, of an extremely nervous organism, he was in a measure unfitted for the exciting scenes of the court room, yet the court records indicate, by the many leading cases which he won, his marked ability and talent for the law.

In September, 1845, Mr. Bryan was united in marriage to Miss Jane G. Evans, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania. Her father, Robert Evans, then deceased, was a successful merchant and left his family in comfortable circumstances, and the mother, Anna Margaretta (Gundaker) Evans, being most devoted to her children, provided them with the best educational privileges. She was a member of the Lutheran Church until her marriage, when she joined the Presbyterian Church, to which her husband belonged. Her daughter, Mrs. Bryan, who completed her education in Philadelphia, was a most cultured lady. To our subject and his wife were born six children, namely: Anna Margaretta, wife of Arthur H. Rugg, a resident of Chicago; George, of Peoria, who married Eugenie M. Steele, of Romulus, New York and has two children—Margaretta and George; William Frederick, who is now Mayor of the City of Peoria; Edward Arthur, who married Lucy Gibson of Peoria, and, with his wife and son, William Frederick, reside in Chicago; Robert Evans, who died in early childhood; and Jennie Logan, who resides in Peoria.

Largely on account of his nervous temperament and studious inclination, Mr. Bryan always preferred the retired life of the scholar to the active one of the politician or society man. He never sought or desired political preferment and held no public office whatever, except in scientific and literary societies to which he belonged. He carried his research and investigation far and wide into the realms of literature and science, and delighted in the companionship of his favorite authors, who were to him true and tried friends of long years' standing. At all times he commanded the respect and esteem of his fellow men, and well deserves mention in the history of the Illinois bar, at which he won high standing. He died August 27, 1900.—From "Bench and Bar of Illinois."

WILLIAM FREDERICK BRYAN.

William Frederick Bryan, the present Mayor (1902) of the City of Peoria, has the distinction of having been elected to the position which he now holds by the largest majority ever accorded to a mayoralty candidate in the history of our city. Mayor Bryan is of Anglo-Irish ancestry, and was born at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, although his parents had previously resided in Peoria and returned to this city while he was still a child. His father, the late William F. Bryan (see sketch), was a prominent and well-known attorney, who died in 1900, while the mother's maiden name was Jane G. Evans—the daughter of a successful merchant of Lancaster—their marriage taking place at Lancaster in September, 1845. After the return of the elder Bryan's family to Peoria, the son acquired his early education in the public schools of this city, after which he attended college for a time. His first experience in business was as book-keeper in a grain-broker's office, after which he became an active operator on the Board of Trade. He served for several years as a Director, and, in 1806, was chosen President of the Board, but retired from active business in 1897, to devote his time to private interests which demanded his attention.

Mayor Bryan's political career dates from the year 1895, when he was elected Alderman for the Second Ward, being re-elected in 1897, and serving until 1899. During his connection with the City Council he served upon the Finance and other important committees—was also a member of the committee which had charge of the erection of the present handsome City Hall. In 1890 he became the Democratic candidate for Mayor, but was defeated by a majority of less than two hundred votes. In 1901 he was again a candidate for the same office, and this time was elected by the unprecedented majority of 3,000 votes. Mr. Bryan's experience has rendered him thoroughly conversant with the details of every department of the city government, and his administration has proved an eminently successful one. Unhampered by business cares and perplexities, he gives to municipal affairs his individual attention, and, by his devotion to public duty, has won the confidence and respect not only of his own party, but of the entire community. Direct, forceful and strictly impartial in his methods, he has taken rank as one of the most able and far-sighted municipal officers in the history of Peoria. While the administration of his father's estate have made large demands upon Mayor Bryan's time for the past two years, it has not been permitted to interfere with his public and official duties. His reputation as a public-spirited citizen has been well established and has, undoubtedly, proved the basis, to a large extent, of his popularity as a public officer.

NELSON BURNHAM.

The subject of this sketch, Nelson Burnham, was born at Crown Point, New York, September 1, 1826. The family was of Scottish descent, and, coming to this country, settled in Hartford, Connecticut. His father, James Burnham, went from Hartford to Saratoga County, New York, and later to Lake Champlain, where Nelson Burnham was born. The family consisted of three boys and one girl, Nelson being the youngest of the family. His father was a lumberman upon Lake Champlain, and for many years conducted the business with great success, but finally failed, while Nelson was quite young. The latter received a common-school education only. In 1850, with that enterprise and courage which characterized many young men of ambition and force, in that section of the country, he went to California and engaged in mining on the Macaumo River, where he was very successful, and, in a year or two, returned to the States with sufficient funds for a good start in life. Prior to going to California he had learned the carpenter's trade. Having returned from California he settled at Farmington, Fulton County, Illinois, working at his trade to some extent, and investing money in lands. He has, from that time, made a specialty of investments in farm-lands, and became the owner of large tracts in Kansas and in Stark County, as well as in other places in the State of Illinois. In 1860 he moved to Peoria and engaged in the milling business with Richard Gregg, in which he continued for about five years. Since that time he has devoted himself altogether to investments in farms and carrying on a farming business. In 1875 he purchased sixteen thousand acres of land in Allen and Morris Counties, Kansas, much of which he still owns. He is also the owner, at the present time, of considerable tracts in Missouri and Stark County, this State.

For the past few years he has taken life somewhat easily, and has been an extensive traveler, having twice gone around the globe. He spends his winters in California, where he finds relief from a troublesome bronchial difficulty which has annoyed him for several years. He has been, and still is, a stockholder in the Peoria National Bank, and has made other investments in Peoria and its vicinity.

In 1852 Mr. Burnham married Emily R. Sloan, who died in September, 1897. He has always been liberal in his religious views, and has been, and still is, a Republican in politics. Maintaining the highest character for personal integrity, he has very little patience with trickery and dishonesty in business or politics. He has been liberal in his charities and in his attempts to assist deserving persons needing assistance. He has been remarkably successful in his business career, is a good judge of men and of values, and his success may be attributed largely to his sound judgment and strict integrity.

While never having had any children of his own, he has always been interested in the children of others, and is the friend and helper of all little children, so far as possible.

Mr. Burnham's career well illustrates what a man of purpose, energy and character can accomplish in this country of ours. He has the respect of all with whom he is acquainted.

WILLIAM R. BUSH.

A man successful in business, through individual energy, intelligence and uprightness, is a benefit to the community in which he lives.

William R. Rush, the subject of this sketch, belonged to that class. He was born at Moores Hill, Dearborn County, Indiana, July 18, 1824. His father's name was John Dean Bush, and his mother's maiden name, Elizabeth Winings. In his earlier years, his father learned and followed the trade of a carpenter, but subsequently became a minister and devoted himself to that calling to the end of his days. He was an earnest student of the Bible and thoroughly familiar with it. In his calling as a minister he moved from place to place along the Ohio River. Both the parents belonged to long-lived families, and both lived to advanced age. There were born to them eleven children, who, leaving the old home, settled in different parts of the country, and engaged in various callings with reasonable success.

William R. Bush had but little opportunity for education, and it was one of the serious regrets of his life that his opportunities had been so limited. He was obliged to educate himself throughout his life, which he did by reading and by keen observation of men and things. When a mere boy, he left home with some other lads, and started down the Ohio River with a view to supporting himself, and in the hope of making a fortune. He met with many disappointments and misfortunes, but, on the whole, considered this adventure the foundation of his subsequent successful business career. He came to Peoria in the '30s, and engaged in brick-making, establishing a yard of his own, became interested in coal mines, and, subsequently, went into the distilling business at Fort Madison, Iowa, which he carried on for several years. Then returning to Peoria, he engaged in the same business with C. C. Clarke, under the name of Clarke & Bush Distillery Company. This business he continued for some years, but subsequently established a distillery of his own in South Peoria, which was operated successfully, under the name of the Bush & Brown Distilling Company. In this business he was very successful and accumulated quite a fortune. The business carried on was that of the distillation of spirits and alcohol. The company did not engage in the manufacture of any finished goods for personal use.

Mr. Bush always interested himself in the development of Peoria; was one of the few men who constructed the Main Street car line. He also erected several buildings in the city in addition to his pleasant home upon the bluff. The later years of his life he spent in traveling and acquiring information, thus becoming familiar with all parts of his own country. He never united with any church, but always was liberal in his theology, and believed in all that was good in the churches and in the schools, and did what he could to foster these institutions in the City of Peoria, believing that, through them, the moral and intellectual standing of the city was elevated. In politics, he was a Democrat of the somewhat liberal stripe, and not so influenced by his political views as to prevent him, on all occasions, from voting in municipal affairs for the men he believed best fitted to discharge the duties of the positions for which they were nominated.

He was married, in 1846, to Melvira Kindred, by whom he had two children: Frances L. Bush (now Brown) and Edna J. Bush. His wife died, and, in 1856, he married, as his second wife, Annie B. Bush, to whom four children were born, two girls and two boys: Harriet A., Lucy I., William C. and John D. His second wife was descended from the Choate family, a name famous, particularly, in the legal and literary world.

While Mr. Bush was in business, he devoted himself earnestly and conscientiously to it, and in every branch of business in which he engaged, he was a success.

He was fond of companionship, genial and pleasant in his disposition, kindly in all his instincts and acts. He made and retained people as his friends, and died regretted by all to whom he was well known. He loved Peoria, the city of his adoption, becoming more and more attached as time went on, and often expressed himself as living in as delightful a spot as fell to the lot of man. Unlike some others, he was loyal to the city and anxious for its improvement and development. He always encouraged capitalists and business men to settle here, believing in the future of the city. Mr. Bush died January 8, 1889.

AUGUSTINE ANDREW BUSHELL.

Augustine Andrew Bushell was a native of Dublin, Ireland, born August 30, 1833, and in 1841, at the age of eight years, came with his parents to Canada. A few years later his parents removed to Newburg, New York, where most of his boyhood was spent, and where he learned the tinner's trade, in the meanwhile receiving a common-school education. In 1852—his parents having previously removed to Peoria—he came to this city, but two years later returned to Newburg where, on November 13, 1854, he married Miss Ann T. Callahan of that place. The following year (1855) he returned to Peoria, where he established himself in business as a tinner, and also engaged in gravel-roofing, making Peoria his home for the remainder of his life. His place of business was on Washington Street, where he built up a large and successful trade, not only in the roofing business but in the manufacture of roofing material, to which he added various kinds of tiling and artificial stone-work. He was succeeded by his son, John W. Bushell, who, under the firm name of A. A. Bushell & Son and the Bushell Manufacturing Company, has built up a large and prosperous business at 1317 to 1323 South Washington Street. It is a tribute to the founder of this industry nearly a half century ago, that his name is still retained in the title of the firm which he established. In addition to his private business, Mr. Bushell served for twenty consecutive years as Sealer of Weights and Measures for the City of Peoria, and was also the first Oil Inspector who ever held office under the City Government.

Mr. Bushell took a deep interest in matters connected with the art of music, was an expert performer on the bass tuba and bass viol, and one of the organizers of the famous Spencer's Band so intimately identified with the history of Peoria of thirty to forty years ago. When he first came to Peoria he established his home at 204 Harrison Street, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred October 29, 1888, as the result of dropsy by which he had been affected for some time. His funeral, celebrated at St. Mary's Catholic Church two days later, was an imposing event, representatives of the various musical organizations and bands in the city taking part in the ceremonies.

In politics Mr. Bushell was a Democrat, and, in religious belief, a Roman Catholic. Of eight children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bushell, six are still living: Charlotte M., now Mrs. Frank Kimmett; Robert E.; John W., married to Catharine Donnelly and of the firm of A. A. Bushell & Son; Monica, married to James E. Bennett; Mary Emma; and Ruth E., married to Dr. W. F. Whalen—all of Peoria. Mrs. Bushell still survives and represents her husband's estate in the firm of A. A. Bushell & Son.

ELIOT CALLENDER.

In every growing city there are names so inseparably connected with its business and prosperity as to recur to every one becoming acquainted with the history of its growth.

Among the men contributing to the development of the business of the City of Peoria, Eliot Callender occupies a prominent position. His connection with a number of prominent business enterprises has given him in the community a commanding influence. Mr. Callender was born in St. Louis, Missouri, March 22, 1842. His father, George H. Callender, and his mother, Elizabeth P. (Melcher) Callender, were New England people, the former having been born in Boston, Massachusetts, and the latter in Falmouth, Maine. At an early day they settled in New Orleans, Louisiana, where the father engaged in the mercantile business. Subsequently they moved to St. Louis, where Eliot, Belle Melcher and Howard Callender were born. In 1852 the family removed to Peoria.

Eliot Callender is descended from Revolutionary ancestors, among whom was Colonel Callender, who fought the two pieces of artillery used by the Colonists at Bunker Hill, which are now kept in the upper room at Bunker Hill Monument. At nine years of age Eliot was sent to Boston, where he attended the public schools until fifteen years of age. He then returned to Peoria and became a member of the first class in the new Peoria High School, in the building at the corner of Jackson and Jefferson Streets, now used as a Club House for the Women Teachers in the public schools. He attended the High School for two years and was then given a scholarship in Washington University at St. Louis, by the Hon. John Howe, then Mayor of that city, with whose family he made his home during his two years' course at the University. Upon leaving the University, he took up the trade of tanner and currier at Mr. Howe's extensive tannery in South St. Louis, where he learned both branches of the business. The Rebellion having broken out while he was working at his trade, the business of Mr. Howe was immediately threatened with destruction by Southern sympathizers on account of his strong Union sentiments. To avoid the destruction of his property Mr. Howe availed himself of a large steamboat, which was quietly dropped down to his tanyard one dark night, upon which his entire stock was loaded under the charge of Mr. Callender, and the boat was taken to Peoria, where the stock was finished up in a building now occupied as a drug store by Colburn, Birks & Company.

In October, 1861, Mr. Callender enlisted at Peoria in the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, but was soon after transferred to the United States Navy at St. Louis, on board the gun-boat "Benton." In January, 1862, he was transferred to the gun-boat "Cincinnati" and participated in the battles of Fort Henry, Island No. 10 and Fort Pillow, where the gun-boat was sunk by the rebel rams. He served through both Vicksburg campaigns of 1862-63, and in the Haines Bluff, Yazoo Pass, St. Charles, Ft. Pemberton and White River expeditions. Mr. Callender shipped as a landsman in the navy, was promoted to Paymaster's Steward, afterwards commissioned as Master's Mate, and October 1, 1862, was commissioned Ensign and appointed Fleet Signal Officer. He was finally transferred as Executive Officer to the United States Steamer Marmora, and promoted to Commander of that vessel. He resigned in June, 1864, as his active services were no longer needed upon the Mississippi River. Upon leaving the Navy he returned to Peoria, where he has since resided.

Mr. Callender was instrumental in establishing the large and important Insurance Agency in the City of Peoria, which still bears his name. For many years he has been the representative in Peoria of large moneyed institutions seeking investments in the State of Illinois. During all these years he has been their trusted agent and had sole charge of their business, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Few men during the years of Mr. Callender's active connection with business, have been more public spirited or taken a larger part in building up various industries and improving the city. He was connected prominently with the establishment of the Peoria Mercantile Library, and one of its incorporators, and was on the building committee of the Chamber of Commerce, the Grand Opera House, the National Hotel, the Young Men's Christian Association Building, the Dime Savings Bank, and the Second Presbyterian Church. He is still a Director in the Young Men's Christian Association, in the National Hotel Company, the Allaire-Woodward Company, Peoria Wagon Company, Title and Trust Company, and President of the Dime Savings Bank. In 1881 Mr. Callender organized the banking firm of Callender, Ayres & Company, composed of himself, Columbus R. Cummings, Henry P. Ayres, Gardner T. and Walter Barker. In 1884 he organized the Commercial National Bank of Peoria, as the successor of Callender, Ayres & Company, and was for two years its President. He organized the Dime Savings Bank in 1887 and resigned his position as President of the Commercial Bank. He has since been at the head of the Savings Bank, which has grown into one of the most important and valuable banking institutions in the city. Thus it will be seen that Mr. Callender has led an active business life in Peoria and played a very important part in the development of all that is best in the city. Mr. Callender is a member of the military order of the Loyal Legion, Illinois Commandery; of the Grand Army of the Republic, and, in 1897, was Commander of Bryner Post, No. 67; a member of the Naval Order of the United States, and of the Farragut Naval Veterans' Association. He has always been an ardent Republican.

In May, 1864, Mr. Callender married Mary C. Frye, the daughter of Dr. Joseph C. and Eliza S. Frye. Dr. Frye was one of the earlier and most prominent physicians in the city of Peoria, and was most widely known and respected throughout the State of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Callender have three children; Joseph E., now engaged in business in Chicago; Annie G., the wife of Charles S. Burdick; and Eliot, Jr., a lad still at home.

Mr. Callender has, in addition to the business enterprises with which he has been connected, been an active worker and a liberal contributor to all philanthropic, charitable and religious institutions. He has always taken an active interest in all charitable work and deservedly stands high in the estimation of all in the city of Peoria.

WILLIAM HENRY CARROLL.

William Henry Carroll is a native of Peoria, born November 12, 1867, the son of Thomas and Catharine (Tobin) Carroll. His father was a native of Ireland who came to Peoria in the early '50s, where he was married to Miss Catharine Tobin, six children being the result of this union, of whom William H. was the fourth. The latter was educated in the parochial and public schools of Peoria, and afterwards learned the trade of a boiler-maker, at which he worked nearly twenty years. In 1892 he entered upon his first political position as member of the Board of Supervisors of Peoria County, in which he served two years, when he was elected to the Peoria City Council, serving two terms of two years each, the last ending in the spring of 1899. At his first election he was the youngest member of the Board. While in the City Council, he was the prime mover in the plan for the erection of the new City Hall, and served as Chairman of the Committee in charge of its construction. During his term in the City Council, he was called upon to serve a number of times as Mayor pro tem. during the temporary absences of the Mayor; and, while one of the most active members of the Council, was regarded as the best parliamentarian in that body. From childhood he has taken an active interest in debates and public speaking, thereby fitting himself for the positions in public affairs he has been called to fill. In politics he is an earnest Democrat, and, as indicated by his public career, has exerted a strong influence in the affairs of his party.

In 1899 Mr. Carroll established a boot and shoe store at 1229 Adams Street, which he is now successfully conducting. On November 19, 1890, he was married to Miss Lizzie Lanning, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Lanning of Peoria, and they have had four children, of whom three are now living, viz: William H., Jr., Thomas Emmett and Simon LeRoy.

Mr. Carroll is a member of a number of social and patriotic organizations, including the Irish Nationalist Society ("98 Club"), and of the United Irish League of America, of each of which he is the President for Peoria. In a general way he is regarded as the best posted man in Peoria on the workings of various societies throughout the world who are laboring for the cause of freedom for Ireland. He was also, for seven years, Captain of Commandery 57, Knights of St. John, which was considered, in its day, the best drilled company in Peoria. He takes a deep interest in the youth of the city, and has had built at his home the best equipped private gymnasium and swimming pool in Peoria, where boys are admitted and taught the art of swimming free, good behavior being the only fee for admission or membership.

HORACE CLARK.

Horace Clark was born at Sardinia, Erie County, New York, on the 6th of January, 1823. He was the son of Horace and Malinda (Condee) Clark. The mother's family was descended from Prince Conde, a French Huguenot who survived the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and was expatriated and fled to England. From there he came to America with the New Haven Colony. The paternal ancestors of Mr. Clark were English, and the family is still prominent in England as manufacturers. The father of the subject of this sketch was a lawyer, politician and business man. He was elected County Clerk of Erie County in 1834 and the family removed to Buffalo where they made their permanent home. Mr. Clark died in 1858.

When Horace was sixteen years old he entered a country store and worked as clerk for two years. In 1843, on account of failing health and the desire for a change, he came to Morton, Tazewell County, Illinois, and settled upon land his father had purchased. He commenced the improvement of three hundred and twenty acres of prairie land. In 1845 he married Mary Elizabeth Kingsbury. Four children were born to them,—a daughter, who died in infancy, and three sons, George C., Charles D. and Horace C., Jr., all of whom are still living and engaged in active business in the city of Peoria, and are all a credit to their ancestry. George is in the milling and feed business with his father; Charles D. is engaged in the wholesale hardware business, and Horace, Jr., in the coal business.

Horace Clark, Sr., remained upon the farm until 1861, when he came to Peoria and engaged in the milling and feed business as a member of the firm of Clark & Hanna. In 1877 the firm was dissolved, and since that time the concern has gone under the name of Horace Clark, and later, Horace Clark, Sons & Company. Mr. Clark was very successful in all the business in which he engaged. His success had its foundation in sound judgment and strict business principles,—not in the present usual acceptance of the term "strict," which means "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," but high-toned, honorable, upright business conduct. No man in the community stood higher for integrity, uprightness, morality and sound business sense, than the subject of this sketch. His word was considered as good as his bond, and he was always open, frank and fearless in the expression of his opinions, which were the result of deliberate, thoughtful consideration. He was a man of positive convictions, outspoken and independent in the expression of those opinions; but he was always willing that men should have like privileges, and, while he would seek to enforce his opinions by candid argument and persuasion, he always felt that others had the same right as he demanded for himself, consequently he was ever on friendly terms with all, no matter how radical the difference between them upon some questions.

In politics Mr. Clark was an old line Whig, and was a member of the State Convention at Bloomington, in May, 1856, that gave birth to the Republican party in Illinois. He had, from that time, been a consistent, straightforward member of that party, and an advocate of its principles. He was not a narrow partisan, but, believing in the policy of the Republican party, he has adhered to it. He was never blinded to its faults, and was ever ready to aid in the correction of any wrongs that crept into its management. He believed in staying in the party and reforming it within its lines, whenever it needed reform.

When the Board of Trade was organized, Mr.

Clark was elected its first President, and had been identified with it from that time to the time of his demise.

In religion he was a consistent, upright and honorable member of the First Congregational Church. He had been Chairman of the Board of Trustees thirty-eight years in succession, and was a member of that Board when the present Congregational Church was built in the city of Peoria. Leading a consistent Christian life he had never been one of those who believe religion is to be put on as a Sunday garb, and left at the church door when he departs. He was not one of those who attempted to keep books with the Lord by robbing, even under the forms of the law, those with whom he transacted business, and then attempting to square himself with his religious principles, by now and then making some donation to a benevolent or Christian object. He was a man who carried his Christianity into every-day life, and it consisted in doing, as nearly as possible, unto others as he would have them do to him, and in favoring all that is upright, clean and honorable in private, social, political and municipal life. Few men have more generally commanded, and been more entitled to, the respect of all classes of men.

In his domestic life he was happy, and his first great sorrow came to him in the death of his wife, on February 16, 1889; but he bore it as he did all other misfortunes, with equanimity and fortitude, acquiescing in the inevitable, and making the best of it that he could. He was universally loved and respected by those who know him. He died August 11, 1902.

CHARLES CORNING CLARKE.

Death, in the end, however long anticipated, always comes as a surprise, even after a long life of active enterprise and the apparent completion of the work of a well-rounded character. When it comes to a young man, in the full flush and vigor of his ripe manhood, it seems more unaccountable and sad. It is hard to comprehend the end and aim of life thus cut off, where one has, by earnest effort and toil, fitted himself for a right discharge of the highest duties of a noble manhood.

Charles Corning Clarke was born, March 22, 1856, in the city of Peoria, and died September 1, 1901. Into the brief years of his active business life he crowded more of work and labor than many a man living twice his number of years. His father, Mr. Charles S. Clarke, was for years a prominent factor in business in the city of Peoria, in which he accumulated a comfortable fortune. His mother was Melissa (Randall) Clarke, now a resident of Los Angeles, California.

The early boyhood of Charles was spent upon his father's farm. He received his education in the schools of Peoria, graduating at the High School. Soon after graduation he entered his father's office, and, in 1876, went to Montana, where he started in business for himself as a ranchman in the cattle business. He had never been physically strong and vigorous, and hoped for great benefit from his out-door life in Montana. In this he was not disappointed, as he often spoke of that life in the open air upon the plains, as the only time when he felt entirely well. Although much improved by his sojourn in the West, he found it hard to give up the home of his boyhood, and, in 1880, returned to Peoria and formed a partnership with his youngest brother, Chauncey D. Clarke, in the distilling business, which formerly had been conducted by his father under the firm name of C. S. Clarke & Company. This business was managed with marked financial success by the Clarke Brothers until 1900, when it was incorporated under the name of Clarke Brothers & Company, of which Charles C. Clarke was President, and actually conducted the business, which proved eminently successful. Mr. Clarke devoted himself to his business but never allowed it to overmaster him. He was clear-headed, broad-minded, keenly alive to every situation, and ready to adapt himself and his financial interests to constantly changing conditions. Few men in Peoria developed a better capacity for business, and no man had a better reputation for integrity and honor than Charles C. Clarke. His word was always good when he gave it. He was careful and prudent in what he did and said, but when he once made up his mind, it was done intelligently and he was ready to abide by the consequences. Notwithstanding all of his business interests and cares, and his gradually failing health, he interested himself always in public affairs, and performed his full part as a citizen everywhere and on all occasions. No man of his age had the confidence of the people to a greater extent; no one was more fully trusted or relied upon, especially with reference to municipal affairs. In 1888, against his wish, he was elected Mayor of the city of Peoria, and gave to the city so successful an administration that he was besought, on every hand, at the close of his term, to accept the office again. It is rarely the case that a man elected upon a partisan ticket has been able to give such general satisfaction in municipal affairs, as did Mr. Clarke. This resulted from his ripe judgment, his thoughtfulness, his control of himself, and his determination always to do the thing that seemed best for the public good. Mr. Clarke's success as an executive officer may be attributed to these qualities.

Mr. Clarke was married, July 28, 1892, to Mrs. Alice (Chandler) Ewing, who still survives him. As the result of this marriage three children were born: Alice, born July 6, 1893, and died in Memphis, Tennessee, April 6, 1898; Charles C., born in Pass Christian, Mississippi, February 26, 1895; and Margaret, born in Peoria, July 6, 1897.

During the last two or three years of Mr. Clarke's life he was in constantly failing health, but, notwithstanding this, he kept in touch with and controlled all his business, which he continued to manage until a few days before his death. His mind was always clear and his business capacity unabated. It may be said of him, as of few men, that he had no enemies. Generally this would indicate that one lacked positive convictions and sterling traits of character. This was not true of Mr. Clarke; but he was so well-balanced that he could extertain his own views and advocate them consistently and persistently without giving offense to those not agreeing with him.

He was a man of affectionate and lovable disposition; in his family, generous and kind. In the death of such men the community meets with a positive loss, and the family and friends with an irretrievable calamity.

CHARLES S. CLARKE.

Charles S. Clarke was born in Northampton, Massachusetts, October, 1821, and died in Peoria on November 15, 1890.

Such is the brief record of a man, who was one of the most forceful characters, and who exerted as great an influence upon his fellow-citizens as any man of his period. He passed his youth surrounded by the rigidity in manners and morals of the old Puritan stock, from whence he sprang. At the age of twenty, he left his native State to seek his fortune in the great West. He came to Illinois and taught school in Bureau County for a year, and then went to Ohio and was employed as clerk in a store at Mentor Corners. Later he formed a partnership with his brother at Grand Gulf, Mississippi, where they successfully conducted a general store. From there, he moved to Memphis and opened a store in that city. The climate not agreeing with him, in 1849 he came to Peoria with a stock of dry-goods and opened a store on Main Street between Adams and Washington. Still suffering from ill-health, he traded his stock of goods to Mr. James Harkness for a farm in Elmwood Township, five miles from the town of that name, which he occupied in September of that year. He remained on the farm for a year and a half, when his health having improved, he returned to Peoria.

In 1855-56 he became interested with Kellogg, Moss & Co. in constructing what was known as the Peoria & Oquawka, afterwards the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, from Peoria to Burlington, Iowa. In the midst of this work, the panic of 1857 broke upon the country and overwhelmed him in common with many others. He then went back to his farm, where he remained for three years. Then, having removed to Peoria, he engaged in distilling, which he pursued until his retirement in the fall of 1882. During this time he was exceedingly active in all public matters. His experience in the South had given him an intimate acquaintance with "the peculiar institution" (slavery), and, when the war broke out, he used his influence in shaping public opinion in Illinois in favor of the Union and in urging upon his friends and acquaintances to stand firm for that cause. He was largely instrumental in inducing both Robert and Clark Ingersoll to take their stand for the nation.

He was a firm friend of Lincoln, of Yates, of Trumbull, of Lovejoy, of David Davis, and others prominent in Republican councils during the eventful years of the war. He was generally a delegate to the State and National Conventions of the party, and while not an orator, no man ever did better or more effective service in the committee room, and many planks in the platform of the party, during those stirring times, emanated from his pen. No less active in business, his advice was frequently asked in business affairs. His mind was practical, and he added to his knowledge of politics and of trade, the wiser knowledge obtained from books. He was an omnivorous reader; his learning was always at his command, and he used it to advantage in the practical affairs of life. He was a delightful conversationalist, genial, ready and apt.

He was a charter member of the Peoria Scientific Society, and, while he lived, that body was an active force in Peoria. No man possessed a greater fund of practical wisdom than he, and no man used it with greater effect upon his associates, and no man's opinion was held in higher respect in Peoria than his.

He was the embodiment of philosophy applied to the affairs of every-day life—sagacious, self-poised, calm, deliberate, always reasoning for those underlying principles, that are the foundation of character. These qualities steadily applied to business, enabled him to amass a fortune, but he lived to the last in the same calm, frugal, philosophic manner in which he began life, dying in his home surrounded by his family, and exhibiting the same Spartan dignity and firmness that always characterized him.

THOMAS COFFEY.

The success attained by Thomas Coffey furnishes one instance in thousands testifying to the marvelous opportunities, in this country, for the accumulation of wealth by one who is willing and anxious to work.

Mr. Coffey was born in Ireland, in 1846, to Peter and Mary (Farley) Coffey. In 1859, at the age of thirteen, he ran away from home and engaged as seaman on board a British vessel bound for America. He reached New York after a voyage of over three months, the munificent sum of two cents constituting his entire wealth. He first obtained employment in bridge-building in the City of New York, for which he received seventy-five cents per day. He worked at this employment until he had accumulated enough to take him to Cincinnati, Ohio, where, for a time, he followed the business of a painter. After working in Cincinnati for a year, he went to St. Louis, and engaged in a gas-fitting and plumbing establishment, where he partially learned the trade. At the end of two years he found employment with the St. Louis Gas Light and Coke Company, where he learned the business that he has followed ever since, and in which he has been quite successful. After continuing in this business in St. Louis and New Orleans for several years, he went to Belleville, Illinois, where he was engaged in the same business for some time. His brother, Peter Coffey, was a stockholder in the Belleville Gas Works and Thomas, with his savings, also obtained an interest. In 1883 he removed to Peoria and became Assistant Superintendent of the Peoria Gas-Light and Coke Company. The Gas Works in Peoria, prior to this time, had not been well managed, and were behind the times in all the processes of manufacture and methods of doing business. Mr. Coffey and his brother Peter purchased as much of the stock as they were able, and ultimately obtained a controlling interest in the company. Both were practical and men of energy, attending strictly to business. They gradually developed the work, adopted modern methods and managed the company with marked success and profit. In 1890, Mr. Coffey was elected President and Assistant Superintendent of the Gas Company; in 1892, became General Superintendent of the Peoria General Electric Company, and in 1895, its President and General Manager. The success of these companies was largely due to Mr. Coffey's energy, careful business management and strict economy.

In the summer of 1900 Mr. Coffey sold his holdings in these companies at a very large profit and retired from business, as he then supposed. Although he had more than a competence, he could not content himself in being idle and having no definite object in life from day to day. He has recently purchased the Gas-Works at Paducah, Kentucky, where he expects to carry on the business in which he has been so successful, and in which he finds the pleasure of his life. Mr. Coffey has never married, but has proved an assistant and benefactor to his relatives and friends. He is a man of the strictest integrity, quiet and reserved in business and social life. His business career furnishes a good example for all young men possessed of integrity, fidelity, energy and singleness of purpose. His is the success attained by a straightforward, honorable, high-minded energetic business course.

ALMIRAN SMITH COLE.

Almiran Smith Cole, a pioneer settler of Peoria, was born in Cheshire, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, October 25, 1805, and died in Peoria, December 18, 1891. Mr. Cole was of English descent, the first American ancestor of the family, Hugh Cole, having emigrated from England to Plymouth, Massachusetts, previous to 1654, where in that year he was married to Mary Foxhall. The line of descent from this union embraces Benjamin Cole, born at Swansea, Massachusetts, in 1678; Israel Cole, born at the same place in 1709; Israel Cole (II.), born at Rehoboth, same State, in 1735, and David Cole, born at Cheshire in 1781—Almiran S. Cole being the son of the latter. In September, 1835, Mr. Cole left Lanesboro, Massachusetts, driving overland to Peoria, which he reached after a journey of sixty days. Having decided to settle here, he at once engaged in the mercantile business, opening a store on Main Street, then the main business thoroughfare. Two years later he sold out to Gardner T. Barker, who had been employed as a clerk in his store. For some two years he ran the steamer "Frontier" as a passenger packet between LaSalle and St. Louis, one of the first boats of its class to ply on the Illinois River, and therefore intimately associated with the early history of Peoria. Having disposed of the steamer a couple of years later, he again embarked in the mercantile business in the building since occupied as a wholesale liquor-house by M. Henebery, which he had erected. Having retired from the mercantile business a second time, in 1844 he erected the first distillery in the history of Peoria, which he operated for two and a half years, when he sold out to Sylvanus Thompson, but the following year (1847) commenced the erection of a much larger establishment of the same character on the site now occupied by the Great Western Distillery—doing much of the excavation for the foundation and the preparation of timbers for the frame-work with his own hands. This was a four-story structure erected at a cost of $38,000 and had a capacity of 1,600 bushels of grain per day. In Drown's "History of Peoria," issued in 1851, it is spoken of as one of the largest buildings in the Mississippi Valley. At an earlier date Mr. Cole erected the first warehouse in Peoria on the site of old Fort Clark, about where the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Depot now is. Having sold out his distillery in 1862, he moved to his farm in East Peoria, where he spent the rest of his life in practical retirement and in looking after his large real-estate interests. Mr. Cole did much to develop the business and industrial interests of Peoria, and acquired a large estate, including much of the land between East Peoria and Pekin. For a time he was owner of the lower free-bridge across the Illinois, which he sold to the city for $30,000.

Mr. Cole was married at Pownall, Vermont, January 18, 1833, to Chloe M. Brown, of Cheshire, Massachusetts, who died February 19, 1882. Of this union nine children were born: Johnson L., Joseph Benton, Ellen Louisa, Benton, Charles Morton, Nicholas B., Almiran S., and Chloe M., of whom only Johnson L. and Almiran S. are still living. Mr. Cole was a member of the Masonic Fraternity and prominent in its councils.

JOHNSON LAFAYETTE COLE.

Johnson Lafayette Cole, son of Almiran S. and Chloe M. (Brown) Cole, was born in his father's native town of Cheshire, in Berkshire County, Massachusetts, January 19, 1834, and having been brought by his parents when two years of age to the then frontier village of Peoria, grew up here and has been identified with this city ever since. Mr. Cole is descended from English and Colonial ancestry, Hugh Cole, the founder of the American branch of the family, having come from England to Plymouth, Massachusetts, in 1632—twelve years after the founding of the Plymouth Colony. Here, in 1654, he married Mary Foxhall, and from this union is traced the following line of descendants in genealogical order: Benjamin Cole, born at Swansea, Massachusetts, in 1678; Israel Cole, born at the same place in 1709; Israel Cole (II.), born at Rehoboth, in the same State, in 1735; David Cole, born at Cheshire in 1781, and Almiran S. Cole, also born in the same place in 1805, and the immediate ancestor of the member of the family whose name heads this article (See Biographical Sketch of Almiran Smith Cole.) Hugh Cole, the original immigrant to America, was a man of consequence in his day, holding various important positions in connection with the Colonial Government, such as Deputy of the General Court, Selectman of his town, etc.

Johnson L. Cole came with his parents to Peoria in 1836, and was educated in the primary schools of that period. While still a youth his father engaged in the distilling business—being the first to embark in an industry which has since grown to such vast proportions in this city—and here the son found employment for his youthful energies, taking part in all sorts of work about the distilling plant. For two years previous to the sale of the distillery by his father in 1862, the younger Cole acted as general manager of the concern, thus acquiring a wide acquaintance with practical business affairs. During the War of the Rebellion, then in progress, he became an accountant in the office of the Provost Marshal at Peoria, remaining until the close of the war in 1865, when he accompanied Adjutant Norton to Jacksonville and assisted to close up the affairs of the office at that point. About 1868 he engaged himself as an accountant in the wholesale grocery establishment of S. H. Thompson, continuing until Mr. Thompson closed out his business in 1881. He then became associated as accountant with the banking house of Callender, Ayres & Co. (now the Commercial National), and has remained with the same through all its various changes to the present time. He has been tendered the office of Cashier in the bank with which he is connected—a position now occupied by one of his sons—but declined. Incidentally Mr. Cole has taken a deep interest in matters connected with the State militia, and won distinction as a drill-master. In politics he has always been a Republican; is a Thirty-second-degree Mason and Past Commander of the Knights Templar, having taken all the side degrees of the order.

Mr. Cole was married, for the first time, to Louisa A. Mason, daughter of William E. and Ann Mason, of Peoria, who bore him the following children: Lafayette Cole, now connected with a large tea-house at Yokahoma, Japan; Amie, died in infancy; Elwood Andrew, now Cashier of the Commercial National Bank, Peoria; William Edmund Mason, Cashier in Bank of Zell, Hotchkiss & Co.; Alice Thompson, died in infancy; Chauncey Guth, at present associated with the grocery firm of Jobst, Bethard & Co., and Thaddeus Elv, died in infancy. Mrs. Cole died June 4, 1876. Mr. Cole was married, a second time, to Mrs. Emma L. Harlow, of Peoria, who has three daughters: Mrs. Mary Beck-

RODERICK M. COLE.

Roderick M. Cole was born in Otsego County, New York, September 12, 1822. His father was Richard Cole, born March 12, 1785, in North Adams, Massachusetts, where he died in April, 1879. His mother, Emily Morgan, was born December, 1791, at Wilmington, Vermont, and died February 19, 1871. Roderick M. married Lydia A. Corliss, in Chicago, March 30, 1850. To them two children were born—Nellie A. and Roderick Corliss. The daughter died in infancy and the son at eighteen years of age, thus leaving Mr. and Mrs. Cole alone in their age.

The subject of this sketch came to Chicago in 1844, by the canal and lakes. He spent the winter there, and then removed to Plainfield, Will County, where he remained for two years. He then returned to New York, but finally came West again and occupied different positions in Aurora, Galena and at other places, and engaged in the business of taking daguerreotypes. Mrs. Cole assisted him in his business and was one of the first ladies to engage in work in the daguerreotype line. He opened a studio in Peoria, where he conducted the business for a number of years. Continuing in the business, he kept pace with the progress of that period, and finally succeeded in developing ambrotypes. In 1850, he purchased a farm of two hundred and seventeen acres, on the East Bluff, which he continued to occupy, conducting that business until 1884, when he removed into the city, and has since resided there, retired from active business. On March 30, 1900, Mr. and Mrs. Cole celebrated the golden anniversary of their wedding.

Mr. Cole received, as was usual in his day, only a common-school education. He early realized that the West afforded a better field for the energies of a young man than New England, and his success shows the wisdom and soundness of his judgment. His energy, his attention to business, and his skill enabled him to prosecute his business with success. His good judgment was also shown when he purchased the farm before alluded to, in the vicinity of Peoria. His home upon the farm for many years commanded a beautiful view of the Illinois Valley to the northeast, and the bluffs upon the eastern side of the river. It was a picturesque and delightful spot. The development of the city added to the value of the land, and the ownership of it placed Mr. and Mrs. Cole in very comfortable and independent circumstances. He has led a quiet, unostentatious life, has been always a man of the strictest integrity, and has commanded the respect and confidence of all with whom he has come in contact or been associated.

Mr. and Mrs. Cole have spent some time in travel, and, when not thus engaged, spend their time quietly and pleasantly in the city of Peoria, where they have, for several years, made their home, enjoying the respect of their neighbors and friends.

Mr. Cole is only an added illustration of the success attending the enterprising boy from New England and New York having the courage to settle in the undeveloped West. Rare instances only may be found of failure on the part of such men. His experience affords another illustration of the fact that attention to business, honesty, integrity and character are the guarantees of success.

JONATHAN K. COOPER.

Jonathan K. Cooper was a conspicuous member of the local bar for a number of years. He was not widely known outside of the vicinity of Peoria except to lawyers and those having business with the Supreme Court of the State. He was born near Shippensburg, Pennsylvania, November 9, 1814, and died at Peoria, Illinois, November 22, 1884. He came of Scotch ancestry, a race illustrious for the best civic and religious virtues, and one that has left its impress in the United States. His grandfather was an eminent divine and a patriot of the Revolution. His father was destined for the ministry, but was prevented from entering upon the discharge of the duties as such, by reason of a delicate constitution, although he became one of the finest classical scholars and teachers of his day. Mr. Cooper's primary and academic education was received from his father. He there laid the foundation of his fine literary taste and his accurate use of the English language. Before he was seventeen years of age, he entered the Freshman Class at Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, and graduated in 1835, the youngest of his class. After leaving College, Mr. Cooper spent a year or two in teaching and in literary pursuits, then entered a law-school connected with Dickinson College, at Carlisle, which was under the direction of Judge John Reed, a name eminent, in that day, in legal circles. The bar of Carlisle was also eminent, and, by association with its members, Mr. Cooper was greatly benefited in his legal studies. The two foremost lawyers of that time at the Pennsylvania bar, were Thaddeus Stevens, the great Commoner, and John Banister Gibson, Pennsylvania's greatest Chief Justice.

Mr. Cooper also inherited strong religious convictions. He was of a serious and thoughtful turn of mind; adopted the Presbyterian faith wholly, and lived up to it during his entire life. He was a sturdy defender of the faith, a conscientious and faithful attendant upon all the ministrations of the Church.

He was admitted to the bar, in 1839, and soon after that, came to Peoria, and commenced the practice of law, which he followed persistently and successfully, until his last illness prevented him from further labor.

He was a pains-taking, industrious, conscientious lawyer, never indulging in any of the tricks of the profession or tolerating with any patience any deviation from the path of the strictest integrity. He would win his suits, if the law and justice were upon his side. He would lose them, or have nothing to do with them, if dishonesty and trickery must be resorted to in order to win. He was a living illustration of the fact that there is no inconsistency between the highest integrity and manliness and the successful practice of the law.

Mr. Cooper was not a money-maker. During his whole life, he was reasonable in his charges for services, and based them upon what seemed to him principles of justice and equity. No man was more highly regarded in the profession, or by the court of last resort in this State.

He was an excellent and accurate scholar, and rarely misused the English language; was a great student; read much of general literature of the more serious kind, when not engaged in his professional duties. He was a man profoundly respected by all who knew him, for his scholarship, his ability as a lawyer, his integrity and his Christian character. He was recognized as a consistent, straightforward, high-minded Christian gentleman, with all that the term implies.

He married Sophia Rogers, who alone survives him. In his home he was genial and kindly, and thoroughly contented therewith. Few men pass more of their time, when not engaged in active duties, with their family than did Mr. Cooper. He was wedded to his wife and home, his church and his friends.

He was a Republican in politics, and an earnest, enthusiastic supporter of the Government, and opposed to everything that tended in any way to its injury. He served as Mayor of the city of Peoria, and took an interest in its politics and policy. When he died, the city lost a truly good man.

BERNARD CREMER.

No class of citizens have exerted a larger influence upon the development of Peoria than his newspaper men. Of those who have been longest and most influentially identified with the journalistic history of the city, no name stands more prominent than that of Bernard Cremer, though his business prominence has been by no means confined to journalism alone. Born in the celebrated city of Cologne (known as "The Pearl of the Rhine"), Germany, Mr. Cremer came with his parents to America in 1854, settling first in Wisconsin. In 1864 Mr. Cremer came to Peoria, and in conjunction with four of his brothers (three of whom still survive), took charge of the "Peoria Demokrat," with which he has been associated as editor and business manager ever since. "The Demokrat" was established by Alois Zetz in 1860, and has long been recognized as the leading German paper in Central Illinois. This paper has probably had a more uniformly successful business career than any other paper of its class in the State, due largely to the conservative and business-like methods with which it has been conducted.

Among the important business enterprises with which Mr. Cremer has been prominently identified during his career in this city, have been the organization of the German Bank, since developed into the German-American National Bank of Peoria, one of the strongest financial institutions in the city, and of which he is now the President; the German Fire Insurance Company, organized in 1876, of which he is also the President; was also for a time a Director of the Merchants' National Bank, and, in 1886, assisted that institution to tide over a serious crisis in its affairs growing out of the depletion of its capital though embezzlement by a trusted employe. He was also one of the originators of the company which erected the Peoria Grand Opera House and, for a time, part owner of that building in which the office of "The Demokrat" is still located, and one of the first Board of Directors and investors in the National Hotel Company, which has furnished to Peoria its largest and most widely known house of public entertainment. In 1878 Mr. Cremer was elected as a Democrat to the lower branch of the Thirty-first General Assembly, and served on some of the most important committees in that body. Although absorbed in business interests, he has proved himself an important factor in party affairs. One of his most recent business enterprises has been the purchase for $100,000 of the Rouse's Hall property at the corner of Main Street and Jefferson Avenue, one of the most prominent business locations in the city, upon which he contemplates the erection of a magnificent stone and iron fire-proof building for store and office purposes, which will be one of the notable business structures of the city. As a citizen and business man, Mr. Cremer has established a reputation for courtesy and geniality which has secured for him wide popularity among all classes of citizens.

AQUILLA JOHN DAUGHERTY.

Aquilla John Daugherty was born on a farm near Hamilton, Ohio, December 6, 1842, the son of James Daugherty, his mother's maiden name being Elizabeth Doty. The father was a cooper by trade and a farmer, who became prominent in the affairs of the county, and, having removed to Hamilton, at a later period became Mayor of that city and finally Auditor of the county. James Daugherty was born in 1814, and his father, John Daugherty, was a soldier of the War of 1812-14—his wife being Esther (Ward) Daugherty. The paternal branch of the family came over to Maryland with Lord Baltimore—the name then being spelled "Dougherty"—while Elizabeth Doty was descended from Edward Doty, one of the band of Pilgrims who came to Plymouth in the Mayflower in 1620. Her father was Zina Doty, the son of John Doty, whose descendants bore a prominent part in the settlement of the Miami Valley at an early day. From the last named, the ancestry of the Doty family was traced through Joseph to Samuel, and then to Edward, the Mayflower emigrant already mentioned.

Aquilla J. Daugherty was educated at Hamilton, and at Miami University, at Oxford in his native State. His ambition was to qualify himself for the practice of law, but his father's failure in business compelled him to seek employment for support and, for a time, he suffered many discouragements and hardships. He began work on the "Ohio State Journal" at Columbus, later was employed upon the "Cincinnati Commercial," but soon after accepted a position as war correspondent with George D. Prentice of the "Louisville Journal," being also associated in the same capacity at different times during the progress of the war with the "Cincinnati Enquirer" and the "Cincinnati Gazette." His letters were published over the nom-de-plume of "Quill." While at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, a bitter criticism of General Rosecrans over this signature appeared in the Louisville paper, and Mr. Daugherty was arrested as its author; but Mr. Prentice secured his release by showing that a certain Colonel was the real author. The latter was cashiered and discharged from the army, while Daugherty was granted special privileges which had been previously denied him. On another occasion General Logan ordered his arrest for criticising certain army officials for dishonorable practices. When General Grant assumed command at Chattanooga, he sent for Mr. Daugherty, asked him many questions about his observations and experiences, complimented him and finally gave him a pass which read: "Pass the bearer, A. J. Daugherty, correspondent of the Louisville Journal, within and without the lines of all the armies, free of charge for himself and horse, on all railroads and steamboats under military control." This was prized very highly as the most liberal pass ever granted to a newspaper correspondent in that Department. When arrested by order of General Logan, Mr. Daugherty exhibited this pass to the General, and asked that the charges against him be investigated before excluding him from the army. This was done with the result that Mr. Daugherty was completely exonerated. General Logan afterwards invited him to his home and headquarters; the invitation was accepted and Mr. Daugherty remained in close touch with General Logan up to the close of the war. Mr. Daugherty was with Rosecrans at the battle of Chickamauga and witnessed the struggle of Thomas to hold the enemy in check during the desperate siege which followed; went with Grant from Chattanooga to Atlanta, reporting all the battles and movements; returned to Nashville and saw Thomas crush out Hood; accompanied Sherman though Georgia and the Carolinas on "The March to the Sea," and finally witnessed the grand review at Washington which marked the termination of the war.

The war ended, Mr. Daugherty was connected for some time with the Indianapolis Journal, taught school for five years in Hancock County, served on the Board of Supervisors, was an unsuccessful candidate for Sheriff, though running far ahead of his ticket, and in 1875 became stenographer for the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw (now the Toledo, Peoria & Western) Railway Company, remaining in connection with the road some fifteen years, and in that time holding many responsible positions in the railway and fast-freight line service. In 1889 he was appointed United States Consul at Callao, Peru. Four years later he engaged in the grain business in Peoria, was a Republican candidate for Congress in 1894, but later was elected to the Illinois House of Representatives and re-elected in 1896. In 1898 he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fifth (Illinois) Internal Revenue District, serving until his death, which occurred in Peoria, July 24, 1901, as the result of a stroke of paralysis from which he suffered on January 21st previous.

In 1876, Mr. Daugherty was married to Margaret E. Crawford, one daughter Willa C., being born of this union, who died in infancy. His wife died in 1881, and ten years later he was married to Miss Jennie Loosley Plahn, of Beardstown, and leaves a son, Hale Plahn Daugherty, born at Callao, Peru, September 15, 1892. Mr. Daugherty was prominent in social affairs, a wide and thoughtful reader on all current subjects, and in public life a faithful, efficient and trustworthy public officer.

EZEKIEL DAY.

Ezekiel Day, one of Peoria's prominent business men of the last half century, was born at Butler, Pennsylvania, August 4, 1805, the son of Daniel and Mary Day. His paternal ancestors were among the early settlers of Plymouth Colony, of whom three brothers came to America, one finally settling in New Jersey. From the latter branch of the family Mr. Day was descended. After receiving a common-school education he learned the trade of manufacturer of tobacco at Pittsburg, later on establishing a factory of his own, which he conducted for a number of years. He also became the owner of a passenger steamer, which was engaged in the trade between Pittsburg and Cincinnati. After continuing in the tobacco trade, which he conducted successfully for many years, and during which he accumulated a snug fortune, he retired. Being a man of active, vigorous temperament, he soon grew restless and dissatisfied with a life of inactivity, and, a few years later, engaged in the iron manufacturing business in Venango County, Pennsylvania. This proved a lucrative and prosperous business under the operation of the protective tariff of that period; but when, under the administration of President Buchanan, the tariff laws were modified in the direction of free-trade, the change, for the time being, proved disastrous to the iron industry, and Mr. Day suffered with the rest. After losing a large amount of money in the effort to keep his establishment in operation, he was compelled to abandon the business. In 1850 Mr. Day removed to Peoria and here resumed his old business as a tobacco manufacturer, which he continued until 1875, when he finally retired.

In politics Mr. Day was an ardent Republican and, during the war for the preservation of the Union, a zealous supporter of the policy of President Lincoln. In religious belief he adhered to the faith of his fathers, which was that of the Presbyterian Church.

On February 3, 1835, he was married at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, to Miss Elizabeth Gallaher. Dr. Thomas Burrell, the grandfather of Mrs. Day, established the first iron-works at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, and her mother started the first fire in the furnace, christening the works "The Cambria"—a name which has since become familiar as that of one of the most extensive establishment of its kind in the world. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Day, of whom four are still living, viz.: Dr. A. H. Day, now of Colorado; F. P. Day, of Omaha, Nebraska, where he is engaged in the coal business; William P. Day, President of the Day Carpet and Furniture Company of Peoria, and Josephine E., wife of William H. Day, Secretary and Treasurer of the same Company.

Mr. Day was a man of strong domestic feelings, and his life was devoted largely to the society of his family and to the promotion of their welfare and happiness. His death occurred February 23, 1893.

HENRY DETWEILLER.

Captain Henry Detweiller was born in Lorraine, then a Province of France, but now of Germany, on the 19th of June, 1825. He was a son of Christian and Catherine Shertz Detweiller, both natives of France. His father was engaged in farming, milling, and in the transportation business, in which he accumulated a fortune. He had three large estates situated in different parts of the Province, at which he was in the habit of entertaining the nobility, for weeks at a time, according to the custom of the day. He met with reverses, during the War of 1812 and '13, and died in 1832, a poor man.

In the spring of 1837, Capt Detweiller came to the United States, with his mother and three sisters, landing in New York, after a voyage of sixty-eight days. At the suggestion of an older brother, John, who had located in Peoria, in 1833, Captain Detweiller removed to that place. He was forty-two days on the journey from New York to Peoria, traveling from New York to Rochester, by boat; thence to Buffalo, by canal; thence by lake to Cleveland; from there to Cincinnati, by canal; thence by boat, down the Ohio and up the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers, to Peoria. His mother and one sister died during the following year. Peoria had, at that time, about twelve hundred inhabitants.

After coming to Peoria, Captain Detweiller attended school and clerked for his brother, who kept the St. Croix Tavern, on Water Street.—then the principal street of Peoria. He then clerked in the shoe-store of Charles W. McClellan, and afterwards, for Samuel Voris & Co., for the highly remunerative compensation of six dollars per month. The business of Peoria, with the outside world, at that time was chiefly transacted by water. Listening to the stories of steam-boat Captains, and the talk of John Frink, of the firm of Frink & Walker, the mail and stage contractors of that early day, he conceived a strong desire to become a pilot on the river. Mr. Frink gave him an opportunity to go aboard the steamer "Frontier," then running as a mail and passenger packet from Peoria to Peru. Through the kindness of Mr. Frink, the Captain instructed the young man in the trade of the river and the secret of running and operating the boats. He was soon appointed Second Pilot, and was upon the boat, when the Steamer Panama ran into and sunk the "Frontier" at the "Towhead" above "The Narrows." This occurred early on the morning of September 2, 1842, just after the "Frontier" had left the village of Little Detroit, then situated on the eastern shore of the river, but which has since entirely disappeared. By running the boat ashore at the "Towhead," the forty or fifty passengers on board escaped without the loss of a single life, but the hull of the "Frontier" still lies at the bottom of the river, where it sunk sixty years ago. The following year, the Company built a new steamer "Chicago," on which he shipped as Second Pilot, under his old instructor, and continued upon that boat until it was withdrawn from the river, in the spring of 1844. He continued in that position, on other boats for a year. In 1847, he was made Captain of the "Gov Briggs" then in the St. Louis and Alton trade. At that time, owing to the war with Mexico, the boat carried many troops and much equipment from Alton to Jefferson Barracks below St. Louis. In 1848 and '49, he was First Pilot on different boats. The latter year was remarkable for the epidemic of malignant cholera. St. Louis was afflicted, and hundreds were dying daily. People were leaving the city upon the boats, as rapidly as possible. Captain Detweiler continued at his post until one night, while taking the steamer "Danube" to St. Louis, through over-work and loss of sleep, he was suddenly stricken with cholera, and had just time to ring the stopping bells before he fell to the floor of the pilot-house. Fortunately, a pilot on the Mississippi was aboard the boat and took his place. Mr. Detweiler was removed to Peoria, but, for nine months or more, was unable to resume his duties. His Captain, at the time he was stricken, was seized with cholera the next trip, died and was buried at Pekin.

From 1850 to 1860, the river business between the North and South was immense. During these years, Mr. Detweiler acted in the different capacities of Pilot and Captain, on a number of boats upon the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers. In 1856, he became part owner of the Steamer "Movastar," and in 1857, became the sole owner of the Steamer "Minnesota." During his last years upon the river, he frequently had Abraham Lincoln as a passenger, and came to know him well. In 1862, he offered his services to the Government, and was sworn into the service, at St. Louis, and assigned to the command of the United States Steamer "Jenny Lind," and was ordered to Cairo, to await the arrival of the fleet with General Pope's troops aboard from Island No. 10. The "Jenny Lind" was detailed as dispatch boat to the flag-ship accompanying the fleet up the Tennessee River to Pittsburg landing. Later on, he was with the fleet at Memphis. In 1863, Captain Detweiler was transferred to the U. S. Steamer Yankee, of which he had charge until the close of the war, and was attached to the fleet at the fall of Vicksburg. While managing the Government transports, he performed a very important and often hazardous service. So great was the danger to which his boat was exposed during these perilous years, that Captain Detweiler was compelled to adopt various schemes to evade the enemy. His boat was sometimes disguised as a gun-boat. The Yankee was never seriously injured, although often fired upon. The last important service of his boat was to take a cargo of horses, mules and stores valued at $250,000 from St. Louis to New Orleans. The boat was fired upon, but the cargo was at length safely delivered in New Orleans. After the war, Captain Detweiler was in charge of the Steamer "Beaver," until he abandoned the river, in 1874, to give his attention exclusively to the ice business, in which he had engaged, establishing it, in 1870, in partnership with N. L. Woodruff. In December, 1876, he severed his connection with Mr. Woodruff, and has conducted the business, either in his own name or under the name of the Detweiler Ice Company ever since.

He married Magdalena Bachman, November 5, 1848, at the home of his sister, in Woodford County, Illinois. Mrs. Detweiler was also a native of France. Seven children were born to them, three of whom are still living: Thomas H., Amelia M. and Matilda E. Detweiler. Mrs. Detweiler died, December 10, 1888. Her death was a severe blow to her husband, as she had been in all respects, a helpmate. She was in her home, not only a devoted wife and mother, but a useful member of society, kindly, charitable and helpful to all who were in trouble or want. She was active in charitable work; connected with the Women's Christian Home Mission and with the Women's Relief Corps, and did her part in society and in the community.

Captain Detweiler's life has been a laborious one and beset with quite as many of the ordinary trials of life as fall to the lot of most men; yet through it all he has borne himself honorably and with characteristic geniality; never has allowed himself to be despondent, gloomy or hopeless, but in adversity, as well as prosperity, has maintained the same genial, pleasant, kindly character, endearing him to all with whom he has come in contact. As an evidence of the confidence of his fellow-citizens in his integrity, he was elected six times to the office of City Treasurer, without his seeking, and really against his personal desire.

He is a member of the Odd Fellows, and a charter member of Bryner Post 67, G. A. R., and was, for thirteen years, President of the Old Settlers' Association of Peoria.

He cast his first vote for General Taylor for President in 1848, and, since the organization of the Republican party, has been an ardent, earnest worker in that party, believing thoroughly in its principles.

During his residence of sixty-five years, he has seen the village of Peoria develop into a beautiful city of over 65,000 inhabitants, and he has, during all these years, contributed his full part to the growth of the city. It may be said of him, as of very few men, that he is not known to have an enemy in the city of Peoria, or any one who entertains aught but the kindest sentiments towards him. This has resulted from his genial, kindly disposition, and his efforts to help rather than mar the fortunes of any man or woman. If there were more like him, it would be better for the community, for the city, for the State. He is a man of decided character, strong convictions, but willing that other men shall enjoy the same right and freedom of thought and act which he claims for himself. The thought of entertaining malice never has entered his mind. He has never known what jealousy is over the prosperity of others, and it is as much his delight to see his friends, neighbors and acquaintances prosper as it is to prosper himself. Such evenly balanced characters are rare; and when we see them, we cannot refrain from expressing our appreciation of them and our commendation of the men or women who bear them.

VALENTINE DEWEIN.

Valentine Dewein, whose name is still familiar to many of the residents of Peoria, was born April 1, 1817, in Alsace-Lorraine, then a part of France, but now included in the German Confederation. His parents, Valentine and Margaret (Gold) Dewein, were natives of the same Province. They were descended from the French Huguenots, who located near the line to avoid persecution, and to enable them the more easily to escape, if persecution came.

Frederick Dewein, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was the first of the family to come to America. He came, made his home at Shippenburg, Pennsylvania, and later engaged in the manufacture of pearlsh at Chambersburg. Before coming to America he had been a Commissary in the Eastern Division of the French Army. His son, Valentine Dewein, Sr., served seven years in the army under Napoleon I. He came to America in 1830, locating at Baltimore, Maryland. Afterwards he removed to McConnellsburg, Bedford County, Pennsylvania, where he resided until 1834. He was a tailor by trade, but subsequently engaged in the manufacture of bagging.

The subject of this sketch was educated in his native land, and coming to America with his parents in 1830, began life here by working upon a farm in Pennsylvania. Subsequently he was apprenticed to a shoe-maker, and followed that trade for about thirty years. He then began dealing in leather, shoe-findings, saddlery hardware and harness ware, and continued in that business until 1883. He became a resident of Peoria in 1847, and engaged in the business last named here, with a good degree of success. By his energy, business sagacity, prudence and economy, he accumulated a fortune. He invested a considerable sum in the erection of a business block on South Adams Street, which still stands as an evidence of his interest in the city and his business foresight, it being now one of the most valuable pieces of property in the city.

Mr. Dewein was interested in the construction of the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad, which he promoted and encouraged with his time and money. He was always interested in the building up of the city, had great faith in its future, and was willing to put all of his savings into property located within its borders. He was public-spirited, took an interest in politics only so far as related to the choice of men, particularly in municipal and State affairs. His political acts were controlled more by his knowledge of men and his interest in securing the best men, than from any political influence or bias. He was an ardent Union man during the War of the Rebellion, and did what he could to aid the Union cause and alleviate the suffering of the soldiers in the field. He was a member of the City Council, for some years, and for nine years was Director in the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway Company, and was subsequently Secretary and Treasurer of the Peoria & Rock Island Railway Company.

In August, 1845, he married Margaret Shafer, who was born near Strasburg, Germany. They had seven children, only one of them surviving.—Louis K. Dewein, of Peoria.

Mr. Dewein was an added illustration of the value of strict business integrity in the management of his affairs. He was never niggardly, mean or parsimonious, but was careful, prudent, economical in business affairs, and always lived within his income, whether great or small. He never had any desire, apparently, to make a show of his wealth, but used it for the upbuilding of the city, and for the comfort of himself and family. He enjoyed the respect of all who knew him, and the confidence of all dealing with him, at any time. He died, February 19, 1891. Margaret Dewein, his wife, died April 13, 1899.

NEWTON CHARLES DOUGHERTY.

In this day of marvelous material developments, our attention is very largely directed to the men prominent in business, manufacturing and commerce. Their connection with the business world keeps them prominently before the public. So many are actively engaged in the accumulation of vast fortunes and in developing the industries through and by means of which fortunes are accumulated, that the public attention is drawn away from men who are actively and usefully engaged in the things of the mind and the heart, the higher and better things of life. The public is very apt to forget, or at least temporarily overlook, the fact that to the men of this latter class primarily belongs the credit of laying the foundation for the marvelous material prosperity that our country is enjoying. Men of that class do their work with very little outward display and but little to arrest and fix the attention of the masses, and hence oftentimes their importance is overlooked. By so much as the things of the mind and heart, of character and life, are above mere material prosperity, so are these educators of greater importance than the mere men of force. Newton Charles Dougherty belongs to the class of educators of this higher grade referred to, and, at the same time, combines it with real business capacity. Hence he is a power in the city of his adoption, beyond that of a mere business man, and also in a larger degree than a mere educator of children.

Mr. Dougherty was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, January 10, 1847. He was the youngest son and child of Philip and Hattie (Perry) Dougherty, both natives of Chester County. His father was of Scotch-Irish extraction and his mother was of English descent. The boyhood of Mr. Dougherty was passed in the usual manner of a farmer's son, his studies being prosecuted in the district schools, until he was fourteen years of age. He then entered Newark Academy and, six months later, became a student in the State Normal school in Millersville, Pennsylvania, where he prepared for college. Entering college in 1864, he graduated in 1868. Subsequently he received the degree of Ph. D. from Knox College, and LL. D. from Wesleyan University.

He came to Illinois in 1869 as the Principal of the schools in Morris, Grundy County. He went from Morris to Mt. Morris, in Ogle County, where he became Principal of the Rock River Seminary, one of the oldest institutions in the State. It has graduated many men of talent, ability and prominence in politics, among whom are Senators Cullom and Farwell, Ex-Governor Beveridge, Hon. R. R. Hitt, and the Hon. John A. Rawlins, at one time chief of General Grant's staff. In 1878 Mr. Dougherty accepted a call to become Superintendent of the Peoria schools. The schools under his supervision immediately began to improve and soon were reduced to a system ranking them among the best of the graded schools of the State. Mr. Dougherty, with his characteristic energy, broad scholarship and genial manners, commended himself to the Board and to the teachers, and such has been his success that the thought of any successor is never entertained by the Board. Mr. Dougherty occupies a very prominent position in the educational forces of the United States. Perhaps no man is better known, and his influence and counsel are sought in educational matters, not only in this State, but throughout the country. He has been President of the National Educational Association and has been actively identified with the development of educational institutions of the State of Illinois.

Mr. Dougherty is a good business man as well as a popular and successful educator. He is President of the Peoria National Bank, one of the oldest banks in the city.

Mr. Dougherty was married, December 25, 1871, to Anna Edwards, a daughter of Richard Edwards, now of Bloomington, Illinois. Her father, as all Illinoisians know, has been one of the prominent and efficient factors in the development, progress and success of educational institutions in the State of Illinois. He was President of the Illinois State Normal University and State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dougherty: Mabel E., Horace R. and Ralph L., all of whom are college graduates. Miss Mabel is Assistant Instructor in English in the Bradley Polytechnic Institute. Horace is at present Vice-President and Manager of the Title and Trust Company in Peoria, and Ralph L. is taking a law course at Harvard University.

EDWARD S. EASTON.

Edward S. Easton was born at Zanesville, Ohio, April 20, 1842, and died at Peoria, Illinois, Feb. 21, 1901. He was the second son of Samuel E. and Hettie Oliver Easton.

Samuel Easton came to Peoria with his family June 20, 1846. His occupation, for many years, was that of a grain dealer. He died January 3, 1874. Hettie Oliver Easton outlived her husband many years. Always a prominent worker in various charitable organizations, sorrow and destitution found in her the prompt aid and sympathy that endeared her to all.

Edward S. Easton had only a common school education. Early in life he was possessed of a determination to become an active business man, and he felt the time given to acquiring a higher education wasted for his purposes. The commencement of his business ventures was as a train-boy on one of the first passenger trains coming into Peoria. In this occupation he soon developed his strong business instincts and keen ability. He saw in a short time this field was too narrow for him, so he gave it up and commenced buying grain. Nearly all the grain coming into Peoria was brought in wagons. There being no elevators, the grain was sold upon the streets. The buyers were often numerous and the competition naturally great. Mr. Easton's occupation was now congenial and he grew with the growth of the city. He built the Phoenix Elevator and Elevator "A."

He formed a partnership with Franklin Hall under the firm name of E. S. Easton & Co. This partnership continued until his death, doing an immense business. They built the Central City Elevator, owning a large part of its stock. They were the purchasing agents for several Distilling Companies and also for the Glucose Company for several years. Mr. Easton was instrumental in inducing the Glucose Company to locate in Peoria. He was active in the establishment of the Board of Trade (of which he was President in 1877) and in the erection of the Chamber of Commerce Building. He was a stockholder in the Central Street Railway Company, and one of the promoters of the Peoria Terminal Railway, of which he was also President.

All of his business ventures were conducted in a very successful manner and with great profit. A portion of the money which he so rapidly accumulated was invested in his usual judicious manner in Peoria city real estate, and its increase alone made him a wealthy man.

He chose one of the most beautiful and valuable sites in Peoria, situated on the brow of the West Bluff, and erected thereon a magnificent home for his family, reserving a large piece of ground to add to the beauty and comfort of his home. He bought all the surrounding land and put up a large number of handsome tenement houses in order that nothing should detract from the value of the home. He owned a large number of fine business houses and tenements in various parts of the city, and a large and valuable stock farm lying close to Peoria.

He was a thorough Republican in politics, and twice was in the City Council,—from 1884 to 1889, and again in 1892 and 1893. During each period he served the city with energy and fidelity. He was Presidential Elector upon the Republican ticket in 1896. At the time of his death he was one of the Trustees of the Asylum for Incurable Insane at Bartonville, near Peoria.

Although but a youth at the breaking out of the Civil War, Mr. Easton was one of the first to enlist, but was not accepted at that time because he lacked the requisite height; subsequently, however, he joined Company G. of the Sixty-seventh Illinois Volunteers. At the time of his death he was a member of Bryner Post, No. 67, Grand Army of the Republic.

He was married on February 3, 1864, to Sarah D. Hall, who survives him and to whom he willed most of his large estate. Three children were born of this marriage: Charles Samuel, George Blakely, and Edna Sarah. The two sons survive but the daughter died in infancy.

Mr. Easton and his wife, as a memorial to this little daughter, erected a substantial brick structure upon the spot where their early home stood, to be used as a home for working girls and women. This was conducted for some time, but not proving all that was desired in reaching the most needy, the property was sold and the proceeds donated to the Women's Christian Home Mission.

Mr. Easton was always a most liberal contributor to and supporter of charitable institutions and charities in Peoria, the city in whose future he had so much confidence and whose business interests, by his unlimited investments coupled with his great energy and remarkable foresight, he was constantly developing.

GEORGE FRANCIS EMERSON.

George Francis Emerson, wholesale dealer in heavy hardware, was born in Morton, Tazewell County, Illinois, April 4, 1847, the son of Enoch G. and Harriet P. (Waters) Emerson. His parents were both natives of New England, his father having been born at Rochester, Vermont, April 19, 1812, and his mother at Lebanon, New Hampshire, October 22, 1815. They came to Sangamon County, Illinois, in 1834, in company with a colony expecting to locate there, but being disappointed in securing a satisfactory location as to lands, removed to Tazewell County during the following year, where they remained until March, 1865, when they came to Peoria.

Mr. Emerson was educated in the common schools of his native county and lived upon a farm until March, 1865, when he came to Peoria, and having taken a course in the Worthington, Warner & Cole's Commercial College, in the following fall he became assistant book-keeper for D. C. Farrell, later for two years (1866-67) occupying the position of book-keeper for the firm of C. L. Bobb & Co. On June 15, 1868, he entered into the employment as book-keeper of the firm of Cummings & Stone, wholesale dealers in heavy hardware, and has been engaged in this business ever since. Mr. Stone, having sold out his interest in the establishment to his partner, Mr. Cummings, retired, the business being conducted by the latter alone for the next two years, when, on February 1, 1872, Mr. Emerson was admitted to partnership in the concern under the firm name of Cummings & Emerson. Mr. Cummings died January 25, 1878, and from that date—a period of twenty-four years—the business has been under the sole management of Mr. Emerson. In the meantime, the interest of Mr. Cummings remained under the control of his widow until her decease, which occurred in 1896, when it passed into the hands of their heirs. Early in the following year (March, 1897) the concern was formally incorporated under the original firm name of Cummings & Emerson, under which the business has been since conducted, with Mr. Emerson in the position of President and Manager. The business of the concern has had a steady growth since its establishment in 1867, and was never more prosperous than at the present time. It now keeps one of the most complete and extensive stocks in its line in the country, and is widely known as one of the most progressive and enterprising houses in the branch of trade to which it belongs.

Mr. Emerson was married on November 7, 1871, to Miss Harriet C. Woodruff, daughter of Nelson L. and Mary A. Woodruff, of Peoria, and they have had four children: Ada, Frank Nelson, George W. and Grace W. Ada died in infancy, and George W. at five and a half years of age. Frank N. Emerson, the only remaining son, graduated from Princeton University and the Institute of Technology in Boston, Massachusetts, and is now pursuing his profession as an architect in the city of Chicago.

In religious faith and affiliation Mr. Emerson is a Presbyterian without sectarian prejudices. While an earnest Republican, politically, he is in no sense a seeker for office, preferring to devote his time and energies to his business and the interests of his family, without neglecting his duty to the community in which, for over thirty-five years, he has made his home.

HARRY VICTOR FINKELSTEIN.

Harry Victor Finkelstein, at present at the head of a large and growing trade in Peoria, which has been built up by his individual industry and enterprise, is the son of Solomon and Sarah (Fliegel) Finkelstein, born in his parents' native land (Germany) July 4, 1865. In 1868 he was brought by his parents to America, and, at the age of fifteen years, engaged in the iron business. For some six years he was employed as a traveling purchasing agent by a firm at Brazil, Indiana, making his headquarters in the meantime at Indianapolis. He afterwards engaged in business for himself, and, desiring to enlarge the field of his operations, he came to Peoria in 1892, where he entered upon his present line of business as a dealer in new and second-hand machinery, which, in the past ten years, has grown to very large proportions. In many respects Mr. Finkelstein's business is as unique in character as it is remunerative in results. He deals in everything in the line of machinery, pipes, belting, etc., and buys, sells or exchanges each of these as may suit his customers. He also does a general wreckage business—some of his work in this line having been the demolition of about a dozen large distilleries and other large establishments. He has bought several complete street-car lines, and was the purchaser of all the steel from the Intramural Electric Railroad around the World's Fair Grounds—out of which the original Prospect Heights line in Peoria was constructed—and purchased the locomotives for the same road. In fact, he is a versatile bargainer and has systematized the proclivities of his early days of "swapping" until, in his present capacity, he buys and sells almost anything from a rat-trap to a railroad line. One of his recent purchases has been that of the Wesley City coal mines, which he has operated most successfully. He also realized a handsome profit on the rise in iron, as he had a large quantity of that commodity on hand at the time of its advance in price. Besides giving personal direction to his business, he has six traveling representatives upon the road, who cover a large extent of territory looking out for bargains.

Mr. Finkelstein received his education in the common schools, is a Hebrew in religious faith and a Republican in politics. Fraternally he is a member of the order of Free Masons, of the Knights of Pythias, of Foresters, and Woodmen of America. On the 11th of January, 1886, he was married to Miss Lenora Greenberg at Cleveland, Ohio, with whom he enjoys a delightful home at 1109 North Madison Avenue, Peoria.

JOHN HARRISON FRANCIS.

Among those who have been prominently identified with the business history of Peoria, none have had a more active and energetic life than Mr. John H. Francis, whose lamented death occurred on July 5, 1902. Mr. Francis was born in Lexington, Kentucky, in 1829. He was the son of Litelbury and Mary (Hubbard) Francis, who were natives of that State and were descendants of pioneer settlers of that region. When a boy, his parents removed to Dearborn County, Indiana, where he assisted his father on the farm, and in the meantime attended the country school.

In 1851 Mr. Francis came to Peoria, on horseback, and found employment in the cooperage business, which he followed for the next six or seven years. Afterwards he formed a partnership with the late James McCall, and erected an establishment of their own. He continued in this business until the year 1861, when he bought an interest in the firm of Moss, Bradley & Company, where he remained until the fire destroyed the plant in 1876. Mr. Francis advocated the feasibility of building a large distillery, and, against the protest of his partners, they erected the first large distillery in the United States, which was known as the Zell, Francis & Company Distillery. Having established the fact that a large plant could be operated successfully, he sold his interest in this firm and associated himself with Kidd, Francis & Company, for the purpose of erecting and conducting the Monarch Distillery, which, on its completion, was regarded as the most extensive establishment of its kind in the world. At a later date Mr. Francis was a leading factor in the organization of the first Great Western Distilling Company, whose works now justly rank as the largest in the city of Peoria. He also reorganized and rebuilt the Spurck & Francis plant and operated the same until 1887, when the Distilling and Cattle Feeding Company was formed. He was one of the first board of directors of this organization, and as long as he filled this position the trust flourished and all connected with it made their fortunes.

Among the other important business enterprises with which Mr. Francis was identified are the First National Bank of Peoria, of which he was a director for many years, and he was also a stockholder in the German-American National Bank. In 1875 he was Vice-President of the Peoria Board of Trade.

For eight years Mr. Francis served as a member of the City Council. Twenty-five years ago he was the chairman of the Council committee which was chosen to construct the Water Works for the city, and the old works on the bank of the river owed its existence to him. He was also a stockholder and director of the Adams Street Railway, with which he was associated for many years.

While not a partisan, Mr. Francis was regarded as a conservative Republican on national issues. When the Park Commission was organized he was unanimously placed at the head of it and elected its first president, and so ably did he manage its affairs that in less than two years the rugged hills of "Birket's Hollow" were transformed into the beautiful "Glen Oak Park" and dedicated to the city.

Mr. Francis was an upright and honorable citizen, public-spirited and enterprising, and imbued with full faith in the progressive future of Peoria. No man was more warmly esteemed or more highly appreciated. Always pleasant, affable, open-handed and generous with his means, he assisted to the extent of his ability, his relatives and friends, and his unfailing good nature has been shown in all his relations in life. He erected and furnished four handsome residences, three in Peoria and one in the city of Minneapolis, one of which he gave to each of his two sons and two daughters. He also furnished $50,000 for the establishment of the firm of J. C. Wynd & Company, which was composed of Mr. Francis' three sons and Mr. J. C. Wynd, each of whom owned a one-quarter interest.

Mr. Francis was twice married, his first wife being Miss Harriet Ingle, of Peoria, who died in 1872, leaving five children: John H., William E., Harriet, Josephine and Bruce. In 1873 he married Miss Mary Ingle, both ladies being daughters of William Howard and Mary (Chastain) Ingle, of Virginia. By this marriage there is one daughter, Maud Ingle Francis, now the wife of Thomas Colston Kinney, formerly of the State of Virginia, now of New York City.

HENRY NICHOLAS FREDERICK.

Henry Nicholas Frederick, late head of the saddlery and harness manufacturing establishment of H. N. Frederick & Sons, was a native of Germany, born in what was then known as the free city of Frankfort-on-the-Main, June 5, 1827. In his fifth year he began to attend school in his native city, and, by the time he was seven years old, had learned to read, write and cipher, and draw crayon sketches. About this time (in the summer of 1834) his father, John Jacob Frederick, emigrated to the United States, embarking with his family at Bremen on board a sailing vessel which passed around the north coast of Scotland on account of the difficulty of navigating the English Channel in the face of contrary winds. This was before the day of steam-vessels, and Mr. Frederick, through his life, retained a vivid recollection of the long voyage to New York and the conditions then existing there. He remembered the arrival there of the first steamer from Liverpool, and was accustomed to relate reminiscences of the hard times of 1837, when his father, although a mechanic, worked at fifty cents a day in grading the streets of Newark, New Jersey, where he had first settled with his family. Communication at this time between Jersey City and Newark was made by cars drawn by horses on a railroad track constructed of the old-style strap rail. The placing of a little locomotive upon the track, which was regarded as a dangerous experiment in view of the possibility of the train being set on fire by sparks from the engine, was an important event. Some forty years later Mr. Frederick visited a daughter then living in Brooklyn, and, while traveling over the line to Newark, witnessed some of the wonderful changes that had been wrought since his boyhood.

In his boyhood Mr. Frederick worked with his father in a saddle factory, helping stitch saddle-bags for the Southern market, and thus obtained an insight into what afterwards became his life business. After a brief stay in New Jersey the family removed west by way of the Hudson River to Albany, thence to Buffalo by canal, and to Cleveland, Ohio, by lake steamer, finally locating in Columbiana County, Ohio, where the younger members of the family enjoyed the life peculiar to that region. In 1838 another removal was made by boat down the Ohio to Louisville, Kentucky, where they were initiated into the mysteries of chills and fever and bilious fever. Here Mr. Frederick saw something of the "hard cider" campaign of "Tippecanoe and Tyler, too," in 1840, which resulted in the election of William Henry Harrison to the Presidency. In 1841 there was still another removal to St. Louis, Missouri, and soon after to the vicinity of Lebanon, in St. Clair County, Illinois, where the family settled down and tried farming for a time, though not with marked success, as hard times and chills and fever still followed them. The flood in the Mississippi of 1844 and the Mexican War of 1846-48 were incidents of this period. During the latter, which improved the times somewhat, Mr. Frederick served an apprenticeship in the saddlery business at St. Louis, though he did not make much money.

In 1849 Mr. Frederick came to Peoria, and soon after engaged in the saddlery and harness trade, in which he built up a large and prosperous business. His parents also resided here until their death. At different periods he had various partners, in later years the partnership consisting of himself and his sons. In 1895 the company was incorporated under the State law, their place of business at 324 South Adams Street remaining unchanged for some thirty-five years. In politics Mr. Frederick was an ardent Democrat and served his ward as Alderman several terms; was a member of the School Board a number of times, and a charter member of Schiller Lodge, A. F. & A. M. He took a decided interest in horse-racing, and was a stock-holder in the Peoria race-track; was also a stockholder in the Illinois National Bank, and an energetic business man and public-spirited citizen.

While a resident of Peoria Mr. Frederick was married twice—his first wife bearing him ten children and his second five. Of these two branches of his family eleven are still living, two having died in infancy and two in later years. He also had fourteen grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. His death occurred November 19, 1901, in the seventy-fifth year of his age, of which over fifty years had been spent in the city of Peoria.

VOLNEY H. FREEMAN.

Volney H. Freeman was born in the town of Glenville, in Schenectady County, and State of New York. His parents were farmers who lived about three miles west of Schenectady on the Sacandagua Turnpike, where he was born and where he lived with his parents until in the twentieth year of his age, when he left the parental home and commenced to teach a country school in the county. This was in the year A. D. 1844. This occupation he continued for seven years, his last term having been completed in the town of Farmington, State of Illinois, at the expiration of which he was married to Miss Sarah A. Dixon, of Harkness Grove. They immediately commenced farming, continuing for three years, when they sold their farm and immediately engaged in the manufacture and sale of saddlery and harness in Peoria, in the store-room purchased from the late Thomas Dobbins of that city. After continuing this business for six years he added to it the auction business, conducting both for one year, when he discontinued the harness store and built a store on South Washington Street, in which he continued dealing in general merchandise and real estate, and conducted an auction business for twenty-five years. Then, having discontinued the auction business, he ran a shoe store for five years, when he commenced the publication of his "Book of Poems," of which ten thousand copies were issued, and mostly sold at the present time. He is now conducting a real-estate office, in which he loans money, buys and sells real estate, and attends to the general supervision and management of his large number of stores, dwellings, lands, etc.

Mr. Freeman is a man of great energy and singleness of purpose. He has been eminently successful in all business undertaken by him. He is still active and energetic, devoting himself exclusively to the management of his large interests, and is deeply interested in everything that pertains to the advancement and prosperity of Peoria. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman now live at No. 1413 Perry Avenue. They have had two sons born unto them, neither of whom is now living. Mr. Freeman is now in his seventy-eighth year.

ALT GERDES.

Alt Gerdes, for many years one of the best known grain commission merchants in Peoria, was a native of Germany, born at Ochtersum, Amt Essens, in Ostfriesland, January 5, 1836. His father was a "Landsguts Besitzer" (landed proprietor), as also was his paternal grandfather. His parents having died during his childhood, he was reared by his grandparents on his father's side. His childhood was spent, for the most part, in the country. After completing a primary course in the public schools of his native place, he spent some time under the instruction of a private tutor in preparation for college, in the meantime being interested for a year or so in the lumber business at Essens and Wittmund. In 1856 he entered the Mercantile College at Osnabruck, from which he finally graduated. He spent the year 1864 in travel and in the cities of Antwerp, Cambray and Paris, and in Belgium, perfecting his study of the languages, especially the French. Instead of serving in person in the German army he procured a substitute. In October, 1865, he arrived in New York City and soon engaged in teaching French and German, but a few months later accepted a position as book-keeper with Messrs. Frazer & Co., of Peoria, becoming a resident of this city about the beginning of 1866. Compelled by illness to relinquish his situation with Frazer & Co., he taught school in Washington, Tazewell County, during the following summer, but later returned to Peoria to assume the position of book-keeper for Valentine Jobst. In 1867 he became identified with the insurance business, and traveled extensively through Illinois and Iowa as a special and general agent. Having established an association with an office in New York in 1868, he opened a fire and life insurance agency in Peoria, which he conducted until the date of the Chicago fire of 1871, which proved disastrous to so many insurance companies of the country. He then established himself in the grain business in Peoria, in which he continued over twenty years.

On January 19, 1893, Mr. Gerdes was appointed by Governor Altgeld Canal Commissioner for the superintendence of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, and, during his incumbency of four years, served as President of the Board. Soon after his retirement from the Canal Commission in 1897, he was elected City Treasurer of Peoria on the Democratic ticket, but died on July 2, 1897, after having been in office for a period of two months.

For a number of years Mr. Gerdes was President of the German-English School Verein, and Chairman of the Committee on Teachers; was also President, for two terms, of the Peoria Turn Verein, of which he had been a member during almost the entire period of his residence in the city. In politics he was a Democrat, and his religious views were defined as "liberal." He was discriminating but liberal in his dealings with charitable enterprises.

Mr. Gerdes was married on December 4, 1874, to Miss Katharine Kastner, a descendant of an old Bourbon family, one of whose ancestors, George Peter Kastner, was an officer of the First Napoleon. Mr. and Mrs. Gerdes became the parents of six children, four of whom (three sons and a daughter) are living, two sons having died in infancy.

EBERHARD GODEL.

Eberhard Godel was born in Feuerbach, Württemberg, Germany, May 26, 1836. Mr. Godel came with his mother and younger sister to America in 1850. He was for four years apprenticed to a hatter, learning the trade. In 1854 he came to Peoria with his mother and sister and learned the trade of a butcher, as it was then called, as the business at that time was conducted very differently from the present. He continued with Charles Breier in that business for about two years. He then removed to Burlington, Iowa, and engaged in the business of slaughtering and vending meat. From there he went to Monmouth, Illinois, in 1857, engaging in the same business, and in May, 1858, removed to Peoria.

After returning to Peoria he engaged in the business of buying and selling stock for about nine years, in which business he was successful and accumulated a sufficient amount to establish him well in business. In 1867 he bought an interest in the firm of Ullman & Gebhardt. The firm then became Godel & Gebhardt. Mr. Godel purchased his partner's interest in the business in 1877, and from that time enlarged and added to it, establishing a pork-packing business in connection with his business of slaughtering and vending meats.

In 1882 his son, George G., entered into partnership with him, the firm name being changed to E. Godel & Son. In 1885 Frank G. Godel also became a member of the firm, the business being conducted thereafter as E. Godel & Sons, which was incorporated in 1888. Frank G. Godel is now the only male representative of the family connected with the firm. Mr. Godel was a success in his chosen business and became the leading slaughterer and vendor of meats in the city of Peoria, and so continued for many years. He was fairly successful in his business and accumulated a fair fortune, which, with his good name, he left to his family as their inheritance.

In 1882 Mr. Godel built a brick block on North Adams Street which bears his name, and in which the office and retail department of the business is located. He was recognized as an authority in his business, and always regarded as an honorable, upright, honest dealer. He was a temperate, industrious man and a consistent member of the Methodist Church.

In politics he was a Republican. On June 8, 1857, he was married at Burlington, Iowa, to Elizabeth Renz, who was born September 15, 1832, in Liverpool, Perry County, Pennsylvania. Her father John Renz, was born in Schoendorf, Wurtemberg, Germany, June 9, 1782, came to Peoria in 1858 and died the same year. Her mother, Mary Elizabeth (Smith) Renz, was born in Liverpool, Perry County, Pennsylvania, September 12, 1804, came to Peoria in 1858 and died in 1880. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Godel: George G. (deceased), Frank G., Henry (deceased), Henry E., Albert (deceased), Theodore A. and Louisa. Frank G. Godel married Amelia Thieme in Peoria, in 1883. Six children have been born to them: Walter, Edna, Emma, Olga, Alma and Martha deceased.

Eberhard Godel was killed in the Chatsworth wreck, which occurred on the 10th of August, 1887. Mr. Godel was a man of quiet, unostentatious manners, diligent in business, a faithful, devoted friend, honorable and upright in all his dealings. He left an example worthy to be followed by his family, who have so far followed closely in the footsteps of the father.

THOMAS NICHOLAS GORMAN.

During the many years of his association with the Peoria Gas-Light & Coke Company Mr. Gorman has demonstrated a particular fitness for the position which he now holds as resident manager, and, furthermore, his career serves to refute the almost universally accepted belief that the political official maintains his position for individual gain, rather than for any strenuous effort toward general municipal improvement. A natural kinship may, in a measure, account for the disinterested desire to serve the city of Peoria, for Mr. Gorman has lived here since his sixth year, although he was born in Westville, Connecticut, December 5, 1862. His parents, John and Bridget Gorman, were descended from ancestors long represented in the Eastern States, and upon settling in Peoria the father devoted his energies to conducting a large retail grocery business, the successful management of which gave him prominence in the commercial field in his adopted city.

Thomas Nicholas Gorman was fortunate in his educational chances, for he not only attended the public schools but received supplementary training at the colleges of Saints Mary and Patrick. As a natural consequence, he learned a great deal about the grocery business while yet a boy, and, as the years went by, became of practical assistance to his father. A commendable understanding of the drift of his inclinations and the nature of his abilities resulted in a shifting from behind the counters of the grocery to the larger opportunities to be found in the office of the County Recorder, and this, in turn, was followed by his election in 1886-7 to membership in the City Council. So satisfactory were his services in this capacity and so thorough an understanding had he of the municipal needs that, in 1888, he was appointed Chief of Police by Mayor John Warner, and served for one term. In 1890 he became identified with the Peoria Gas-Light & Coke Company in the humble capacity of clerk, from which he was graduated at the end of four or five years to the greater responsibility of cashier. In the meantime he had made himself necessary to the company by reason of his ability and general worth, and it followed, as a natural consequence, that in 1900, when the stockholders disposed of their holdings to an Eastern Syndicate, Mr. Gorman, with years of faithful service behind him and a thorough understanding of the business in all its details, was appointed resident manager, which position he has since held with satisfaction to all concerned.

As a member of the City Council continuously since 1891 Mr. Gorman has won distinction because of his fearlessness and correct interpretation of the duties of the office. The people's confidence in his good judgment and common sense decisions is best shown by his repeated reelection, more especially as he is a man of force and determination, and knows no such influence as intimidation or undue persuasion. There are no neutral tendencies in his make-up, and he is one of the most aggressive and forceful members of the Council, his stand upon any given question being readily foretold, as far as the best interests of the people are concerned. Perhaps the most radical and important change brought about, through his untiring exertions and clear exposition of the justice of his claims, is the eight-hour law, for the employes of the Street Department. He was the father of this ordinance and pushed its passage with the persistency so characteristic of all his undertakings. He has served on many important committees since becoming a member of the Council, and is at present Chairman of the Finance and Fire and Water Committees. In his unshaken devotion to Democracy Mr. Gorman believes in organization and its resultant force, believing that, to quote his own expression, "the wishes of the party as an entirety is greater than the option of any one individual."

November 4, 1888, Mr. Gorman married Margaret Moennighoff, of Peoria, and of this union there are two sons: Thomas F. and Howard. Mr. Gorman is variously identified with the social and business organizations in which Peoria abounds, and is fraternally associated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Independent Order of Foresters, and the Knights of Columbus. He is also a member of the Creve Coeur Club. Possessing positive rather than negative characteristics, his position as a public servant is as enthusiastically assailed by his opponents as it is approved by his supporters, than which no better proof could be obtained of his general worth, when taken in connection with the fact that one and all, irrespective of party lines, declare his unswerving devotion to principle and the public welfare.

JOSEPH V. GRAFF.

Joseph V. Graff, Representative in Congress from the Fourteenth District of Illinois, was born at Terre Haute, Indiana, July 1, 1854, of combined German and Scotch-English descent. His paternal grandparents were of German birth, who settled at Brownsville, Pennsylvania, where his father, Jacob Kausler Graff, was born, while his mother, Mary Jane (Miller) Graff, was a native of Ohio, but of Scotch-English ancestry. Mr. Graff attended the public schools of his native town and graduated from the High School there, after which he entered the Wabash College at Crawfordsville, Indiana. In 1873 he came to Delavan, Illinois, where he was associated for some five years with his brother and brother-in-law in mercantile pursuits, studying law during his leisure hours and in the evenings, and was admitted to the bar in 1879. Here he at once engaged in practice, remaining until 1883, when he removed to Nebraska—in the meantime having had W. R. Curran, Esq., as his partner for one year. After two years practice in Nebraska, in 1885, he returned to Illinois, and for several years was engaged in practice at Pekin, Tazewell County, being alone until 1894, when he entered into partnership with Judge George A. Rider, which continued until his removal to Peoria in 1899. Here he engaged in practice with Lyman J. Carlock as partner, but whose appointment he obtained afterward as one of the United States Judges in the Philippine Islands. After the departure of Judge Carlock for his post of duty in the Philippines, Mr. Graff took in Mr. C. V. Miles as a partner, and the firm of Graff & Miles are enjoying a large and lucrative practice with offices in the Niagara Building.

Up to 1891 Mr. Graff had never held a public office, but during that year was elected one of the Inspectors of Schools for the city of Pekin, becoming President of the Board, which position he held until his first nomination for Congress. During the period of Democratic rule in the State Legislature under the administration of Governor Altgeld, the State was redistricted for the election of Congressmen, the counties of Putnam, Marshall, Peoria, Tazewell, Fulton and Mason being placed in one District, as supposed with a safe Democratic majority of at least 2,200. So confident were the Democratic leaders of this result that one Democratic county which had been attached to the District was given to another to make the latter more surely Democratic. The first nominations for Congress in the new District occurred in 1894—the Hon. George O. Barnes, of Lacon, becoming the Democratic nominee, and the choice of the Republicans falling upon the Hon. Joseph V. Graff, of Pekin. The result was the election of Mr. Graff over his Democratic competitor by the emphatic majority of 3,300, after a canvass in some respects unsurpassed in the history of Central Illinois. For three successive terms Mr. Graff has been renominated by acclamation and re-elected by decisive majorities—his Democratic competitor in 1896 being Judge N. E. Worthington; in 1898, Senator C. N. Barnes, and, in 1900, Jesse Black, of Pekin. In each case the report of Mr. Graff's renomination was wired to him in Washington, where he remained in attendance on his official duties—the manner of his indorsement furnishing conclusive evidence of approval by his constituents of his official action. In Congress he has proven himself one of its most industrious and painstaking members, and, in the course of his four consecutive terms, has become one of the best known members of that body. At present he is Chairman of the Committee on Claims, which has jurisdiction of every claim presented against the Government, with the exception of war claims, and is also a member of the Committee on Agriculture. No stronger evidence could be presented of his strength with the people than these repeated popular indorsements in party conventions and at the polls—a tribute to a spotless personal reputation and a clean public record. Politically, his dealings with his constituents have been open and frank, and with all the citizens of his District, whether Democratic or Republican, candid, fair and honest, as evidenced by the fact that no request, however small or large, for information or favor goes unanswered. The District is fortunate in being thus represented by a man not only known and respected by the people, but who enjoys the respect and confidence of his colleagues and associates in the halls of Congress. The work for his District has been incessant. He has obtained for his constituents increased postal facilities and rural deliveries far in excess of those of any other Congressman in Illinois, while his work in behalf of the veterans of the Civil War is too well known to need mention. The son of a veteran whose life was sacrificed as the result of his service in behalf of the Union cause and the brother of another, he naturally takes a deep interest in the welfare of the survivors among those who periled their lives for the preservation of the Union. He has upon his books the names of 2,500 or more men whose claims for pensions he keeps in mind, spending many hours each day in answering correspondence and urging their claims at the Pension Office.

Mr. Graff interested himself in the provision in the river and harbor bill before Congress, during the session of 1900-01, making an appropriation of $150,000 for the survey of the Illinois and the Des Plaines Rivers from the lower end of the Chicago Drainage Canal, with a view to the deepening of both streams, thus giving a deep water-way between the Lakes and the Gulf. This bill, however, was defeated in the Senate—in the parlance of Congress, "talked to death"—in the closing hours of the session by Senator Carter of Montana.

Mr. Graff is a member of the Presbyterian Church, as well as several social fraternities, including the Sons of Veterans, Union Veterans' Union, Modern Woodmen of America, as well as Masonic and other fraternal orders. As a citizen, as a lawyer and as a politician, he stands without reproach. The Republican Convention for the new Sixteenth Congressional District, which met in Peoria on May 5, 1902, by a unanimous vote, tendered Mr. Graff a renomination for the position he now holds, being the fourth in consecutive order received by acclamation—a result that has but few if any parallels in the political history of the State. Peoria is proud to claim him as one of its honored citizens.

JOSEPH BENDIST GREENHUT.

Joseph Bendist Greenhut was born in Austria, at the military post of Teinitz, February 28, 1843. His father died when he was about four years of age, and his mother married Mr. Wolf Schaefer and moved to Chicago, when her son was nine years of age. At thirteen the subject of this sketch learned the trade of tin and copper-smithing and worked for some time in St. Louis. He afterward started South, went to Mobile, Alabama, remaining there for two years. At Lincoln's call to arms Mr. Greenhut returned hurriedly to Chicago, and enlisted as a private in the Twelfth Illinois, having the honor to be second from Chicago to respond. Within a few months of his enlistment he was promoted to the rank of Sergeant, and, at the battle of Fort Donelson, was seriously wounded in the right arm. This necessitated his return home, but after six months, his wound having healed, he recruited a company of infantry, was elected Captain and assigned to the Eighty-second Illinois. Later he was made Chief of Staff of the Brigade, and served in many of the famous battles of the Civil War, remaining in active service until the spring of 1864, when his health failed and he was again compelled to resign. Upon his recovery he devoted himself to mechanical pursuits in the city of his adoption, Chicago, and invented and patented the twine-binder now used on the McCormick reaping machines, besides a number of other mechanical devices. He became, in 1869, Secretary and Treasurer of the Keller Distilling Company of Chicago, and in this way started the business from which he has realized a magnificent competence and which has made him so well known. Mr. Greenhut's ability and his many sterling qualities became so widely known that, in 1887, at the unanimous request of all distillers in the United States, he organized the Distillers' and Cattle Feeders' Company, of which he became President and so continued until 1895, when, on account of differences between the Eastern and Western stockholders, he withdrew from the Company. Mr. Greenhut is associated with various other large enterprises, namely: The Central Railway Company, the German-American National Bank, the Merchants' National Bank (all of Peoria), and the National Bank of the Republic of Chicago. He is also President of the National Cooperage and Woodenware Company of Peoria, one of the largest cooperage and woodenware companies in the United States. Aside from this, Mr. Greenhut is extensively interested in the famous drygoods house of the Siegel-Cooper Company, in New York, of which he is now the President, his representative being his son, B. J. Greenhut, who is Secretary and Treasurer of the company.

To do justice to Mr. Greenhut's many excellent qualities of mind and heart and to his sound business judgment would be a pleasure, if space permitted. Enough to say that he is honored by all who know him and wherever he may be for his generosity, his ability as a man of business and his sterling upright character. Peoria is proud to claim him as one of her leading citizens, and one who has done so much for her advancement. In closing we wish to speak of two little incidents to show how truly noble this man is. Mr. Greenhut is entitled to and was allowed for the wound he received in serving his country, a pension from the Government. He has never taken a dollar of this money and never will. Again he was interested in a large corporation, which, on account of depression in trade, was forced into the hands of a receiver. Mr. Greenhut paid every creditor in full to the extent of his interest in the stock of the company. These two instances are known to us, and it is our pleasure to publish them as showing, in a slight degree, his nobility of character.

Mr. Greenhut was married, October 24, 1866, to Miss Clara Wolfner, of Chicago, three children now living being born to them: Fannie V., Bendist J. and Nelson W. Mr. Greenhut's home life has been particularly happy, and he has realized in his wife a true helpmeet, as she has always been deeply interested in all that he has undertaken, and by her quick comprehension and earnest sympathy helped him to reach the deservedly high place he now holds as a representative citizen, not only of Peoria but the United States. Both Mr. and Mrs. Greenhut are noted for their helpfulness to the poor and all in want or trouble.

THOMAS A. GRIER.

The family name of the subject of this sketch is identified prominently with the early history of the grain trade in this city and with the organization of the Board of Trade. His brothers erected the first small elevator in Peoria, which was the beginning of a business in the handling of grain that developed into a vast industry and gave the city prominence as a grain market throughout the United States. Thomas Atherton Grier was born in Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, March 1, 1850. His parents, John C. and Elizabeth (Perkins) Grier, came to this city in 1851. Thomas received his education in the city schools of Peoria and at the age of sixteen became clerk in the Mechanics' National Bank. After six years of service in the bank he entered the employ of his brothers, Robert C. and David P. Grier, before mentioned, in the grain business, continuing with them for about ten years. A part of the time he spent in Boston, looking after the Eastern business of the firm. In 1886 the present firm of T. A. Grier & Company was formed for a general grain, commission, shipping and elevator business, and the business of the firm has grown in magnitude, and been in every respect successful. Mr. Grier is President of the Burlington Elevator Company, which owns and operates a large elevator in the city. He is prominent socially in Peoria, and has interested himself in various social organizations. He was President of the Creve Coeur Club in 1899-1900, and of the Corn Exposition in 1900. He has always taken great interest in music, and been quite prominent in fostering a musical spirit in the city.

Mr. Grier married Ella Bancroft Clarke, January 6, 1876, and five children have been born to them, four of whom survive. Katharine Clarke, the oldest daughter, died when a child. Caroline King graduated in 1900 from Smith College, and was married in October, 1901, to Herbert B. Jamison, of Peoria. Isabel Hooker is now a student at Smith College. Thomas Perkins and Samuel Clarke are in the public schools of Peoria.

In religion Mr. Grier has always been a staunch Presbyterian, having inherited his faith in its essence from a long line of Presbyterian ancestors. He is a Republican in politics, is in the prime of life, active, energetic and ready to use his efforts in behalf of everything which he believes to be of advantage to the city of Peoria. By appointment of Governor Yates, Mr. Grier served as a Commissioner from Illinois to the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo in 1901, discharging his duty with characteristic energy and enthusiasm.

WILLIAM R. HAMILTON.

Dr. William R. Hamilton was born of Scotch-Irish parentage, in Venango County, Pennsylvania, February 18, 1816. He was educated in the common schools of that State and in the State of Ohio. He taught school for two years in Portage County, Ohio, and procured the means to complete his academic education and prepare himself for the practice of medicine. He studied medicine with his brother, who was then a practicing physician in Logan County, Ohio. After graduating from the medical school he commenced practice at Huntsville, Ohio, in 1840, where he remained and successfully pursued his chosen vocation for eight years. The life of a country physician, at that time, was one of great hardship and taxed the endurance of the physician to the extreme limit. Dr. Hamilton was eminently successful as a physician and established himself in an extensive and lucrative practice. Having finally decided to select some other place as his home, he came to Peoria June 6, 1848, where he resumed his professional labors, devoting himself assiduously to his profession for twelve years. He early identified himself with the business interests of the city and became prominent in its political and municipal affairs. He was elected Mayor of the city in 1857 and 1858, during those years giving much of his time to the business interests of the municipality. He was a Republican in politics from principle, and took an active part in the organization of the Republican party in the State of Illinois. In 1860 he was engaged in the oil business in the State of Pennsylvania, and, in 1863, he went into the army as a Volunteer Surgeon, under a commission issued by Governor Morton, of Indiana, rendering efficient and valuable service in the field. In 1865 he returned to Peoria and built a brick block upon the corner of Adams and Liberty Streets, which he still owns. In 1867 he interested himself in the construction of a railroad from Peoria to Rock Island, now known as the Rock Island & Peoria Railway. He was a Director and then elected President of the company, in which capacity he served seven years, and was mainly instrumental in raising the money with which the road was constructed. The road finally passed under the control of the present management, and Dr. Hamilton, in 1875, engaged in the coal trade, in which business he continued until 1881, when he retired from business, and has since devoted himself wholly to looking after his private business and property interests.

Dr. Hamilton is a man of great personal force of character, and of marvelous physical, as well as mental, vitality and energy. He has always been a public-spirited man, and always willing to do his part in the development of every enterprise with which he became connected. He has always been in the front rank of the upright, intelligent, energetic citizens, interested in the development of the city. Dr. Hamilton built for himself a beautiful home for his declining years upon the bluff overlooking the city of Peoria, where he lives with his wife, whom he married a few years ago at Toulon, Illinois. He had been twice married before, and had several children by his other wives. His present wife was Mrs. Sarah M. Dewey, who was the mother, by a former marriage, of Charles P. Dewey, now a banker of Toulon, and Harry P. Dewey, D. D., now pastor of Pilgrim Church, Brooklyn, New York. Of the four children by his first wife, Mrs. Amanda H. Gregg survives, now a widow residing with her father; also Mrs. Katharine M. Hill, the wife of William A. Hill, a commission merchant of Peoria. Of the children of his second wife, Mrs. May Albrecht, of Oakland, California, survives; also William H. Hamilton, Jr., who is engaged in the drug and banking business at Sibley, Illinois.

Dr. Hamilton is in the possession of all his faculties and still interested in all that pertains to the progress and prosperity of his city, State and Nation. In the evening of a long life he enjoys the esteem of all who know him.

ROWLAND H. HARNED.

Among Peoria's younger class of merchants none has gained greater prominence than Rowland H. Harned, head of the mercantile firm of Harned & Von Maur. Mr. Harned was born at Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, October 30, 1864, the son of Clark and Isabella T. (Metcalf) Harned. His father pursued the occupation of a dealer in real estate and died in 1898, and his mother in 1901. On the paternal side Mr. Harned is of French extraction, while on the maternal he is of English descent. For more than two centuries, however, the Harneds have been dwellers on the Western Continent and thoroughly Americanized. The Metcalf family are of aristocratic lineage in their native England, and possess their armorial bearings. Mr. Harned's maternal great-grandfather was the Rev. Roger Moister, an eminent Methodist divine who was known as the "Patriarch of Wyoming Valley"—a locality famous for having furnished material for one of the most tragic pages of American history in the story of the "Wyoming Massacre." His son, the Rev. William Moister, was a distinguished English clergyman and author, who served as a missionary in the West Indies, one of the several volumes from his pen being an account of missionary work in those islands. The last mentioned member of the Moister family is recently deceased.

After a course of study at the Wyoming Seminary and graduating at Wyoming Commercial College, Mr. Harned found his first employment in the mercantile line as salesman, and later as assistant manager, in the largest dry-goods store in Wilkesbarre, where he remained five years. He then formed a copartnership with E. C. Pursel and C. J. Von Maur, and, in the spring of 1887, removed to Davenport, Iowa, where they opened a store, which proved very successful from the start. Two years later—Mr. Pursel having died—Messrs. Harned and Von Maur came into possession of the business, which had developed from a small beginning to such an extent that larger space was found necessary for conducting it. Accordingly about four years ago they purchased ground and erected on it a magnificent three-story and basement structure, which was finished three years since, giving them the finest store-building in Davenport, with a floor space of over 51,000 square feet.

Messrs. Harned and Von Maur's connection with Peoria dates from February 1, 1894, when they came to this city and bought the dry-goods stock of Messrs. Bergner, Potter & Co.—Mr. Bergner, however, remaining as a member of the new firm until January, 1902, when Harned and Von Maur purchased his interest. Their business here has grown enormously, and the firm now have the second largest dry-goods trade in the city of Peoria. In the meantime Mr. Harned still retains a half-interest in the Davenport concern, and devotes a part of his time to that field. He has developed a remarkable adaptability for the pursuit he has chosen in life, and, from his boyhood, has bent all his energies to the mastering of details and the acquisition of a competent and intelligent comprehension of all that enters into the making of a successful merchant. He started in business for himself while but a youth, and at the end of fifteen years finds himself at the head of two great mercantile houses; and during all that period has never had a failure or a serious financial reverse. His career in this respect has been equaled by few of the eminent merchants of America.

Mr. Harned was married, October 25, 1899, to Miss Mary Reeder, daughter of Charles and Mary Reeder, of Bordentown, New Jersey. He is a Republican in politics, and, while reared as a Methodist, the faith of his family, he is now affiliated with the Second Presbyterian Church of Peoria, of which he has been Trustee and Superintendent of the Sunday-school, and is now a Ruling Elder. Fraternally he is a member of the Creve Coeur Club and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Harned is President of the Peoria Retail Merchants' Association.

FRANK B. HASBROUCK.

So long ago that few personally recall the beginning of his faithful services in connection with the upbuilding of Peoria, there came from the East on horseback one by the name of Milton Hasbrouck, who located in Chicago, and later identified his fortunes with Peoria and vicinity. At that time the stage-coach was a familiar and welcome factor of transportation, and the farm of the new-comer, located on the bluff where are now the palatial homes of a present-day population, overlooked an activity but faintly suggesting the teeming industry of to-day. The birth of Frank B. Hasbrouck, May 24, 1850, constituted yet another link in an ancestry replete with interest, and associated with some of the vital happenings in the world's history. Succeeding generations of the family of Hasbrouck—or as it was known in France, "Hasbroeck"—have not laid themselves liable to what the greatest of American essayists, Emerson, considers the most unforgiving of human omissions,—in difference to the lives and accomplishments of one's ancestors. On the contrary, most complete records have been faithfully preserved, and a pride maintained in the long array of forefathers who have been, with few exceptions, creditable and even noteworthy acquisitions of their time and place.

The haunting bigotry and cruelty which made exiles or martyrs of the French Protestants or Huguenots in the seventeenth century, brought to particular notice Abraham Hasbroeck, who was known as the "patentee," and whose descendants are numerous scattered over Ulster, Orange and Dutchess counties, New York. Abraham and his brother, John, or Jean, were born in Calais, France, and to escape the pestilential fanaticism of Catholic France emigrated to Mannheim, in the Palatinate, then the great harbor of refuge for the persecuted. Abraham lived for a time in England, where he served in the army, and, in 1675, took passage in a sailing vessel bound for New York harbor. A fellow-passenger on this memorable voyage was Maria Deyo, daughter of Christian Deyo, and the records of the Kingston (New York) church, dated 1676, contain the following account of the marriage, which resulted from this long and perilous ship association: "Abraham Hasbroeck, of Calais, and Mary Deyo, of Moerstat, in Duystant." The Huguenot searcher after liberty of life, and thought, and action, became prominent in affairs military in New York State, and on August 30, 1685, received a commission as Lieutenant of a company of foot for Newpaltz and Kingston, and, in 1689, was appointed "Captain of foot at Ye Paltz, Ulster County." Abraham Hasbrouck died March 7, 1717, from an apoplectic fit, and was survived by his wife until March 27, 1741. The couple lived in a stone house which has braved the storms of years and is still standing, and here reared five sons, of whom Solomon, the second son, was born in 1686, and married Sarah Van Wagener in 1721. They also lived in a stone house, and reared to maturity seven sons, of whom Petrus (or Peter) was the sixth. Petrus Hasbrouck was a valiant soldier during the Revolutionary War, and was Second Lieutenant in the Second Company of Newpaltz, regiment of Colonel Johannus Hardenburgh, which regiment saw active service from October 25, 1775, until 1782. Petrus married Sarah, daughter of Abraham Bevier, and lived in a stone house still standing in Middleton. He also was the father of seven sons, of whom Abraham, the seventh son, was born July 11, 1789, married Mary, daughter of Jacob Blanshan, March 10, 1810, and died December 27, 1816. His widow married Daniel Le-fever April 1, 1820. Abraham and Mary Hasbrouck were the parents of three children, two sons and one daughter, and of these Milton, the oldest, was the father of Frank B.

Milton Hasbrouck, one of the very early pioneers of Peoria, was born in New York October 11, 1811, and was five years old when his father, Abraham, died. When eighteen years of age he started out to become financially independent, and soon afterward engaged in building and operating canal-boats on the Erie Canal. He afterward went to Vienna, Oneida county, New York, where he kept a hotel for three years, and then bought a horse, which carried him to Chicago, where he arrived in 1834. Here Mr. Hasbrouck drove a stage and handled grain for stage-horses, and, while in the Lake City, made his headquarters at that once famous tavern called the "Sauganash." In 1835 he came to Pekin, and drove a stage between Pekin and Bloomington, and in the summer of the same year located in Peoria, where he found employment as a pilot on the little "Frontier" steamboat. This craft met an untimely fate off Towhead Island, and still lies where she was sunk, while Mr. Hasbrouck was asleep and off duty. During the five years that he served as a pilot he had in charge, at various times, the "Movastar," the "Little Lucretia," the "Maid of Iowa," and the "Puritan," the latter of which was piloted down the river by Mr. Hasbrouck to Saint Louis for two or three years. He also built the Frank Voris in connection with his partners, and ran the boat up the canal to Chicago until 1851. Upon first coming to Peoria he lived at what is now 207 Jefferson Street, but later moved upon the bluff to a farm of fifteen acres now covered by the city, and where he lived for thirty years. Between 1856 and 1860 he ran a mail stage between Peoria and Metamora, and, from 1860 until 1864, had a mail route between Peoria and Delavan, both of which were extremely profitable, the profits from the sale of newspapers alone often reaching as high as twenty dollars a day. He was a man of strong characteristics and high moral courage, and one of his cast iron convictions was that he would never run in debt for anything. Mr. Hasbrouck died August 19, 1898, and is survived by his wife whom he married in St. Louis April 27, 1844, and who was formerly Mary Ann Brestel.

Mrs. Hasbrouck was born in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, June 25, 1820, and is a granddaughter of Daniel Brestel, a native of France, who married Mary Stambaugh, a native of Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, and daughter of Daniel Brestel, who was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, May 13, 1798, and Elizabeth (Miller) Brestel, who was born at Gettysburg, Adams County, Pennsylvania, October 2, 1799. The mother of Mrs. Hasbrouck was a daughter of Henry Miller, a native of Hanau, and Catherine (Maury) Miller, who was born near Shippensburg, Pennsylvania. The Brestel family came to Peoria May 24, 1835.

Frank B. Hasbrouck is the youngest of the three children in his father's family, the others being Milton and Charles A. Up to his fifteenth year he attended the public schools of Peoria, and his further education was temporarily suspended owing to the necessity for his entering upon a business career. For two years he engaged as a clerk in a grocery store, after which he learned the brickmason's trade, and at the age of twenty-one had become a contracting mason, in touch with the most intelligent needs of his native city. Owing to his special aptitude and familiarity with the advancement in his line in all parts of the world, many notable commissions have come his way, and an unusual number of architectural accomplishments in different parts of the city are indirectly attributable to his skill and enterprise. Among the many residences which owe their brick construction to the ingenuity of Mr. Hasbrouck may be mentioned that of E. S. Easton, built in 1880; that of S. R. Clarke, built in 1877; of J. B. Greenhut, in 1884; twenty houses for E. S. Easton at the foot of the bluff; the home of R. W. Kempshall, built in 1892; and that of C. S. Proctor, erected in 1894. Among the prominent business houses of the city may be mentioned the Peoria Sugar Refinery (now the American Glucose Factory), erected in 1879, and since twice burned and rebuilt; the Great Western Distillery, built in 1881; the Grand Opera House, also built in 1881; the Manhattan Distillery, built in 1883, the Peoria Cordage Works building; the Observatory building, put up in 1889; the Opera House at Jacksonville, and the Home for the Friendless in Peoria, erected in 1891; the Woman's Club, built in 1893; the Rouse-Hazard Bicycle Factory, built in 1895; the First Church of Christ, built in 1898; the contract for the Clark Brothers Distillery, erected in 1899; the Acme Harvester Works at South Bartonville, erected in 1900, and which contains five millions of brick; and many other erections of equal importance, and equal prominence in the building up of the city.

The marriage of Mr. Hasbrouck and Mary Louise Miller occurred in Peoria November 22, 1876, Mrs. Hasbrouck being a daughter of John R. and Margaret (Aultmyer) Miller, the former of whom was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and died April 4, 1872, at the age of forty-seven years; while the latter was born at Ems, Germany, came to America when thirteen years of age, and died in 1882, at the age of fifty-eight years. Mr. and Mrs. Hasbrouck have one son, Frank F., born July 11, 1880. He attended the high school and Bradley Polytechnic Institute at Peoria, and is now a student and assistant to Dr. Garner, at Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Indiana, in the Department of Chemistry. Mr. F. B. Hasbrouck is a Republican in national politics, and is fraternally associated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. The Hasbrouck home is a handsome and commodious one, and is rendered hospitable and cheery by the decided domestic tastes of the owner, who prefers the companionship found at his own fireside to that found in the busy whirl of society.

MATHEW HENEBERY.

Mathew Henebery was born in County Kilkenny, Ireland, September 8, 1834, to Nicholas and Anastasia (Carroll) Henebery. He came to America with his father and mother and seven brothers and sisters in the spring of 1849, coming to Peoria via Montreal, Buffalo and Chicago, stopping for a short time at LaSalle. He received his education mainly in Ireland before coming to America.

His first employment in Peoria was superintending a line of drays for about two years. He was then employed for some time upon the telegraph line between Peoria and Chicago. In 1851 he was employed by Napoleon B. Brandamour in the liquor business, and shortly afterward was admitted to partnership. The firm built an alcohol distillery and continued to run the business for two years. When the firm dissolved, Mr. Brandamour took the alcohol still and Mr. Henebery the wholesale liquor business, which he has continued in his own name to the present time. Ever since Mr. Henebery settled in Peoria he has been interested in all that pertained to the city's welfare; was one of the early Aldermen and subsequently a member of the School Board. He was one of the organizers and builders of the Great Eastern Distillery, and was for a long time President of the Peoria Pottery Company and interested in its business. He was also one of the prominent organizers of the Peoria Stock Yards and the Peoria Packing and Provision Company. He is President of the Peoria Opera House Company, and has been for many years Vice-President and a Director of the First National Bank. Mr. Henebery has been a very successful business man, owns several farms in Illinois and Nebraska and has accumulated a competence. He has at all times identified himself with the growth and prosperity of the city, taking great interest in the schools, hospitals and Public Library, and was a director in the latter from the time of its organization until 1894. He was also a Director in, and Treasurer of, the Peoria Gas Light and Coke Company for many years.

Mr. Henebery was married, in Peoria, May 10, 1857, to Mary Daniels. Twelve children have been born to them, nine of whom are now living: Anastasia, Nicholas J., Josephine, Mary, Lucy, Lida, Richard, Helen and Theodosia. Mr. Henebery still continues in active business and still retains his interest in all that pertains to the welfare of Peoria. He has always maintained a high character for integrity and business ability.

ALEXANDER J. HENSELER.

One of those who in years past rendered lasting service to the commercial well-being of Peoria was Alexander J. Henseler, who succeeded to the business of Louis Green & Company, and in the management thereof and in the conduct of his general affairs, won for himself an enviable position and a deserved competence. A just pride of ancestry was not without its effect in forming the life plans of Mr. Henseler, and he was not unmindful of the reflected distinction of those bearing his name who had contributed to the military prestige of his beloved Germany. He was born in Upladen, Prussia, September 10, 1849, a son of John Engelbert and Wilhelmina (Kirsch) Henseler, also natives of Prussia. The paternal grandfather followed in the martial train of the great Napoleon between 1809 and 1813, and during that time participated in the Spanish invasion, and was among the footsore and weary who retreated from Moscow.

John Engelbert Henseler was an ambitious man and realized the limitations of the boundaries of Prussia, and thus it happened that, in 1853, he set sail with his family for American shores, hoping much from the land of inexhaustible possibility. An expert builder and architect, he stopped in Chicago for a year after arriving in America, and then located in Peoria, where he successfully plied his chosen occupation until his retirement some years ago. Like his father before him, he has had an extended military service, beginning with his three years with the engineering corps of the Prussian army, and ending with his enthusiastic advocacy of the Union cause during the Civil War. From 1861 until 1863 he was Lieutenant, and afterward Captain, of the Engineering Corps, and would have served longer had not ill health rendered his resignation imperative. Mr. Henseler is still a resident of Peoria, although his wife and helpmate died in 1857.

In his youth Alexander J. Henseler attended the German Catholic school of Saint Joseph's parish, Peoria, and at the early age of thirteen asserted his independence and began to earn his own living. As a store-boy he entered the employ of L. Rohrbach, and for three years faithfully served his employer in various capacities. A later position was with the dry-goods house of Mueller & Kruse, with whom he remained as salesman until 1869, following which he engaged for a year in the lightning-rod business. In 1870 he entered the employ of Louis Green & Company, as traveling salesman, and his devotion to the best interests of the firm and his ready wit in comprehending the various departments of the business resulted in his being accepted as a member of the firm in 1870. Nevertheless he continued as traveling representative until January of 1889, when he succeeded to the business of Louis Green & Company, and the following year took his brother Philip into partnership. After this change in its affairs the business prospered exceedingly, and Mr. Henseler directed its various departments into channels of usefulness and financial soundness. His death, June 27, 1897, removed one of the substantial and broad-minded men of the community, and left many to regret his lingering illness of ten months, and his absence from the haunts which had known him for so long.

He was a man of intense humane instincts, and was connected with whatever of a charitable nature commended itself as wise and of good import; in like measure he was liberal in his religious views, and absolutely untrammelled by narrowing creeds or high hedge dogmas. From a political standpoint he acknowledged the advantage of neither party, but cast his vote rather for personal fitness irrespective of party lines. Fraternally Mr. Henseler was associated with the Knights of Pythias, of which he was Past Chancellor of the Calenthe Lodge, No. 47; the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Peoria Lodge, No. 20; and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He was a member of the Peoria Commercial Club, the Turn Verein, and the Peoria Commercial Travelers' Association, in which latter organization he held various offices and was a director.

April 14, 1872, Mr. Henseler married Elizabeth Errion, who came to America from Germany with her parents in 1855, and has lived here ever since. To Mr. and Mrs. Henseler were born two children, and of these Willie A. was born November 2, 1872, and died November 1, 1888; and Freda R., born October 28, 1874, and married Fred R. Waugh in August of 1900.

WILLIAM ANDREW HERRON.

William Andrew Herron, for more than half a century one of Peoria's most prominent and successful business men, was born at Shippensburg, Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, the son of Francis and Jane (Wills) Herron. His father's family were of Scotch-Irish ancestry and had lived in that region for several generations, where, at one time, they were proprietors of a large tract of land on which were located several farms familiarly known as Herron's Row. They belonged to the Middle Spring Church, which is so largely represented in the Presbyterian circles in Peoria. His mother, who was a native of Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, was a woman of sterling worth and amiability of character.

Mr. Herron's boyhood was spent on the farm until he was fifteen years of age, when he came west with his aunt, Mrs. Martha (Herron) Cunningham, and spent the winter of 1839 at Belleville, Illinois. During the following spring he came to Peoria, and here found employment as a clerk in the drug store of his uncle, Dr. James Mossman, one of Peoria's earliest physicians, who died here about 1850. The store was located on the upper side of Main Street adjoining the Peoria Hotel kept by Augustus O. Garrett. In a very few years, by saving his earnings, Mr. Herron was enabled to purchase the store, soon after which he removed his business to the corner of Main Street and Printer's Alley, in the historic building wrecked by an explosion just after he had left it.

In 1849 he erected a brick building on the south corner of Main and Washington Streets, where Robert L. Davis is now located, which corner has been occupied as a drug store for more than half a century. The business was here prospered and, in a short time, Mr. Herron was enabled to build what was then considered an elegant residence, now occupied by Max Newman adjoining the St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

About the year 1856, his health having become somewhat impaired by the confinement of an in-door life, he sold out his business and engaged in the lumber trade in partnership with Mr. Joseph Elder. This business connection continued until 1868, when Mr. Herron closed out his interest therein and engaged in the banking business, in which he has been occupied ever since, covering a period of over thirty-four consecutive years. Prior to this time, however, he had been for some years a Director in the Second National (now Peoria National) Bank of Peoria. It was in the year last named (1868) that Mr. Herron, in connection with John Hamlin, Charles P. King, Lorin G. Pratt, Zenas N. Hotchkiss, Philip Zell, Lewis Howell and Thomas C. Moore, established the Savings Bank of Peoria, which was the pioneer institution of its kind in the city, and has continued in existence without change of name ever since. Originally a private partnership concern, it was incorporated under the State law in 1894. On the retirement of Mr. Philip Zell from the position of Secretary and acting manager in 1872, Mr. Herron became President and Manager, and has so continued until the present time. His career in connection with this historic institution is all the more noteworthy in view of the fact that he is to-day the only survivor of its eight original founders. The success which has attended the management of this bank is illustrated by the fact that, whereas it started thirty-four years ago with a capital of $150,000, it now has a surplus and undivided profits amounting to $220,000, of which nearly one-third has been accumulated in the past eight years.

Mr. Herron was also one of the founders and original stockholders of the Peoria Gas Light and Coke Company, of which he was for many years a director and also its President. It is rarely the case that any one man continues to be a stockholder in any one institution for so many consecutive years, Mr. Herron having become a stockholder of the Peoria Gas Light and Coke Company at its organization in 1853, and having parted with his last stock only a few months ago.

In his long business career he has never met with a failure, or a serious business reverse, a result due to a sound, conservative judgment. In his own language, he has never had any trouble in making all the money he wanted.

Mr. Herron also was active in the organization of the Second Presbyterian Church, and, although not then a communicant, recorded himself as one of the original members of the congregation, and at a later date entered into full communion, and has from that time to the present been an active and public-spirited member of that church.

Originally a conservative Whig, he has, since the organization of the Republican party, been a constant and consistent supporter of its principles. Although not in the ordinary sense of the term a politician or a seeker for office, nevertheless he served as Alderman of his ward for six years, and was for several years a member of the Board of Supervisors of the county.

Mr. Herron has been twice married, the first time (1846) to Susan Bartlett, daughter of Dr. Peter Bartlett; the second time, on November 4, 1884, to Mary Walker, daughter of Isaac and Sarah S. (McIlvaine) Walker, of Peoria. They have had four children, of whom three are living: William Andrew, John Wills and Mary Walker. Anna Walker, their second child, died at the age of five years.

Mr. Herron has had two brothers, John, a distinguished lawyer of Cincinnati, Ohio, still living, and David W., deceased, formerly of Peoria, more recently of Princeville. He has two sisters, Hannah Jack, the mother of William and Frank Jack, of Peoria, and Nancy, formerly of Peoria, now Mrs. Hurst, of Washington, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Herron is spending the evening of a long and ideal life with his devoted wife and family in the home No. 411 North Madison Avenue, which he has occupied for the last thirty-six years.

ANDREW J. HODGES.

Andrew J. Hodges was born October 31, 1815, at Norton, Massachusetts. He learned the carpenter's trade in Boston, and, in 1837, came to Illinois, settling in Delavan, where he resided for eighteen years, during which time he worked as master carpenter, his first work being upon the well-known "Delavan House." During his residence in Delavan Mr. Hodges also worked on the Court House in St. Louis, Missouri. In the spring of 1848 he built a home on Third Street in Peoria, to which he moved his family in the fall. Among the buildings constructed by Mr. Hodges, now standing, are the Dobbins House,—since used by the Creve Coeur Club; the Universalist Church, and the Cox Building at the corner of Adams and Fulton Streets. In 1864 Mr. Hodges took charge of the Barber & Hawley Works at Decatur, which was, some time later, consolidated with the plant owned by the same company at Pekin. Shortly after the consolidation Mr. Hodges became the owner of the business, which he carried on until 1890, under the firm name of A. J. Hodges & Company, at which time he sold out to the Acme Harvester Company. Mr. Hodges built what is known as the Haines Illinois Harvester, developing, from the original wooden machine, the Hodges Steel Header—a machine used extensively in the United States, and also well known in South America.

Mr. Hodges was a modest, unassuming man, but of positive convictions and always had the courage of his convictions. He was possessed of sterling integrity and was thoroughly honest and faithful to every trust reposed in him. He was not only a competent, but a reliable mechanic, and every contract he executed with the utmost fidelity. He needed no superintendent or watchman to see that any work undertaken by him was honestly done. He ranked deservedly high in this community for his integrity, his uprightness, his singleness of purpose and his interest in the development of the city. He is entitled to the appellation of that noblest work of God, an honest man. By his thrift, conservative judgment and fair dealing Mr. Hodges accumulated a substantial competence.

On August 1, 1844, he married Sarah E. Grant at Delavan, Illinois, and to them five children were born (the second dying in infancy); Anna E. (deceased), who was the wife of H. P. Wilber; Mittie, now Mrs. E. E. Arnold, of Providence, R. I.; Jennie G. and Charles A. Mr. Hodges built a beautiful home on Perry Avenue, where his widow, daughter Jennie and son Charles now reside. Mr. Hodges died October 9, 1900.

WILLIAM EDGAR HULL.

William Edgar Hull, Postmaster of the city of Peoria, was born in Lewistown, Fulton County, Illinois, January 13, 1866, being the only son of Capt. William Wesley and Mary A. Hull (deceased). Mr. Hull's father was born in Licking County, Ohio, December 16, 1829, and his mother at Old Mines, Missouri, March 23, 1840, and they were married at Lewistown, Illinois, December 15, 1862. The former died August 16, 1897, and the latter is also deceased, and both were buried in the cemetery at Lewistown.

The ancestry of the Hull family dates back to Captain Hull, of Lake Erie fame during the War of 1812. Philip Hull, William E. Hull's grandfather, removed with his wife and four children in the early '40s from Licking County, Ohio, and settled near Smithfield, Fulton County, Illinois, where he opened a farm, on the corner of which he built the first log school-house in that section. This house, known as the "Hull school-house," became famous as a place for country meetings and debates, a frame building now occupying the site of the original log structure. Later Mr. Hull removed to the vicinity of Lewistown, where his oldest son, Dr. Alexander Hull, began practice and became prominent as a physician. William Wesley Hull, the youngest son, enlisted in the army in 1861 and became Captain of Company H, Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers; was mustered out at the close of his term of service, and returning to Lewistown resided there until his death. Dr. Hull was a prominent figure in the Democratic party, while Captain Hull was equally prominent as a Republican. Although the closest of friends socially, the two brothers were strongly antagonistic politically, their names on one or two occasions appearing on their respective party tickets as opposing candidates for county offices. Captain Hull was widely known as a shrewd, careful and zealous politician, who exerted a strong influence in his Congressional District and enjoyed the respect of his party and the public.

William Edgar Hull was reared on his father's farm, and after taking a course in the Lewistown High School, entered the classical department of Illinois College, at Jacksonville. In 1883 he returned to Lewistown and soon began taking an active part in Republican politics, while still a boy of seventeen being recognized as a power at the polls. In 1884 he became Assistant Postmaster at Lewistown, remaining two years, when he resigned to enter into business for himself. During the campaign of 1888 he took a leading part in the organization of a "Young Men's Republican Club," composed entirely of young men about to cast their first votes for President at the election of that year. This club—in honor of the Republican candidate for Governor, named "The Joe Fifer Club"—became well known and gave to Mr. Hull a wide reputation as a Republican worker and organizer.

The election of Benjamin Harrison to the Presidency in 1888 changed the complexion of affairs in the Peoria District; the Hon. Julius S. Starr was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fifth District, and Mr. Hull, having been selected by the Republicans of Fulton County for that purpose, was appointed a Government Gauger early in 1890, and soon after took up his residence in Peoria, which has been his home continuously ever since. Zealous in the discharge of his official duties, he soon became an important factor in city politics, and at one time had the credit of turning the old Third Ward—which had been strongly Democratic—into a Republican ward; a result attributed largely to his energy and hard work. In 1894 he became the Secretary of the Peoria County Republican Central Committee, also serving in a like capacity for the Fourteenth Congressional District, and threw into the campaign the zeal and energy so characteristic of his political career. The campaign culminated in a great Republican victory—every candidate on the Republican County ticket, with one single exception, being elected, while Mr. Graff was chosen Representative in Congress by a majority of more than 3,000 in a district which had been carved out with the intention of making it surely Democratic. In 1896—this being the presidential year—Mr. Hull again served as Secretary of the Republican County Committee, taking up the work on broader lines than ever before and with equal success. The successful outcome of these two campaigns gave him increased prominence, which was recognized in his appointment by President McKinley, on March 23, 1898, to the position of Postmaster of the city of Peoria, and the business capacity which he has displayed in the management of the office has been recognized (March 14, 1902) in his appointment by President Roosevelt for a second term of four years. During his incumbency many improvements and betterments have been introduced, including increase of the carrier and clerical force, the establishment of sub-stations and the annexation of suburban towns, giving to the latter the benefit of a free-delivery service.

Since coming to Peoria Mr. Hull has been identified with a number of important business enterprises, one of these being the Peoria Livery Company, of which he was the original promoter and organizer, while another is the Messrs. Clarke Brothers & Co.'s great distilling interest, of which he is the general manager.

Mr. Hull was married, on February 27, 1889, in Lewistown, to Miss Ella Harris, daughter of Edwin Harris, at that time President of the Fulton County Narrow-Gauge Railway, and a prominent figure in connection with the business interests of Fulton County. Mrs. Hull was born February 15, 1867, and is a granddaughter of the late Newton Walker, one of the pioneers of Illinois, and an intimate personal friend of Abraham Lincoln.

REV. WILLIAM H. HUNTER.

Inseparably associated with that noble and unselfish band of pioneer workers known as the Thundering Legion or Saddle-Bag Ministers, and also with the broader teachings of the Methodist Episcopal Church as applied to the exigencies of latter day thought, is the name of Rev. William Hunter, whose humanitarian ministrations terminated with his demise, November 5, 1901. For, of all the occupations to which the undulating prairies of Illinois called men in the wake of the departing Indian, none were invested with greater hardship, loneliness, and even peril, and, compared with the life of this last of the patriarchs, the plodding pioneer farmer, with his face towards the future, but with his neighbors remote and with meagre facilities for developing his land, was a singularly fortunate individual.

In the estimation of those who knew him best, a life of ease or even plenty never for a moment entered into the calculations of Rev. Hunter, nor did his youthful aspirations point to other than the perpetual service of mankind. His boyhood days were spent in Mercer, Mercer County, Pennsylvania, where he was born October 9, 1818, being one of a family of five sons and three daughters. The father, a millwright by occupation, experienced great difficulty in providing for those dependent upon him, and the boys were thus obliged to lend the aid of their strong energies to assist him in his work. It is, therefore, not strange that, in their general bringing up, education played but an inconsequent part, not only because of the necessity for toil, but because of the limited facilities of the time. Nevertheless, William availed himself of such slight chances as came his way, and in the humble environment of labor learned much that the schools cannot give. As he toiled to advance the family fortunes, gleams of light illumined his ambitions, and brought into bold relief the narrow confines of his parental surroundings. The ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church offered the larger possibilities of well-doing craved by his intense nature, and the setting thereof was the boundless prairies of the West, with their pelting rains, and impassable roads, the blistering heat of summer, and the oft times wretched resting places. Undaunted by the prospects, he entered the Erie Conference when twenty-three years of age, in 1836, and, for nineteen years, lived mostly in the saddle, as did his companions upon the circuit. For eight out of the nineteen years he was a Presiding Elder, and, during the whole of the time, his route covered one thousand miles every twelve weeks, including preaching at two stations every Sunday, besides holding a "love-feast" and quarterly conference. For this hard and relentless and undermining work he received the paltry remuneration of from three hundred to three hundred and seventy-five dollars, a sum pitifully small had one not the satisfying approval of conscience. And yet, he unceasingly visited the sick, performed marriage services, baptized children and buried the dead, in addition to expounding the gospel of kindness and good-will to many thousands.

In 1855 Mr. Hunter became identified with the church in Illinois, and, as a member of the Rock River Conference—then the most flourishing in the State—accomplished an amount of good equaled only by Cartwright and Garrick. At the first session that he attended in the new itinerancy, held at Rock Island, he was appointed in charge of the First Church in Peoria, then located at the corner of Madison Avenue and Fulton Street. In direct contrast with his former charges, this church was in a prosperous condition, the members having just completed a new place of worship, and, though not large, the congregation which greeted the pastor made up in earnestness and appreciation what it lacked in numbers. During 1858 Dr. Hunter was located at Moline, for the next two years was stationed at Rock Island, and for the two years following at Galesburg. He was then appointed Presiding Elder of the Macomb district, then preached for two years at Monmouth, after which he became Presiding Elder of the Rock Island district—a position maintained for fourteen years. In all he was Presiding Elder in Central Illinois for seventeen years, and, during that time, covered all of the districts between the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers. He was eight times elected a member of the General Conference; was chairman of the committee having charge of the Methodist Book Publishing concern, and, in 1884, was appointed for two years agent of the Conference Claim Society of his district. During the sixty-five years of his ministry Dr. Hunter never failed to answer the roll-call at an Annual Conference, and he was everywhere in the State regarded as one of the most fervent and staunch supporters of the church in whose service he spent his life.

Until within a few years ago Dr. Hunter occupied a prominent place in all church affairs, and since having no special charge with which to unite his energies, has been especially devoted to the work of the Conference. It would be impossible to estimate the amount of good accomplished by this large-hearted, earnest, and eloquent man, who so well understood the need of a guiding influence in the days when men were animated by the sole desire to make a livelihood out of the untried fertility of the plains. Under the charm of his eloquence thousands were brought into the church, and valuable lands were added to the property owned by the denomination. Unlike many of the saddle-bag fraternity, his original beliefs expanded with the growth of a larger civilization; and, as the farmers gained abundance from their harvests, and the towns supported constantly growing industries, he was still the welcome friend and adviser, the versatile sharer of their joys and sorrows. A singular sense of loss and desolation accompanied his departure from the paths that had known him so long; for his wife had died four years before him, and he left no children to mourn his going away. Yet the countless friends whom he bound to him in passing by, and the thousands who listened to his counsel in the early days of struggle and uncertainty, will always treasure the memory of his genial and optimistic personality, and be guided by the strength based on wisdom and humanity.

EDWARD HAMPTON JACK.

The men who have left their impress most indelibly stamped upon the business history of Peoria have been, with few exceptions, those who were dependent on their own personal and unaided efforts and resources for the final success which they have achieved as business men. This was especially true at the earlier period in the city's history, when success was largely, if not wholly, due to individual effort, physical energy, trained industry and personal integrity, intelligence and attention to business details. No more conspicuous illustration can be given of this fact than the life of Capt. Edward Hampton Jack, who has been identified with Peoria business history for a period of nearly a half century. Born on a farm in Switzerland County, Indiana, April 29, 1823, the first ten years of his life were spent in that country, when his widowed mother removed to Gallatin County, Kentucky—his father having died about the same time. Both parents were natives of Gallatin County, his father, Samuel Jack, being the son of John and Mary Jack, and the second of a family of ten children—five sons and five daughters. The grandfather, John Jack, was born in 1766 and died in Kentucky in 1822 at the age of fifty-six years; while his wife, Mary Jack, having been born in 1769, lived to the age of eighty-four years, dying in Indiana in 1853. Samuel Jack (the father of Edward H. Jack) was born, as already stated, in Gallatin County, Kentucky, June 30, 1792, and on June 15, 1815, was married to Rosanna C. Hampton, also a native of the same county, born October 15, 1796. They reared a family of nine children (five sons and four daughters) of whom Edward H. Jack was the fourth—Samuel Jack (the father) died March 30, 1834, at forty-two years of age, and his wife, Rosanna (Hampton) Jack, on February 2, 1867, having attained the age of seventy-one years.

Mr. Jack's family having removed to Gallatin County, Kentucky, in his boyhood after the death of his father, he grew up there, obtaining a primary education chiefly in the common schools of Boone County, not far from Burlington, the county-seat. Here (in Gallatin and Boone Counties) he grew to manhood, remaining until about twenty-five years of age; in the meantime engaged in the dry-goods and grocery trade in a country store, also dealt in produce, especially leaf and manufactured tobacco. His location at this time was at the mouth of Sugar Creek, a few miles from Warsaw, a town on the Ohio River laid out by Henry Yates (the father of Illinois' War Governor, Richard Yates), with whom he renewed his acquaintance after coming to Illinois. After receiving a brief training in the dry-goods and grocery business, Mr. Jack engaged in the river trade, gathering up supplies of produce along the Ohio and its tributaries, and shipping them by flat-boat to points along the Mississippi. He early established a depot at Memphis, which he maintained for two or three years, after which he extended his trade to New Orleans, bartering his produce at the river towns and plantations enroute. In this way he disposed of large cargoes of hay, pork, potatoes and other kinds of produce, usually closing out the remnant of his stock at wholesale on his arrival at New Orleans. His boats were usually bought each year at Cincinnati and sold out at New Orleans after his cargo had been disposed of. The reminiscences of his experiences while following in the track of Abraham Lincoln's flat-boat trips to New Orleans at an earlier day, have furnished Mr. Jack much material for the entertainment of his friends in later years. An incident of his life during his flat-boating career illustrates the sturdy quality of Captain Jack's habits of thrift and industry, which lie at the foundation of the ample fortune which he afterwards acquired. It was during a vacation in his flat-boat voyages that he was induced to loan the sum of $500, which he had previously saved and was holding for future use, to a gentleman in Indiana who was building a home near the Ohio River, with the promise that the sum should be returned with interest at ten per cent. when wanted—the prevailing rate of interest for short time accommodation, being twenty-five per cent. Then, in order to keep himself employed and pay expenses while waiting the opening of the next year's river trade, he hired himself to his debtor at fifty cents a day to carry the hod for the masons at work on the house being erected with his money. It is not to be wondered at that a young man, with such an eye to business economy, should have become a leading capitalist of Peoria.

Leaving New Orleans in 1855, Captain Jack made the trip from Cairo by the newly opened Illinois Central Railroad, finally reaching Chillicothe in the northeastern corner of Peoria County, where he engaged in the grain-trade, also opened the first lumber-yard there and erected a grain-warehouse or elevator. He also built a canal-boat at Peoria for the purpose of conveying his produce to market, and for some time carried on a large river trade on the Illinois. In February, 1856, he was married to Anna W. Moss, daughter of Capt. William S. Moss, a prominent business man of Peoria. Mrs. Jack was a niece of Mrs. Lydia Bradley, the founder of the "Bradley Polytechnic Institute," and a distant relative of the Choate family of Massachusetts. After his marriage, Captain Jack settled on a large farm near Peoria, where he remained until 1863, when he removed to Peoria, where he had already purchased the interest of his father-in-law in the distillery of Moss, Bradley & Co., which, three years later took the name of Bradley, Jack & Co. After the enactment of the National Banking Law he assisted in the organization of the First National Bank of Peoria; was also a stock-holder in the Bridge and Gas Companies, and a Director in each, but, about 1881, having sold out his interest in the distilling business, he removed to California, where he has spent much of his time during the last twenty years. Having dissolved his connection with financial and manufacturing enterprises about Peoria, Captain Jack has devoted his time in later years chiefly to looking after his real estate interests, which are extensive in this city and county and elsewhere.

Seven children were born to Captain and Mrs. Jack, namely: Minnie H. (married to Jerome Young of San Francisco); Edward M. (graduated in law and practiced for a time in Peoria, but died in California some fifteen years ago); William S., a resident of California; Annie E. (now Mrs. L. F. Bowyer of Chicago); Lile A. (wife of W. A. Howe, son of Vice-President Howe of the Grand Trunk Railroad) also of Chicago; Noel Hampton (a ranchman near Stockton, California), and Miss Rose Choate Jack, at present a student of music and a vocalist in Paris. Mrs. Jack died in California, January 8, 1888. In 1893 Mr. Jack married, as his second wife, Mrs. Annie Bell Bush (nee Brush) a cousin of his first wife, their mothers being sisters. The latter union continued seven years, the second Mrs. Jack dying in September, 1900. Captain Jack was an earnest Democrat and an intimate personal friend of Senator Douglas during the days of that statesman's active public career. His business life has been characterized by marked activity and enterprise and a success corresponding in degree with both.

WILLIAM JACK.

No class of citizens have borne a more conspicuous or influential part in giving to Peoria the prominence which it has enjoyed among the cities of the State, than its lawyers. These have embraced men who have not only won reputations in the practice of their profession at the bar, but who have achieved distinction upon the bench, in the forum and in the councils of the State and the Nation. Of those belonging to a later period, no name stands more prominent at the present time for actual service at the bar, than that of William Jack, of the firm of Jack & Tichenor. Mr. Jack is a native of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, born January 10, 1844—his parents, Joseph and H. J. (Herron) Jack, both being natives of that State. After a course in the Sewickley Academy in his native State, at the age of sixteen (1860) he came to Peoria, where he attended the High School, graduating therefrom in 1862. He then engaged in the study of law, at first with the late Judge Marion Williamson, and later in the office of Judge Hezekiah M. Wead, upon his admission to the bar becoming a partner of the latter. In 1873 he was appointed Master in Chancery for the Peoria County Circuit Court, serving for several terms. The firm of Wead & Jack having been dissolved, in January, 1874, Mr. Jack formed a partnership with Judge Lawrence W. James, which was continued until about 1882, when Mr. James having been elected County Judge of Peoria County, Nathan G. Moore, now of the firm of Wilson, Moore & McIlvaine, Chicago, was admitted to the firm. Mr. Moore retired about 1885, when Mr. Jack entered into partnership with Mr. F. H. Tichenor, which has continued up to the present time. Their business of late years has been largely in connection with incorporation cases. For more than fifteen years Mr. Jack has been one of the attorneys for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and has also been identified in a similar capacity with several of the banks and other corporations of the city of Peoria. In politics he is an Independent (or Gold) Democrat, but does not aspire to be an active politician, preferring to devote his attention to the practice of his profession.

Mr. Jack was united in marriage on August 5, 1860, to Miss Annie Grier, daughter of John C. Grier, a prominent grain and commission merchant of Peoria, and has four children—two sons and two daughters. The older son, Robert P., is now a practicing attorney of Peoria. The other children are Sarah G., William J. and Elizabeth. Mrs. Jack is a sister of the late Gen. David P. Grier, who won a high reputation as a soldier and an officer during the Civil War. Mr. Jack is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church and, in the language of the "Bench and Bar of Illinois," "a valued citizen of the community who gives his support to all beneficial measures, and lends the influence of his opposition to all movements detrimental to the public good."

JOHN JOHNSTON.

The public, political and other services rendered the County of Peoria by Mr. Johnston, have been characterized by a broad understanding of the duties involved, and more than ordinary dignity and discretion in the fulfillment thereof. Although born in Beloit, Wisconsin, October 2, 1860, Mr. Johnston has passed almost his entire life amid his present surroundings, for in 1862 his parents, Robert and Eleanor (Taylor) Johnston, removed from Beloit to Peoria, where the elder Johnston was the first dry-goods merchant to locate on Adams Street.

In his youth Mr. Johnston was favored from an educational standpoint; for, after completing the training of the public schools of Peoria, he attended the Episcopal College at Belfast, Ireland. Upon returning to American soil he acquired his first business experience as cashier in his father's store, and afterwards received a broader recognition of his ability while serving for seven years as Assistant Librarian of the Peoria Public Library. In the meantime he had made his influence felt as a staunch advocate of Democracy, and, in the fall of 1890, was elected to the

Fredrick H. Smith

Thirty-seventh General Assembly of Illinois, and was one of the famous "101" Democrats whose enthusiastic backing rendered possible the election of United States Senator John M. Palmer. In 1892, when the requisite population of Peoria County rendered possible the separation of the hitherto combined offices of Recorder of Deeds and Circuit Court, Mr. Johnston was elected to the former office, and was re-elected in 1896 and again in 1900.

The union in marriage of Mr. Johnston and Magdalena Praszch was solemnized June 26, 1889, and the death of Mrs. Johnston occurred October 6, 1901. Mr. Johnston has been active in promoting many of the enterprises of Peoria, and his assistance may be counted on for the furthering of any worthy and wise cause. Fraternally he is well and favorably known, and is identified with the Fraternal Mystic Circle, the Independent Order of Foresters, and the Improved Order of Red Men. Throughout the years of his public service he has demonstrated a particular aptitude for political responsibility, and this, combined with a singularly genial and courteous personality, an unchanging obligingness, and genius for method and detail, renders him one of the most popular and trusted county officials.

ALVAN KIDDER.

Among the pioneer citizens and business men of Peoria, the name of Alvan Kidder is entitled to special distinction. Mr. Kidder was born at Braintree, Vermont, February 12, 1801, and his father having died when he was quite young, he removed with his mother to Alexander, Genesee County, New York, where he grew to manhood. When he had reached the age of about eighteen years, he went to Randolph, Massachusetts, and soon after became connected with a shoe factory as partner of Seth Mann, whose daughter he afterwards married. While a resident of Massachusetts, he served as Clerk of the town of Randolph, and was also a member of the Massachusetts General Assembly at each session for a period of four years.

In 1835 Mr. Kidder came to Peoria and at once engaged in the general mercantile business, his store being located at what is now No. 119 Main Street. At the age of fifty years, however, he retired from mercantile pursuits, and thereafter gave his attention solely to the real-estate business, in which he had previously been engaged to some extent, and in which he was remarkably successful. During his business life he came into possession of a great many notes and mortgages, and, in contrast with the methods in vogue among money-lenders generally, and to his infinite credit, it can truthfully be said that he never pressed or distressed a single debtor or foreclosed a mortgage—a record which won for him the thanks and unbounded respect of many whom he aided in the course of his business career.

In political belief and association Mr. Kidder was an earnest and uncompromising Democrat, and discharged his duty as a citizen with scrupulous fidelity, even in the latter years of his life insisting upon being escorted to the polls in order that he might give his support to the principles in which he conscientiously believed.

Mr. Kidder was married in 1824, to Miss Betsy Mann, daughter of Seth and Betsy Mann, of Randolph, Massachusetts. Four children were born of this union, of whom one died in infancy. The others were Alvan, Jr., George and Annie. Alvan resided in Farmington, Fulton County, was married to Lucy Ewalt, and died November 17, 1899, leaving three children. George, the second son, died September 18, 1880. The daughter Annie, the sole survivor of the family, was married April 8, 1885, to Frank M. Reinhart, of Peoria, and at present resides in the old homestead on Sixth Avenue, which has been in possession of the family for fifty-four years.

Mr. Kidder died in Peoria, November 19, 1871.

MARTIN KINGMAN.

At every stage of his well-directed career, Martin Kingman has profited by the rugged substantiality of his character, by a versatility which has utilized many avenues of activity, and by an unassailable integrity and general worth in keeping with his standing as a representative Illinoisan and promoter of the all-around well being of Peoria. A native of the State where he is best known as a banker, as a manufacturer of agricultural implements and as the largest agricultural implement distributing jobber in this line in the United States, he was born at Deer Creek, Tazewell County, Illinois, April 1, 1844.

The Kingman family has long been identified with the large opportunities of America, the emigrating ancestor having been Henry Kingman, who, with his wife, Joanna, sailed away from the ancestral home in England and arrived at Weymouth, Massachusetts, in May, 1622. As a means of livelihood amid the unfamiliar conditions of his adopted country, he operated a ferry across Weymouth Bay, a short distance from Boston. This fact has been perpetuated in the family coat of arms, which was adopted at a family reunion in August, 1890, when there were present over six hundred of the family kindred.

His children continued to live in Massachusetts, and settled in North Bridgewater, a short distance from Weymouth, and here the paternal grandfather of Martin was born, although in later life he removed to Pelham, of the same State. The deeds and enterprise of this ferryman ancestor and his helpmate has never been allowed to slumber in the remembrance of his latter-day descendants, and, lest their history should be shrouded in oblivion, a reunion of the 600 or more relatives was held August 8, 1890, and a monument erected to the founders of the family in America.

The first of the Kingmans to come to Illinois was Abel, the father of Martin, who left Pelham, Mass., where he was born and reared on what is known as Pelham Hills, just east of Amherst.

On coming to Illinois, he settled in Tazewell County in 1834. The following year he married Mary Ann Bingham, whom he met in Illinois, and who was of French-English extraction, and a native of Norfolk, Va. Of this union there were four sons, of whom Martin is the youngest. Charles, the oldest, died in California in 1894; Cyrus is living at Delavan, Illinois, and Henry is a leading cattle and stock-raiser and farmer at Delavan, Kansas.

When Martin was four years of age, his father was drowned while crossing the Mackinaw River. His mother was, therefore, left with the four boys and the farm, where he received his early training. The family resources not permitting all the advantages desired by the children of the Kingman household, Martin, after finishing his studies at the district school at twelve years of age, left home, and for two years attended a school in the old Tazewell County Court House at Tremont, then occupied as an academy. Following this, he attended the Washington Academy, at Washington, Tazewell County, for two years, teaching in the winter and going to school in the summer.

During his attendance at the Washington Academy he became a cadet in the Washington Zouaves, and first learned what it was to be a soldier. This company was commanded by the late Colonel Dan Miles, who commanded the Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers in the late Rebellion.

The culmination of the strife between the North and the South in the Civil War found Mr. Kingman engaged in educational work, teaching school in his home district in Deer Creek, Tazewell County. His interest in the war was so great that he would often, after dismissing the school at four P. M., ride some ten miles to Washington to get the news as to how the war was progressing. His brother Cyrus having enlisted at an early period in 1861, he thus felt doubly interested, and kept in close touch with every progress of the war; and when the Presidential call for three hundred thousand troops came in 1862, his patriotism could not be restrained, and at the first opportunity, at a meeting held in the home church, was the first one at that meeting to volunteer his services, and thirty-eight of the home boys joined and united in the organization of Company G, Eighty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Although but eighteen years of age at the time, he was elected Second Lieutenant of the company, and was the youngest officer in the Second Division of the Fourteenth Army Corps, Army of the Cumberland, in which he served. He saw much of the terrible and heart-rending side of warfare, and his regiment participated in all the important battles from Perryville to the capture of Atlanta, and from Atlanta to the Sea, and from Savannah through South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia to Washington. With the other foot-sore and battle-weary veterans who had staked to a winning cause, at the close of the war he marched up Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington with the same enthusiasm with which he had followed the fortunes of Sherman in his famous "March to the Sea."

For so young an officer, he was singularly honored with responsibility, and seems to have won, to an unusual degree, the confidence and friendship of those with whom he was associated. During the first year and a half he remained with his company, which he commanded very often for weeks at a time. He was detailed as commander of Company K during the absence of its officers, and remained with it as its commander for some time. He was also detailed, and commanded a company, in the Eighty-fourth Illinois, which had been captured and had no officers.

For the last year and a half of his service he was on the staff of Colonel Dan McCook, youngest of the famous fighters of the McCook family, and, at the death of Colonel McCook, was on the staff of Colonel Langley, who commanded the brigade, and in that capacity had charge of the Ambulance Corps and medical stores of the Third Brigade, Second Division, Fourteenth Army Corps. In this position Mr. Kingman became acquainted with nearly all the general officers belonging to the Fourteenth Army Corps, as well as those of the Armies of the Cumberland, Tennessee and Ohio, the Army of the Cumberland being commanded by General George H. Thomas. This acquaintance is one of the pleasantest things of the war, as he has been continually, since the close of the war, meeting these men at various parts of the country. He was promoted to the First Lieutenantcy on the death of the Captain, who was mortally wounded at the battle of Bentonville, North Carolina. Mr. Kingman is very proud of his army record, having entered the army when only a few months over eighteen years of age, served continuously for almost three years, never being absent from his command, either from sickness or on furlough; and also of the fact, that he never received a bounty or any other gift from the Government, State or county, and has never applied for a pension.

On reaching Atlanta, he made application for a furlough, having been absent from home then almost two years. The application was returned with the endorsement of General Jefferson C. Davis, then commanding the Fourteenth Army Corps, with the following words: "All good soldiers are wanted at this time. Respectfully declined." Had this application been granted Mr. Kingman would not have participated in the campaign of the "March to the Sea," now so famous, and which he is justly entitled to be proud of.

Before the disbandment of the armies of Sherman and Grant, and while the regiment was lying at Washington, a regimental reunion was held, in which Mr. Kingman was appointed, with other comrades in arms, to have charge of the Eighty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry Reunion, the same to be held at Peoria, Illinois, August 27, 1865, this being the third anniversary of the day in which they were mustered into the United States service. This reunion took place, and was one of the happy events for those who were fortunate enough to have spent three years in the great Civil War.

It was while thus fulfilling an appointed task that Mr. Kingman became interested in the city of Peoria and decided to make it his home. During the fall and winter of 1865, he found employment as a salesman in a flour-mill in Peoria, and the following spring, having saved a little money from his army pay, formed a grocery partnership with Henry Clauson, and for three months conducted the business under the firm name of Clauson & Kingman, at the head of Bridge Street, in what was then known as Oak Hall. This business having been disposed of at a handsome profit, he then engaged as a traveling salesman for a Peoria wholesale boot and shoe house. This position was relinquished on January 1, 1867, at which time was established the agricultural implement business which has since acquired an almost national reputation. For the first three years the firm was Kingman & Dunham, but owing to ill health, Mr. Dunham was obliged to dispose of his interest to Walter B. Hotchkiss and Charles T. Hurd, and for the following three years the firm name was Kingman, Hotchkiss & Company. In 1873 the firm was changed to Kingman & Company, and was incorporated in 1882, the capital stock being $600,000. Though not a manufacturing concern, Kingman & Company have become known as large distributors of agricultural implements, having branch houses in St. Louis, Missouri; Dallas, Texas; Kansas City, Missouri; Omaha, Nebraska, and Des Moines, Iowa, with numerous transfer houses. In the office and traveling departments, employment is given to about 250 people, fifty traveling men being employed throughout the year, the additional work during the summer necessitating some twenty-five extra men. While the Mississippi Valley constitutes a large part of the territory covered by the men, some twenty States and several Territories may be counted on for enormous patronage every year.

In addition to a general stock, Kingman & Company sell largely the product manufactured by the Peoria Cordage Company and the Kingman Plow Company, of which enterprises Mr. Kingman is President and a large stockholder, each concern having a capital stock of $400,000, and employing, in the aggregate, about 600 people. About twenty lines, from leading manufacturers, are also carried in the various jobbing houses, having exclusive agencies and selling the goods as the representatives of the manufacturers. The annual sales of these various branch houses run up into very large figures.

Owing to his leading position in the manufacturing and distributing of agricultural implements, Mr. Kingman was elected at the National Convention at Kansas City, in October, 1901, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the National Association of Agricultural Implement and Vehicle Manufacturers, the Association comprising some 300 members, and representing a capital of over three hundred millions of dollars—a position of very great importance and responsibility.

As a banker Mr. Kingman enjoys an enviable reputation in Illinois, and the institutions which have profited by his financial genius and admirable management stand high among the commercial bulwarks of the State. At the present time he is identified, as President, with the Illinois National Bank, one of the leading banks of Peoria, with a capital of $150,000, besides having been formerly President and one of the chief organizers of the Central National Bank. He is also a Director of the Fort Dearborn National Bank, Chicago, and is a holder of stock in a number of other banks.

He was one of the original organizers and stockholders of the Peoria General Electric Company, and only recently sold his holdings, which were among the largest of that company. He was one of the original stockholders and members of the National Hotel Company, of which he is President and the largest stockholder.

On the declaration of war against Spain, in 1898, Mr. Kingman, being much interested, asked permission from Governor Tanner to raise a regiment of infantry, which was granted, and, in connection with Colonel Isaac Taylor, he assisted in organizing a regiment which mustered 1075 men, and was known as the Peoria Provisional Regiment. He was elected Lieutenant Colonel of the regiment and took an active part in the enrolling, mustering and drilling of the same for some three months, besides bearing a large share of the expense attendant upon the preparation of the regiment for service in the field. Owing to the early close of the war the regiment was not called into actual service; but the knowledge of the existence of such organizations in this and other States, exerted a strong influence in sustaining the hands of the Government, and in convincing other nations of the determination, on the part of the American people, to bring the struggle to an early and successful conclusion. The Legislature of the State passed, unanimously, a resolution commissioning the officers, and Mr. Kingman points with pride to his commission as Lieutenant Colonel of the Peoria Provisional Regiment of the Spanish-American War.

Mr. Kingman is a member of Bryner Post, No. 67, Grand Army of the Republic, and of the Loyal Legion of America. He is also a member of the Chicago Bankers' Club and of the Union League Club of Chicago.

Mr. Kingman has not been a politician, but has taken an active interest in matters pertaining to the County and State. He served as a member of the Board of Canal Commissioners for six years having been appointed by Governor Shelby M. Cullom. He was a member of the County Board of Supervisors during the erection of the present Court House, and was a member of the building committee.

Mr. Kingman was married to Emeline T. Shelly on May 21, 1867. Of this union there have been five children, three of whom are living: Louis Shelly Kingman, Vice-President of Kingman Plow Company; Walter Bingham Kingman, Vice-President of Kingman & Company; and Mabel Dunham Kingman, all of whom are living with their parents in their home on Perry Avenue.

JOHN E. KIRK.

John E. Kirk was born, March 4, 1850, in Richmond, Ray County, Missouri. His father was James F. Kirk, a native of Tennessee, the Kirk family in the ante-bellum days being among the distinguished and prosperous planters of the South. Mr. Kirk's mother was Nancy Catherine Couch, a native of Kentucky. James F. Kirk located permanently, soon after the birth of John E., at North Salem, Sullivan County, Missouri, and engaged in agriculture. From one corner of the home place he donated land for a Baptist church, and, in the churchyard connected therewith, both he and his wife now lie buried.

The only educational advantages John E. Kirk enjoyed in his youth were such as were afforded by the common schools, supplemented by an attendance, for one or two winters, at the Kirksville Normal School, at Kirksville, Missouri. He grew up on the farm, a sturdy lad with a goodly share of health and unbounded energy, the latter quality, particularly, standing him in good stead in the battle of life which he was destined to fight in later years. On February 13, 1870, he married Laura J. Sevier, who was descended from the noted Sevier family of Tennessee, and also from the Richardson family of Baltimore, Maryland. They established their first home near Baxter Springs, in Cherokee County, Kansas, where he engaged in farming and stock-raising. In the autumn of 1872 he returned to Missouri and soon after went to California, where he resided for a time at San Jose, and also at Colusa. He was not entirely satisfied with his opportunities and environments on the Pacific slope, so after a time he returned to Missouri, and, at Salisbury, Chariton County, he formed the acquaintance of an old inventor named John R. Hill and from him purchased the rights and letters-patent of a device for stacking hay. This was a simple and extremely crude affair, but it proved to be the basis and foundation from which Mr. Kirk's success in life was subsequently developed. He began the manufacture and sale of these hay-stackers, and being a man of great ingenuity and inventive genius, from time to time made improvements and changes in the structure of this device, until it lost all semblance to that which he had originally purchased, and became, as it remains today, the standard machine for its purpose. As his business grew he began casting about for a better location, and being attracted to Peoria on account of the superior transportation facilities that city afforded, he moved to that place and permanently located in 1881. He soon succeeded in establishing a paying and rapidly growing business and, in 1885, organized a stock company called the Acme Hay Harvester Company (now the Acme Harvester Company), and became its President and General Manager, and so remained until 1890, when, owing to over-application to business, his health failed and he was reluctantly compelled to sever his connection with the business which he had founded and carried forward to such flattering success. Disposing of his entire interest in the plant, he thereafter devoted his attention to the care of his estate and investments. During the years of his prosperity in the manufacturing business, he had invested largely in Kansas wheat land and California fruit land, as well as in city property in Peoria and in Buffalo, New York. The last years of his life were spent mainly in California, where he devoted himself principally to growing hemp fibre. He purchased about 400 acres of rich sandy loam in Butte County, some sixty miles north of Sacramento, built thereon a comfortable dwelling, and engaged in hemp-growing on a large scale. At the time he began this experiment, no machine for preparing the fibre for market was known, other than the primitive hand-break, and Mr. Kirk at once set to work on the problem of devising a machine for that purpose. He succeeded so well that the machine built by him, and operated by steam power, not only crushed the wooden stalk and separated it from the hemp fibre, but wound the latter straight and untangled on an immense spool or bobbin, thus leaving it in the most desirable shape for future handling; and, it may be remarked in passing, that this machine is today the only device for the purpose in use in this country.

To Mr. and Mrs. Kirk were born three children: Walter H., born December 5, 1870, near Baxter Springs, Missouri, now a prosperous attorney in Peoria; Norman T., born July 28, 1873, near Browning, Linn County, Missouri, and now conducting the ranch in California; and Bertha Mabel, now Mrs. F. H. Averv, born January 10, 1876, near North Salem, Sullivan County, Missouri.

In politics Mr. Kirk was a Republican. He was an attendant upon the services of the Universalist Church, and was highly advanced in the order of Free and Accepted Masonry, being a member of the Blue Lodge Chapter, Commandery and Mystic Shrine. He was a most earnest advocate of the noble principles proclaimed and inculcated by this most ancient and honorable order. He was a polished, courteous and courtly gentleman, a steadfast friend and the personification and embodiment of aggressive energy. It was, indeed, to the latter quality that his early decease is mainly attributed; excessive application to business, bringing about nervous exhaustion and a depletion of the vital forces, from which he found it impossible to recover. He died on his ranch in California, March 15, 1898. To such men as John E. Kirk is due the credit for the wonderful advancement industrial America has made in the latter half of the century just closed.

ERHARD KRAMM.

Erhard Kramm was born in Woerrstadt, Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, May 4, 1837. His parents were Andrew Kramm, born at Alzey, Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, in 1801, and died in 1885, and Susan (Lutz) Kramm, born at Bechtolsheim, Germany, in 1805, and died in 1849. Andrew Kramm served his term of five years in the German Army, and then became overseer of construction of public buildings for the Government, retaining that position for over fifty years, when he retired upon a pension, which he drew until his death.

Erhard Kramm came to America in 1852. He spent one year in Cleveland, Ohio, upon a farm, and, during that time, attended night school, where he acquired a knowledge of the English language. In the fall of 1853 he removed to Peoria, engaging in various employments until the latter part of 1864, when he went into the coal-mining business at Edwards Station, which he carried on for himself and others with marked success and reasonable profit for a number of years. He afterwards sold his interest in the mines at Edwards Station and opened coal mines on the line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, at Kramm's Station. There he conducted business until 1895, when he sold out and has not been engaged in any active mercantile or commercial business since. He is the owner of two large farms in Peoria County, which have interested him and taken considerable of his time.

Mr. Kramm, several years ago, evidenced his faith in Peoria and her future in purchasing real estate in different parts of the city. He invested his income in developing the property, having erected twenty-five or more houses, which he still owns and rents. Mr. Kramm was one of the organizers (1859) and Secretary of the "New Peoria Fire Company" No. 4. He was one of the stockholders and organizers of the German Banking Company, also one of the organizers and a stockholder in the German Fire Insurance Company.

In 1875 Mr. Kramm visited his old home in Germany. He is still engaged in the active management and control of his property, and is the owner of a pleasant home on North Madison Avenue, where he resides with his family. For several years he has taken life somewhat easily, and fortunately has so invested the earnings of his working years as to give him an abundant competence for ease, leisure and comfort in his advancing years. He is still an active force in the business enterprises of Peoria. His success was due to his willingness to labor at anything not dishonorable or degrading, his energy, his fidelity to his employer, and every trust reposed in him, and his strict integrity in all his business dealings. He is another marked illustration of the truth that honesty and integrity in the long run are the best guarantees of real success.

Mr. Kramm was married to Emily Coquelin, August 6, 1863. Seven children have been born to them: Ida Josephine, born May 31, 1864, died February 17, 1865; Charles Ballance, born November 29, 1865; Edward, born February 12, 1868, died February 24, 1868; Leslie, born May 3, 1869; Harold Dennis, born May 22, 1871; Erhard, born December 21, 1874; and William, born December 26, 1876. Charles B. married Velma Morgan; Leslie, Ada Morrison; Harold D., Ada Shewmaker; Erhard, Henrietta Louise Piergue, and William, Ludell Fisher.

Mrs. and Mrs. Kramm are members of the Lutheran Church.

SEBASTIAN KRAUS.

That rugged substantiality and honesty of purpose which is, above all else, the particular heritage of the Teuton, is admirably expressed in the career of Sebastian Kraus, who, at different periods of his well conditioned life, has been equally successful as a blacksmith, farmer, builder, merchant and Justice of the Peace. A native of Ratheim, Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, he was born January 20, 1820, the son of Jacob and Katharine (Dries) Kraus, who were farmers during their years of activity.

In his native land Sebastian Kraus was educated in the public schools, and, following a long established precedent, was apprenticed when fourteen years of age and, after due diligence, became an expert blacksmith. His youthful energy and buoyant spirits rebelled somewhat at the limitations by which he was surrounded, and he therefore bade adieu to the land of his forefathers, April 18, 1841, after a tempestuous voyage arriving in New York about the middle of July. His trade stood him in good stead and proved no respecter of persons; for, almost immediately, he secured employment on the construction of the Croton Aqueduct. At the end of a month he journeyed west to Missouri, where, at Boonville, lived a brother who had preceded him to America, on the way thither visiting Philadelphia, Pittsburg and Saint Louis, and thus gaining a fair idea of western life and enterprise. In Boonville he worked for about two years, but in the autumn of 1843 went to New Orleans, where he worked at his trade until the beginning of the following May. Desirous of again seeing his friends in the Fatherland, he then embarked in a sailing vessel and, after a voyage of forty-eight days, arrived at Havre, whence he proceeded to Germany. A two-years' stay amid old-time conditions convinced him that America offered the greater promise of reward to industry and ability, and he therefore returned to Boonville, where, during his previous stay, he had purchased forty acres of land. This land became a field of effort for about a year, and, in connection with its improvement, he also worked at his trade. Having disposed of his Boonville interests, he returned to New Orleans, where he remained until July of 1848, after which he located in Peoria and, for a time, industriously plied his trade. He then turned his attention to building and contracting, also conducted a grocery and general store, and, in course of a comparatively short time, erected several dwelling-houses for renting purposes. In 1864 he gave up his mercantile and building business, and has since devoted himself to his duties as a Notary Public and the management of his property, in which he has been successfully engaged for many years.

As the result of his first marriage on August 16, 1846, with Margaret Shuelein, a native of Bavaria, there were two children: Charles F., who is now living in the State of Washington, and Mena, who is now Mrs. Davis, of Peoria. Mrs. Kraus died, October 23, 1863, and on November 9, 1864, Mr. Kraus married Eva Marie Hickman, who died February 15, 1896. Mr. Kraus is a Democrat in political affiliation, and has served his city in various capacities. Between 1863 and 1865 he was Town Supervisor, and in 1865 was elected Justice of the Peace, serving for three succeeding terms of four years each. Since then he has held the position of Notary Public. Mr. Kraus is a stock-holder in the German Fire Insurance Company, and, at various stages of his career, has been actively interested in promoting some of the most ambitious enterprises in the city. He is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and is one of the fine, sterling and substantial characters of the city.

DAVID McCULLOCH.

David McCulloch was born near Big Spring, Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, January 25, 1832, the son of Thomas and Isabella (Blean) McCulloch. On the paternal side the family ancestry is traced to John McCulloch, who was born in Ireland, though of Scotch parentage, and coming to Pennsylvania settled on a farm in what is now Cumberland County, not far from Harrisburg. He married Elizabeth Houston, who was the same stock as President Sam Houston, famous in Texas history. James, one of their eight children, married Mary Henderson, who belonged to a family which emigrated to Kentucky at an early day, and her stalwart character is indicated by the fact of her once making a journey on horseback across the mountains to Kentucky to visit her mother. James McCulloch was a well-to-do farmer who settled at Big Spring and became the owner of about 600 acres of land in that vicinity. He had four sons, of whom one was Thomas, the father of Judge David McCulloch.

The maternal branch of the family was descended from David Blean (pronounced Blaine) who came from Ireland about the middle of the eighteenth century, and whose only son, Robert Blean, the grandfather of Judge McCulloch, married Mary Craig, daughter of John Craig, a minister of the Associate Reformed (now United Presbyterian) Church. They had four sons and five daughters, one of the latter being Isabella, Judge McCulloch's mother.

Of Judge McCulloch's four brothers—he being the youngest of five sons—James, the eldest, spent his life on the home farm in Pennsylvania, dying a few months since, aged seventy-eight; Robert Blean and Thomas Henderson became manufacturers of woolen goods and, coming to Peoria in 1851, established here the first woolen factory, which, proving unprofitable, was abandoned. John Craig, the fourth son, died at the age of twenty-one. Robert B., already mentioned, became a contractor and builder and died several years ago in Peoria, where his family still reside. Thomas H. removed to Monmouth, Illinois, and afterwards to Omaha, where he died a few years since. Of the sisters, Mary Ellen became the wife of William S. Morrow, and resides at Westfield, New Jersey, while the youngest died in infancy.

Thomas McCulloch's family was brought up on the home farm which he had inherited from his father, and here Judge David McCulloch received his early education in one of the primitive log school houses of that period. One of the pleasant reminiscences of his early life is the personnel of the pupils of this school, among whom were three by the name of Sharpe, coming from three different families, one of whom, Alexander, became a physician, moved to St. Louis, married a sister of Mrs. General Grant and spent the remainder of his life as a surgeon in the army; another, A. Brady, became a prominent lawyer of Carlisle and served gallantly on the staff of Major General Ord during the Civil War, and the third, J. McDowell, became a prominent lawyer and leading Democratic politician of Eastern Pennsylvania. There were also two cousins of his own, John S. and Joseph M. McCulloch, the former of whom became a minister, was pastor of one of the Peoria churches, became Chaplain in the Seventy-seventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteers and later President of a Freedman's College at Knoxville, Tennessee; the latter was a captain in the same regiment, and afterwards County Treasurer and County Judge of Woodford County.

In his eleventh year David McCulloch came under the instruction of a teacher from New England, named Roswell D. French, a brother of Augustus C. French, afterwards Governor of Illinois, who proved to be a man of superior education and, by the introduction of new methods in teaching, infused new life into the educational system of that region. Three years later he established a classical school (or academy) at Newville, which the youthful McCulloch attended, walking a distance of four miles and return daily. One of his classmates in this school was Joseph Hunter Herron, a brother of Mrs. James S. Eckles, of Princeton, Illinois, one of whose sons is James Herron Eckles, formerly Comptroller of the Currency. French's school was remarkably successful, but his health having failed, he in less than a year returned to his home in New England and soon after died.

After some unavoidable interruptions, having completed his preparation for college at Newville Academy under Prof. John Kilbourne, in September, 1848, Mr. McCulloch entered Marshall College at Mercersburg, Pennsylvania—an institution conducted under the auspices of the German Reformed Church, and closely related to the German Reformed Theological Seminary, both being housed under the same roof. One of the professors of the latter was the late Dr. Philip Schaff, who had been a pupil of Neander in Germany, and was afterwards distinguished as an ecclesiastical historian and theologian in connection with the Union Theological Seminary of New York. Here the young student was brought in contact with new elements and new lines of thought, including among his fellow-students not only many Germans of American birth, but many students of theology who had come for purposes of study direct from Germany. Connected with the institution, whose names were distinguished for ripe scholarship, were Dr. John W. Nevin, its President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, as well as head of the Theological Seminary, and Prof. Thomas C. Porter, of the chair of Natural Science, who afterwards attained to a national reputation as Professor of Botany in La Fayette College, at Easton, Pennsylvania. Mr. McCulloch graduated with first honors in the class of 1852, which was the last sent out by Marshall College, as, at the close of the same term, it was removed to Lancaster and united with Franklin College under the name of Franklin and Marshall College, under which it still exists. A matter of interest in connection with the history of Marshall College, is the fact that James Buchanan was President of its Board of Trustees, and accustomed to attend the annual commencements—his birth-place being about three miles northwest of the village at the foot of a mountain, the summit of which commanded a view of the Cumberland valley from the Susquehanna to the Potomac.

J. L. Spalding
Bp of Nevada

After spending his first winter after graduation in teaching in the same school house in which Mr. French had taught ten years before, on April 19, 1853, Mr. McCulloch left his eastern home to join his brothers, Robert B. and Thomas H., who has preceded him, arriving at Peoria at midnight of April 22. He immediately began looking up scholars for a classical school, which was established soon after in the basement of the First Methodist Church, but two years later he discontinued teaching and began the study of law with Julius Manning and Amos L. Merriman, two of the most prominent members of the Peoria bar of that period. Mr. Manning, besides occupying a prominent position in the ranks of the Democratic party, was regarded as one of the most brilliant orators in the State.

In the fall of 1855 Mr. McCulloch was elected School Commissioner for Peoria County on the Democratic ticket—a position which he filled by two successive re-elections, for six years. In the meantime, having completed his law studies, he was admitted to the bar in the spring of 1857. On September 2, 1858, he was married near Shippensburg, in his native county, to Mary Fulton Hemphill. In 1860, having determined to retire from the office of School Commissioner and open an office of his own, accompanied by his wife he made a visit to his old home in Pennsylvania, extending his trip to Philadelphia, for the purpose of purchasing a law library. Incidents connected with this trip were the hearing of a Republican speech by the late Senator John Sherman at Philadelphia, witnessing the arrival of the Prince of Wales (now Edward VII. of England) at Harrisburg, and listening to speeches by Senator Douglas at Harrisburg and Chicago. During this visit Mr. and Mrs. McCulloch were called upon to endure the most grievous affliction of their lives in the death of their oldest child, a daughter of fourteen months.

Reared amid Democratic surroundings, and educated in an institution with which James Buchanan was identified as President of its Board of Trustees, Judge McCulloch naturally imbibed the principles of the Democratic party. On the division of that party in 1860, growing out of the differences between Douglas and Buchanan over the settlement of the issues in Kansas, he espoused the cause of Douglas, and continued to occupy this position until 1862. In the campaign of that year he supported the candidacy of Gen. Thomas J. Henderson, now of Princeton, for Congress, as against that of Owen Lovejoy, who was elected. While making speeches in this campaign he had the opportunity, on more than one occasion, of meeting Lovejoy personally and hearing him disavow the extreme view of the Abolitionists of the school of William Lloyd Garrison, thereby obtaining a more accurate conception of the anti-slavery principles of Lincoln, Seward, Lovejoy and their political allies, and, in the campaign of 1864, he was found in full co-operation with them. With a strong tendency toward political independence, Judge McCulloch, as a rule, has been in sympathy with the policy and principles of the Republican party. In 1870, and again in 1886, he dissented from the policy of some of the leaders of the party—in the former year supporting the Independent candidate for Congress who was elected, and, in the latter, throwing his influence on the side of the Prohibitionists and supporting their candidates for President at the two ensuing elections. When the Spanish-American war broke out, believing in the wisdom and patriotism of the policy of President McKinley, he gave his support to the administration and has continued to do so ever since.

Judge McCulloch's professional life began in 1860, when he opened a law office in Peoria, but during the following year he accepted an invitation to become a partner of his preceptor, Hon. Julius Manning—Mr. Manning's partner, Judge Merriman, having been promoted to a seat on the circuit bench. The partnership with Mr. Manning lasted only a few months as, after serving as a delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1862, he died on July 4th of that year. The next business connection was with Charles P. Taggart—this lasting until 1866, when

Mr. Taggart, who was then State's Attorney for Peoria and Stark Counties, went to California for the benefit of his health—Mr. McCulloch being selected by the Judges to perform the duties of the office during his unexpired term. Other business partnerships include one with Col. James M. Rice for one year, and next with Hon. John S. Stevens, the latter beginning in 1870 and lasting until the appointment of Mr. Stevens as Postmaster in 1876. About this time the overloaded condition of the Supreme Court docket began to be felt as a serious evil, and, as a means of relief, Judge McCulloch suggested a reduction of the circuits outside of Cook County to one-half the existing number, by the consolidation of two circuits into one, and the election of an additional Judge for each newly organized circuit, thereby increasing the working force of each circuit to three—one of whom could be assigned to Appellate Court duty. The result was the enactment, at the next session of the Legislature, of laws providing for the consolidation of the circuits with an increase of Judges as suggested, and the creation of an Appellate Court, Honorables Anthony Thornton, Sabin D. Puterbaugh and David McCulloch constituting the committee appointed by the State Bar Association for the preparation of the bills for the accomplishment of this purpose. At the ensuing election Mr. McCulloch was elected one of the additional Circuit Judges, was re-elected in 1879, and, immediately thereafter, assigned to duty on the Appellate Bench serving in this capacity for the six years of his second term. In 1880 he was elected President of the State Bar Association to succeed Judge Anthony Thornton and served for one year. In 1883 he was an unsuccessful candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court in opposition to Justice A. M. Craig, and, on the expiration of his term as Circuit Judge in 1885, resumed practice, taking into partnership with him his son, Edward D. McCulloch. In December, 1898, Judge McCulloch was appointed by Judge Grosscup of the United States District Court, Referee in Bankruptcy for Peoria, Tazewell, Woodford, Marshall, Stark and Putnam Counties, and was reappointed in December, 1900, by Judge Kohlsaat, which position he still occupies.

In his church relations Judge McCulloch was originally a member of the Associate Reformed (now United Presbyterian) Church, with which he united during his college course, and continued in communion after his removal to Peoria. In 1866 he became a member of the Second Presbyterian Church of Peoria, of which he has been a Ruling Elder for over thirty years. For eight years last past he has been one of the Directors of McCormick Theological Seminary. His three surviving children are Edward Dickinson, who is the partner of his father, William Herron, who still resides at the paternal home, and Mary Hemphill, the wife of Edward D. McDougal, a resident of Riverside, near Chicago.

Judge McCulloch has been identified with the business interests of the City of Peoria for more than forty years, and has taken a prominent part in whatever tended to the development of the city. He has always been on the side of good government, and advocated the selection of men for all public positions, on account of their qualifications and general fitness, rather than as a reward for any supposed political services. He is possessed of extensive legal learning acquired by long years of industrious application in his chosen profession. He was a successful practitioner, and regarded as one of the best Judges upon the bench in Illinois. During his term upon the Appellate Bench he was associated with Judge Oliver L. Davis, of Danville, and Chauncey L. Higbee, of Pittsfield. That court was generally regarded by the lawyers of the State as one of the ablest, most fearless and independent of any bench in the State for years. It believed in the established principles of law, and adhered to general principles of jurisprudence lying at the foundation of the proper administration of justice.

There was never any trucking or time serving, or any attempt to adjust decisions in accordance with public passion or prejudice. Its decisions were consistent, and valuable as precedents. The court never attempted to change any rules of practice or of law to meet any demands of political or popular prejudice. Judge McCulloch is the only one of the three now surviving. He has always been held in the highest esteem as a citizen, a man, a lawyer and a Judge. In every respect his record has been one worthy of imitation. JOHN S. STEVENS.

EDWARD DICKINSON McCULLOCH.

Edward Dickinson McCulloch, lawyer, was born in Peoria, Illinois, November 5, 1860, the son of Hon. David and Mary Fulton (Hemphill) McCulloch. He attended the Peoria primary and high schools, graduating from the latter in 1878, after which he took a classical course in Lafayette College at Easton, Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in 1882. In the fall of the same year he began the study of law in the office of Stevens, Lee & Horton, continuing until the early part of the year 1885, when he was admitted to the bar. In August of the same year he was admitted to partnership with his father, Judge David McCulloch, under the firm name of McCulloch & McCulloch, and this co-partnership still exists.

In 1889 Mr. McCulloch was chosen Secretary of the Peoples' Loan and Homestead Association of Peoria, a position which he has occupied continuously to the present time; was also appointed Collector of Special Assessments for the city of Peoria, by Mayor Miles, in 1893, continuing in office two years. In 1898 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly for Peoria County, and was re-elected in 1900. During the session of 1899, he served as Chairman of the House Committee on Elections, and, in 1901, of the Revenue Committee, besides being a member of the Committees on Judiciary, Judiciary Department and Practice, Building Loan and Homestead, and others of more or less importance. For the latter term he was also a member of the "House Steering Committee"—a position of prominence, as, representing the Republican majority of the House, it exerted a controlling influence in reference to some of the most important measures coming before that body.

As may be readily inferred from his early training and association, Mr. McCulloch is a thorough-going Republican in politics, and a Presbyterian in religious belief and affiliation. While in college he was a member of the Zeta Psi fraternity. Among local fraternity associations, he is a member of the Illinois Lodge of Free Masons; the Peoria Consistory; Mohammed Temple of the Mystic Shrine; Peoria Lodge of Elks; and Charter Oak Camp of Modern Woodmen of America.

Mr. McCulloch is a young man in the prime of life, of good attainments and high character. In his official life he has been open, straightforward and honorable. He is a believer in merit and fitness for office holding, rather than supposed political services. His career in the Legislature was honorable and influential, and he was recognized as one of the substantial, high-minded and honorable members of the House. He is quiet and unostentatious in manner, but always applies himself with energy and fidelity to the duty at hand. He is regarded in the community as one of the substantial, progressive and growing young men of the city.

In 1894 Mr. McCulloch was married to Emily S. Allen, formerly of Terre Haute, Indiana, and they have one daughter, Henrietta W., born October 16, 1896. Mrs. McCulloch's father was the late James M. Allen—familiarily known at his home as "Que Allen"—a prominent attorney of Terre Haute, who was twice elected Judge of the Superior Court of that State (corresponding to the Circuit Court in Illinois), and who died in 1892 while serving as Mayor of his home city. Mrs. McCulloch is a musician of recognized ability, and has been prominently identified with the musical interests of Peoria.

LEWIS ALBERT MCFADDEN.

Dr. Lewis Albert McFadden comes of an old colonial family of Scotch-Irish extraction. His ancestors were influential men in colonial days and during the early years of the new Republic, and served in the Revolutionary War and that of 1812. His father, John McFadden, was born in Pennsylvania in 1807. December 19, 1837, he married Miss Rachel McCormick, also a native of Pennsylvania, who was born in 1819. The young couple inherited the old homestead, a large farm within six miles of Pittsburg, and here their lives were spent and their family of seven sons and three daughters born. The father died February 11, 1870, and his widow, August 25, 1873. Of the seven sons, two died in childhood, and one, Joseph Dixon McFadden, was killed in the Chatsworth railroad disaster, August 10, 1887. Three brothers of the Doctor are now living—William McCormick McFadden, engaged in fruit-raising in California and President of the Fruit and Nut-Growers' Association of Southern California; John Wilkinson McFadden, general merchant at Virginia, Missouri, and Matthew Thomas McFadden, retired farmer, living in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania. Of the three sisters one died of brain fever in girlhood. The other two still survive—Mrs. Mary Anneta Tombes in Los Angeles, California, and Mrs. Sarah Jane Pendleton in Placentia, California.

Dr. McFadden's paternal grandfather, John McFadden, came to the United States from Belfast, Ireland, in 1765, at the age of fifteen. Two brothers had preceded him to the United States, one settling in New York, where he raised a large family; the other, after a short residence in Virginia, settled in Maine, where several of his descendants are living. John McFadden settled in Western Pennsylvania, where he married Miss Mary McMichaels, who was a native of that State of Scotch-Irish extraction. The young couple purchased three large and valuable farms near the present city of Pittsburg, then a frontier post (Fort Duquesne), deep in the Indian country and much exposed to Indian attacks. The sister of grandmother McFadden was killed in the pasture within a few paces of her home during an Indian raid, while a young boy was killed by her side in the same foray. John McFadden died November 7, 1836, aged seventy years, and his widow, June 21, 1850, aged eighty-six.

Dr. McFadden's maternal grandfather, William McCormick, was born at sea while his parents were on the voyage from the North of Ireland to the United States. The family settled in Western Pennsylvania and, when the boy grew up, he married Miss Margaret Wilkinson of the same neighborhood. They set up an inn (or tavern, as it was then called) on the road to Fort Duquesne from the south, which was much patronized by influential men of the State, and William McCormick became quite a power in the political affairs of the day; also served as an officer in the War of 1812. His wife was a sister of General Wilkinson, a distinguished military officer of the United States at that period. At the breaking out of the Revolutionary War, Wilkinson was a medical student, but joined a rifle company before Boston in 1775, soon afterwards becoming Captain of a New Hampshire Company. He was with Arnold in Canada in 1776, and served as Adjutant-General of the staff of General Gates a year later. The next year he was Secretary of the Board of War, but quarreled with Gates and resigned. In 1791 he led a regiment against the Wabash Indians; in 1792 he became Brigadier-General, and commanded the right wing of Wayne's army at the battle of the Maumee—was also Governor of Louisiana in 1805-06, in the meantime being employed to thwart the conspiracy of Aaron Burr, in which he was successful. With his headquarters in New Orleans he conducted operations against the Spaniards, in 1813 captured Mobile, and later fought the British in Canada and on the northern frontier. He spent the latter years of his life in Mexico, dying in 1818 near the City of Mexico.

It will be seen that Dr. McFadden comes of the sturdy Scotch-Irish stock, which was driven into exile from the north of Ireland, about the middle of the eighteenth century, by the discrimination of the English Parliament against Irish commerce and Irish industries—a short-sighted policy on the part of England that gave to the United States many a good citizen and many a good sword and trusty rifle in the wars of 1776 and 1812. Born on the family homestead within six miles of Pittsburg, March 30, 1848, Dr. McFadden attended the common school of the district until eighteen years old, when he took a course in the normal school at Lebanon, Ohio. After finishing his work here he went to West Virginia, where he taught several terms, part of the time being Principal of the schools at Newhaven. At the age of twenty-two he entered College at Marietta, Ohio, two years later entered Mount Union College, and, in 1879, matriculated in the Miami College, taking a progressive course, and graduating from the Kentucky School of Medicine in 1881. Since receiving his diploma he has practiced continually, for the last fifteen years being a resident of Peoria. In 1886 he took a special course in Baltimore, Maryland. Dr. McFadden's first location after leaving college was at Aurora, Texas, where he began practice. The next year (1882) the city was incorporated, and so popular had the Doctor become during his short residence there, that he was elected Alderman by the highest number of votes cast for any candidate on either ticket. His political duties and practice kept him busy until he removed to Virginia, Missouri, where he enjoyed a large and lucrative practice, and was appointed Postmaster by President Cleveland during his first term of office.

In 1887 Dr. McFadden moved to Peoria, soon found himself enjoying a good practice and, in 1888, unknown to himself, was nominated (by James Dolan) a member of the Board of Health and appointed by unanimous vote of the City Council. The next year he was unanimously appointed County Physician by the Board of Supervisors at a salary of $1,500 a year; at the end of his term, was unanimously reappointed for two years at a salary of $1,800, and re-elected in like manner and for a like term two years later. During President Cleveland's second term, in 1894, the Doctor was appointed Pension Examiner, and chosen by his associates Chairman of the Board, serving in this capacity until the change of administration. In the spring of 1896 he was elected Alderman of the old First Ward, and was re-elected in 1898, being the only Democrat ever chosen in this ward after the reorganization of the city. He closed his service in the City Council by moving out of the Ward before his second term had expired, having bought a fine residence at 305 North Madison Avenue.

In October, 1901, Dr. McFadden was appointed by Mayor Bryan Health Commissioner for the City of Peoria; in addition to this, is also High Physician for the Independent Order of Foresters for the State of Illinois, which office he has held since 1897. He belongs to a large number of secret societies and fraternal insurance orders; is a Free Mason and a Knight of Pythias; a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, a Knight of the Maccabees, a member of the National Union, of the order of Knights and Ladies of Security, of the Royal Circle, Court of Honor, Fraternal Army of America, Royal Neighbors, and several other organizations, for all of which he is examining physician. He is also examining physician for the Phoenix Life Insurance Company and the Security Mutual Life Insurance Company. The Doctor is Vice-President of the Peoria Medical Association and an active member of the State Medical Association, as well as a member of the medical staff of the St. Francis Hospital.

On December 24, 1872, Dr. McFadden married Miss Rachel V. Richie of Apple Grove, Ohio. Four children have been born of this union: Una May McFadden, born April 29, 1878; Goldie Beatrice McFadden, born March 30, 1883; Thomas J. McFadden, born August 4, 1891, and Walton Clark McFadden, born August 1, 1885, died June 15, 1893, of diphtheria. Dr. and Mrs. McFadden joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at an early age, and have been members ever since.

The ability and success which have characterized Dr. McFadden's professional and political career, indicate that he inherits, in a remarkable degree, all the sturdy characteristics of his ancestors. He is known as one of the most conservative and successful physicians in this section of the State. By energy, sympathy and attention to business, he has made a friend of every man and woman who knows him, and his kindly help in time of affliction has brought a ray of hope into many a Peoria home. He has the reputation of having rendered more gratuitous medical service in this city than any other physician; is always ready at the call of the sick, whether the patient be wealthy or penniless, and it is to this generous, kindly characteristic that he owes much of his well-deserved popularity. He has gained his present prominence as a physician and in civic affairs by his sterling and manly qualities, as well as by hard work, and there is not a citizen of Peoria who deserves better the success and reputation he has achieved than does Mr. McFadden.

THOMAS MCGIFFIN MCILVAINE.

To have and deserve the name of "Good Physician," in any community, is as honorable a monument as man can desire. The term "Good," as used in this connection, is comprehensive, embracing character, conduct and qualification.

Dr. Thomas M. McIlvaine was born in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, August 17, 1853, the son of William Brown and Margaret (McGiffin) McIlvaine—both natives of Pennsylvania, the former of Lancaster County and the latter of Washington County. Dr. McIlvaine's great-grandparents, on the paternal side, were George and Sophia (Duffield) McIlvaine, both natives of Philadelphia, who settled in Lancaster County, at an early day, where Mr. McIlvaine received the deed for the land which he occupied directly from the Colonial Government. He was also a soldier in the War of the Revolution. Robert McIlvaine, a son of George and Sophia McIlvaine, born in Lancaster County, married Sarah Slemmons, a native of Philadelphia, and their immediate descendant was William Brown McIlvaine. Dr. McIlvaine's great-grandfather on the maternal side was Nathaniel McGiffin, born in Dublin, Ireland, who married Margaret Duncan, a native of Glasgow, Scotland. They became residents of Washington County, Pennsylvania, where their son Thomas McGiffin was born. The latter married Maria Norton, a native of Newtown, Connecticut, and they became the parents of Margaret McGiffin, who married William Brown McIlvaine, already mentioned as the father of Dr. Thomas M. McIlvaine. Thomas McGiffin was, in his day, a very prominent lawyer of Washington, Pennsylvania, as well as a life-long and intimate personal friend of Henry Clay, and, for some time, a law-partner of the great Kentucky statesman.

Dr. McIlvaine's father, Rev. William Brown McIlvaine, was an eminent Presbyterian clergyman of Western Pennsylvania during the middle of the last century, serving as pastor of the East Liberty Presbyterian Church, at Pittsburg, from 1828 to 1870—a period of forty-two years. His career was the more notable in view of the fact that he spent his whole ministerial life in charge of the same church, going to it upon his entrance upon the ministry and remaining with it up to the time of his retirement. Such pastorates were rare, even in his day; but, when they existed, they indicated a close bond of union between pastor and people that was creditable to both. It was after the manner of the early pastorates of New England and Pennsylvania, when the old pastor married the sons and daughters, baptized the children and buried the fathers and mothers. There was something touching in the affection which grew up between pastor and people in such pastorates. Unfortunately they are rare now. Rev. Mr. McIlvaine was a Director in the Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pennsylvania, and served as Secretary of the Presbytery and Synod of Pittsburg for many years. As the history of his pastorate shows, he was a man of great influence, not only with his own congregation but with the church in general.

After taking a partial course in the Western University at Pittsburg, Dr. McIlvaine came to Peoria in 1869, and later completed his college course at Monmouth College, Illinois, graduating there with the honors of the Latin oration in 1873. He then became a teacher for one term in the Peoria High School, after which he spent two years (1874-75) as a student in Germany. In 1876 he received the degree of A. M. from his Alma Mater, after which he spent some time (1876-77) in the grain business at Grand Ridge, La Salle County. He then began the study of medicine with Dr. J. L. Hamilton, of Peoria, which he continued at Rush Medical College, Chicago, where he graduated in 1881. Since then he has been actively engaged in the practice of both medicine and surgery in Peoria, and has enjoyed a very extensive patronage. From 1882 to 1884 he served as Health Officer for the city of Peoria; has also been a director of the Public Library and a member of the Board of Education, for which he has been eminently well-fitted by his literary tastes and scientific training, as well as by his opportunities for observation abroad. He has been an industrious collector of rare old books, coins and works of art, and is the owner of many valuable old medical works and Elzevir editions of the classics. He was also a prime mover in the organization of the Cottage Hospital and the Peoria Art League.

In 1876, Dr. McIlvaine was married to Emma Florence Hamilton, a daughter of Dr. John L. Hamilton, one of Peoria's oldest and most highly esteemed physicians, and to them were born three children: Anna Kirk (married to W. B. Tobias), Margaret McGiffin, and Emma Florence. Mrs. McIlvaine died March 29, 1895. On December 15, 1899, he married, as his second wife, Mrs. Jessie Cobleigh, and they have one child, Sophia Elizabeth.

Dr. McIlvaine is a Republican in politics and a pew-holder in the Second Presbyterian Church. He is prominent in Masonic circles as a member of Peoria Lodge No. 15, A. F. & A. M., and of the Peoria Consistory—his connection with the latter dating from 1888; is also a member of the Creve Cœur Club, and the Country Club of Peoria.

Deeply interested in all that pertains to the welfare and prosperity of Peoria, Dr. McIlvaine has given much attention to matters of a public character, as well as those connected with his profession. A portion of his time has been given to editing a Medical Magazine with marked ability and success. To his efforts and unremitting labor is largely due the new Library Building. One of the busiest of Peoria's public men, he has accomplished much for the good of the city and its institutions, especially its public schools. The success which has attended his professional career, has been due in a marked degree to the courage and tireless energy which have been his prominent characteristics. He has been a close student, and has kept fully abreast of the advances made in the science of medicine and surgery. His professional knowledge is as exact as it is comprehensive, and his practical skill and judgment have been exceptional. His cheerful disposition assures for him a hearty welcome in all the social circles of the city. A hard worker in his profession, answering to the call of rich and poor alike, he conforms, in the fullest extent, to the description of the "Good Physician."

ELLEN BARKER McROBERTS.

As one of the native born of Peoria, Mrs. McRoberts has passed her days in close proximity to the many unfolding interests of the last half century, and through the medium of the progressive and forceful lives of her father and husband, has watched over and felt a keen personal interest in the city's growing commercial and general prosperity. She was born October 29, 1843, a daughter of Gardner Thurston Barker, whose extensive services in behalf of his adopted city are recalled with pride and appreciation by all who know the value of admirable citizenship and its accompanying large accomplishment. Her mother was Helen (White) Barker, a daughter of Elial and Mary B. (Lewis) White, natives of Massachusetts, the former born at Medway, December 21, 1794, and the latter at Amherst, February 9, 1799.

The education of Mrs. McRoberts was acquired at Maplewood, Pittsfield, Massachusetts, after which she continued to live with her parents in Peoria. Her marriage with William McRoberts, who was born near Belfast, Ireland, in August, 1824, and who was a son of William McRoberts, also a native of Ireland, occurred in Peoria, December 13, 1866. Mr. McRoberts emigrated to the United States when a young man, and after locating in Cincinnati, Ohio, entered the employ of Boyle, Miller & Company, distillers. From a comparatively obscure beginning he worked himself up to be a partner in the concern, and gained a wide knowledge of the distilling business. After his marriage he became a partner of Gardner Thurston Barker, continuing in the distilling business until his death in January, 1875. To Mr. and Mrs. McRoberts were born two sons, of whom William Gardner is a graduate of Cornell University, and at present engaged in the practice of law in Peoria, and Walter is a traveler and author. Mrs. McRoberts is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and in religious belief is affiliated with the Episcopal church.

FRANK MEYER.

The large volume of business carried on by the F. Meyer & Brother Company, and also by the Meyer Furnace Company, is the best possible indication of the enterprise and successful striving of Frank Meyer, who is one of Peoria's self-made men, as well as a typical German-American. Born in Norden, Northern Germany, November 8, 1844, Mr. Meyer came to America with his parents when barely thirteen years of age, the journey being undertaken in a sailing-vessel bound for New Orleans. Arriving at their destination, the little party came up the river to Peoria, reaching the city, May 28, 1858, after a voyage occupying eight weeks.

For several terms Mr. Meyer attended the public schools after coming to Peoria, but it was his fate to early face the responsibility of caring for himself, and he therefore hired out to a farmer in Woodford County, his remuneration for services rendered being five dollars per month. The following year he secured a position in the city without any pay at all, and, in return for hustling on an active scale, was permitted to continue his studies at the public schools. The next year he worked in a grocery store; and, in the end, had at least something to show for his industry. In common with most boys reared partially or wholly in Germany, he was inclined to learn a trade. He therefore engaged himself as an apprentice to a tin-smith for three years, and at the end of that time, continued for a couple of years in the employment of his instructor as a journeyman. He was particularly fortunate in his chosen occupation, and before he had reached the age of twenty-one years had managed to save $200, and embarked in a small way in a little tin manufacturing establishment upon the site of the present store of the F. Meyer & Brother Company. By reason of his unusual powers of application, thrift, and his economy in manner of living, he was enabled, at the end of a couple of years, to add to his tin-stock a supply of general hardware and stoves, and from then until the present time he has continued to advance, and to represent the best in his line in the city. From the very first he had no financial or other assistance, and for twelve years managed his entire business alone, at the end of that time associating in partnership with himself his brother, under the firm name of F. Meyer & Brother. In 1892 the business was incorporated under the name of F. Meyer & Brother Company, with F. Meyer as President. The business of this company is entirely separate from that of the Meyer Furnace Company, of which Mr. Meyer is the President and chief promoter. After thirty-four years of hard work he has much to show for his pains, and has most diversified interests in different parts of the city, being, among other responsibilities, one of the stock-holders of the Dime Savings Bank. From time to time much property and real estate have come into the possession of Mr. Meyer, and he is still the owner of some very desirable city business buildings. In politics he has never sought official recognition, but has nevertheless held many positions of responsibility and trust, including that of member of the Peoria School Board, which he occupied for four years.

On March 16, 1867, Mr. Meyer married Anna Maria Janssen, and of this union there are four children: George F., who was born December 31, 1867, and married Arnelia Miller, January 20, 1897; Anna F., who was born July 18, 1869, and September 15, 1892, married Edward Krumsieg; Sophia, who was born June 28, 1871; and Matilda D., who was born August 24, 1873, and married William E. Bruninga, June 25, 1894. Mr. Meyer has, to an unusual degree, the confidence of the business world of Peoria, and the persevering and industrious traits which have won success in the past, are indicative of an even greater prosperity in the future.

M. L. Spence

BENJAMIN FULLERTON MILES.

Benjamin Fullerton Miles, physician (deceased), was born at Glen Connell, Cambria County, Pennsylvania, September 5, 1825, the son of John George and Juliana (McConnell) Miles. His father was a lawyer of decided ability as well as a man of strong patriotism, of uprightness and honesty of character, and, in the course of his professional career, had the management of a number of large estates, which he handled with great success; while his mother was noted for her literary attainments and the wide scope of her information. On the maternal side Dr. Miles was descended from Major Matthew McConnell, who was an officer in the Army of the Revolution, and later one of the founders and Treasurer of the Order of the Cincinnati, organized by officers of the Revolutionary War, headed by George Washington, "to perpetuate their friendship, and to raise a fund for relieving the widows and orphans of those who had fallen during the war"—a sort of counterpart, for that period, of the Grand Army of the Republic composed of soldiers of our late Civil War. Major Matthew McConnell's wife was Ruth Hall—a cousin of the celebrated Dr. Benjamin Rush—who received a vote of thanks from the Continental Congress for her care of American prisoners in Philadelphia while that city was in the hands of the British.

Benjamin F. Miles attended Dartmouth College for a time and finally graduated in 1847 at Marshall College, Pennsylvania, where he was valedictorian of his class, later taking a course in medicine at the Pennsylvania Medical College. After leaving college he served for a time as a civil engineer in surveying the route of the Pennsylvania Railway through the Allegheny Mountains. Subsequently he made a voyage to England as the ship's doctor on a sailing vessel, and after his return engaged in the practice of medicine for a time at Camden, New Jersey.

About 1853 Dr. Miles came to Peoria, making the journey by way of Chicago, and from La Salle by steamboat. Here he was engaged for some time in the drug business, first as partner with the late Col. William A. Thrush, afterwards with the late Dr. A. W. H. Reen and still later being in the same business alone. During the last few years of his residence in Peoria he conducted an insurance agency business.

Dr. Miles was married twice, first on May 29, 1855, to Sarah Perkins Hancock, a sister of the late Jonathan Hancock, and, for the second time, on February 3, 1891, to Mary A. Rice, of Paxton, Illinois. Five children were born of the first marriage, namely: John George, John B., James H., Mary Perkins and Elizabeth H. Of the second marriage there was no issue.

In religious belief and affiliation Dr. Miles was a Presbyterian, and a charter member of the Second Presbyterian Church of Peoria. Politically he was identified with the Republican party.

Dr. Miles' life terminated in the city of Chicago, where he died April 22, 1899, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. Of genial temperament and refined tastes, he was always a gentleman. An extensive reader he possessed a large fund of valuable information on general topics. In his domestic and social relations he was a good husband, a kind father, and a useful and public-spirited citizen.

RICHARD NEWSAM.

Richard Newsam, Coal Mine Operator, was born at Chorley, Lancashire, England, November 11, 1843, the son of John and Sarah (Blakely) Newsam. The father was born in Yorkshire, and the mother in Chorley, Lancashire. John and Anna Newsam, the paternal grandparents of Richard, were born in Yorkshire, while Matthew Blakely, the maternal grandfather, was a native of Lancashire. John Newsam, the father, was a cotton spinner, but also worked in the mines. Richard Newsam went to work in the mines when a boy, and had so little opportunity to attend school that he may be regarded as self-educated. He continued mining until he became foreman or superintendent, when, recognizing the restricted opportunities for advancement, he left his native country and came to the United States, whither his brother, Frank, had preceded him in 1860, remaining for a time in Pennsylvania, whence he came to Kingston Mines, Illinois. Richard Newsam came to Kingston Mines in 1869, and has remained in Peoria County to the present time. He began mining at Kingston Mines, but later became Superintendent of the Orchard Mines. In 1874, in connection with his brother, Frank, he leased these mines, and thus they began business on their own account. Having bought his brother Frank's interest, however, he began business for himself. Later, with his brothers, John and Thomas, he took on the Mapleton Mines, the Black Diamond or Buckeye Mines, the Kingston Mines, the Millard Mines, the Maplewood Mines at Farmington, the Hanna City Mines and the Star Mines, the four last mentioned being on the Iowa Central Railroad. Later on he bought out the interest of his brother John, and Richard and Thomas have since been partners and are now running the Kingston Mine, the Reed City Mine, the Maplewood Mine at Farmington, the Hanna City and Star Mines. He and his brother, Thomas, now operate five mines, employing about 500 men, and put out fifty cars of coal per day, doing three times the business of any other operator in Peoria County.

In connection with mining, Mr. Newsam has paid great attention to the burning of coal, and has developed a method of firing engines that saves from one-sixth to one-fourth the coal ordinarily used. He calls it the single-shovel method. He is probably the only coal miner in the world ever invited, by a railroad company, to instruct its engineers and firemen how to fire engines. This he did for the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern Railroad, and not only saved the amount of coal mentioned, but greatly abated the black coal smoke nuisance, so that the engines appear almost smokeless, developing at the same time more power and greater speed. His methods were adopted by the B., C. R. & N. road, and, in six months in 1897-1898, the road saved $14,483 in coal bills, and ran its engines 117,618 more miles. In effect, he decreased the coal cost from seven to five cents a mile. His methods, which he taught by firing an engine many days with his own hands, have been investigated by other roads, and pronounced the best and cheapest known. With it there is little smoke or cinders to annoy the passengers, which is a vast boon in the summer season alike to the traveling and the general public. Mr. Newsam is an authority on mines and mining, and has been a member of the State Board of Mine Examiners for a number of years, serving for some time as President of the Board.

Mr. Newsam was married at Henley, Lancashire, England, May 20, 1866, to Frances Wolessenholme, daughter of John and Ellen Wolessenholme, both natives of England. Mr. and Mrs. Newsam are the parents of thirteen children, seven of whom are living: Margaret Ann, the wife of Herbert Wilson; Sarah and Helen, deceased; John, who has charge of the store at Kingston Mines; Frank, Martha Ellen, George and Emma, deceased; Richard, who is working in the mines at Kingston; Thomas, who is Superintendent of the Maplewood Mines at Farmington, Illinois; Mary Ellen and Cora, who live with their parents; and William, who is a machinist in the Toledo, Peoria and Western shops at Peoria.

Mr. Newsam is a Republican and a thirty-second degree Mason, having joined the order in 1878, and is also a member of the Mystic Shrine.

Since first coming to this country, he has made eight visits to his native land, England, the first being made in 1882. Sometimes he has gone alone, but several times he has taken his wife and children.

AARON SAMUEL OAKFORD.

Aaron Samuel Oakford, President and Manager of the largest mercantile house in the State outside of Chicago, was born October 28, 1845, in Peoria County, Illinois. His father, Aaron Oakford, was a native of Pennsylvania, coming to Peoria County about 1838. His mother, Sarah Wilson, was born in England. Her family were among the earliest settlers in Peoria County.

Young Oakford received his education in the Peoria Grammar and High Schools. He entered as a clerk the retail grocery store of H. H. Potter (afterwards Potter & White), where he remained until January 1, 1868, when the mercantile establishment, which has reached such extensive proportions, was established by Joseph F. Henry, Aaron S. Oakford and George Wright, under the firm name of J. F. Henry & Company. January 1, 1870, Henry and Oakford purchased Mr. Wright's interest, and the firm name was changed to Henry & Oakford, the retail trade was very largely increased, and to it was added a wholesale department. From these modest beginnings the business grew into a wholesale trade of large proportions. On January 1, 1872, Mr. H. H. Fahnestock became a member of the firm, and the name was again changed to Henry, Oakford & Fahnestock. They then discontinued the retail business and confined themselves exclusively to the wholesale trade. In 1874 Mr. C. J. Off was admitted to the firm, but retired in 1877. The business continued to increase so rapidly as to compel the firm, from time to time, to move to larger quarters, until 1877, when Easton's Commercial Block was built expressly for the business of the firm. In January, 1881, Oakford and Fahnestock purchased Mr. Henry's interest in the firm.

The business outgrew the quarters then occupied by the firm and in 1887 they became the owners of the mammoth four-story warehouse on Liberty, Commercial and Washington Streets. A few years later they erected a large warehouse on Water and Commercial Streets. The firm, by its industry, sagacity and integrity, has built up the largest wholesale grocery trade in the State of Illinois outside of Chicago, affording a marked exemplification of the success of high standard business methods.

Mr. Oakford has always been recognized as not only one of the leading business men of Peoria, but a man of the highest integrity in every walk of life; a man whose word has always been as good as his bond. He has been prompt and ready in his response to calls for worthy objects, and no man in the city to-day ranks higher for moral worth, personal character and business sagacity than A. S. Oakford.

ALFRED AARON PHELPS.

Biography is only interesting to the general reader when it is the life-story of some individual in whom, by reason of his or her achievements, the world feels curiosity or interest, or when it is the story of a life lived on a plane, or with an environment, different from the commonplace. Hence, the lives of adventurers, explorers, pioneers, great warriors or mariners have always been of absorbing interest to most people. Alfred A. Phelps, of whom we write, has had some experiences unique and unusual, and a brief recital of them cannot fail to be of interest to all who know him and, in fact, to any reader of this book. Mr. Phelps was born in Galesburg, Illinois, February 14, 1849, and comes of good old New England stock, his first American ancestor having landed on these shores in 1620. On both the paternal and maternal sides they were distinguished for their patriotism and valor in the War of the Revolution.

His father, Royal Aaron Noble Phelps, was born in Westfield, Massachusetts, in 1810, and was one of the pioneer settlers of the "Military Tract" in Knox County, in 1836. His mother, Sarah Jane (Adams) Phelps, was a native of Marysville, Ohio. The elder Phelps encountered all the experiences of the average pioneer, together with some that were perhaps a trifle unusual. He was at that time a teamster, hauling freight to and from Peoria, Oquawka and Chicago. He used to haul dressed hogs to Peoria, where he sold them for $1.00 each if they weighed one hundred pounds or more. If they weighed less, they did not count, but had to be "thrown in for good measure." He ran the first threshing machine that ever operated in Knox County. It was one of the first machines invented for that purpose, and was known as the "Ground-hog" thresher. This machine, as many old settlers will remember, threw the grain, chaff and straw all into a heap, the straw was raked away by hand, and the chaff was separated from the grain by hand fanning-mills. Their pay was taken in wheat as toll; they then hauled the toll to Chicago, 168 miles, to get their pay in money.

Mr. Phelps helped to build the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway and, later on, ran a planing mill on Cedar Fork in Galesburg, where the Santa Fe Passenger Depot is now located. In 1856 he purchased a quarter-section of prairie land in Sparta Township, which he improved and cultivated with such success that it became known throughout the length and breadth of the State as the "Phelps Premium Farm"—Mr. Phelps having received the highest premium ever given by the Illinois State Board of Agriculture for the best cultivated and improved farm in the State.

Alfred A. Phelps spent his boyhood on this farm, working summers and going to school winters, and, at the age of sixteen, had everything arranged to enter West Point as a cadet, but at the last moment his father refused his consent and informed the young man that he had decided for him to be a farmer; consequently he was taken out of the Preparatory Department at Knox College, where he had been a student, and was compelled to teach school two years. The young man having had his ambition thwarted and his most earnest aspirations blocked, chafed under the restraint imposed and, arriving at the age of twenty, he determined to break away from parental control, see something of the world and map out a future for himself. He went to Cleveland, Ohio, and there and in Cincinnati succeeded in interesting a number of other adventurous young men in a trip to the extreme southern part of South America, a great excitement having developed about this time over the alleged discovery of rich diamond fields in that section. They organized a company of thirty men, all "jolly good fellows," went to New York City and embarked on the steamship "Ocean Queen" for Aspinwall, touching at the Bermuda Islands and Cuba. Arriving at the Isthmus, they made up a pack-train and started overland through South America for Cape Horn, little realizing the difficulties of such a trip through an untraversed and unbroken tropical wilderness. After some two months of enervating and discouraging travel through swamps and jungles, among snakes, scorpions, centipedes and tarantulas, they became footsore, weary and greatly discouraged by the time they had reached the borders of Chili. To add to the difficulties and dangers of the expedition, they learned that an insurrection of the most violent kind was then in progress in Chili. Mr. Phelps, with fifteen companions, becoming thoroughly disheartened, resolved to abandon the expedition and, consequently, one night they deserted the rest of their fellows and traveled westward to the Pacific Ocean. As good luck would have it, they struck a small Spanish town on the shores of the Pacific, sold their ponies and burros, and took passage on a schooner back to the west side of the Isthmus of Panama, where they embarked on the steamer "Montana," bound for San Francisco. In conversation with other passengers on board the boat, they were led to believe that Arizona was a good mining region for both gold and silver. They were told that the Indians were "some bad," but that their party was strong enough to fully protect themselves. Fired with the ambition to seek their fortunes in the hidden treasures of the mountains, they induced the captain to make a high land and land them on the shores of the harbor at old San Diego. After forty-five days on salt water, and two months in the wilds of South America, they were glad to be placed in even as near a civilized and habitable land as the wilds of Arizona, and to be once more within the confines of the United States.

At San Diego, which then consisted of about a dozen adobe houses, they joined a Government wagon-train and walked the entire distance through Southern California and Arizona to the White Mountains in Western New Mexico, a distance of six hundred miles. The snakes and other poisonous reptiles and insects were almost as bad as in South America, but the climate was perfection, and they all reached the alleged gold-fields in splendid health, but only to find the conditions altogether different from what they had been led to expect. Instead of the Indians being a little bad, and instead of gold and silver being easily accessible, the Indians were exceedingly hostile and there were none of the precious metals to be found. At this time, the "Old Gray Fox," General Crook, arrived in that section, with the Twenty-first United States Infantry and the Third and Fifth Cavalry, to attempt to subdue the hostile Indians. Mr. Phelps organized the men he had with him and succeeded in enlisting enough more to make a company of seventy-five men, calling them the "Arizona Volunteers and Explorers," and tendered their services, through General Crook, to the Government service. He was commissioned a Captain by Governor Stanford and, for eighteen months, they served in active warfare against the Apaches, when, quiet having been in a measure restored, they disbanded. Captain Phelps had by this time taken a great liking to a soldier's life, and especially life on the plains, and so for six years he was constantly on the go, scouting over mountain and plain, from Mexico to Alaska, under Generals Crook, Granger and Howard. He was in the Modoc War when Generals Thompson and Canby were killed; and, it is perhaps needless to add, experienced hundreds of hair-breadth escapes. He crossed the Rocky Mountains thirty-nine times and, at the close of his experience as scout, his "log-book" showed more than 104,000 miles of travel. He was mustered out of the army in the spring of 1876, just prior to the Custer massacre.

Returning to old Illinois, which then seemed to him, after his wild West experiences, like a Garden of Eden, he settled down to the more humdrum existence of ordinary life and citizenship. About 1881 he came to Peoria, laid out the first addition, built the first twelve houses, and started the village of Averyville. This was in connection with his cousins, R. H. and C. M. Avery. He has seen this village grow from a hamlet of twenty-five or thirty people to over 2,000 inhabitants. For over six years he was in mercantile business at 2210 North Jefferson Avenue, conducting a grocery and meat market. He spent two years in railroading on the Union Pacific Railway. He has been Assessor of Richwoods Township nine years, Justice of the Peace in Averyville ten years, School Treasurer of Richwoods Township four years, and is now the incumbent of all three offices.

'Squire Phelps, as he is popularly and familiarly known, was married on January 15, 1879, to Miss Addie M. Cable, daughter of Ezra and Martha Jane (Lattimer) Cable, pioneers of Warren County. They have four children: Leonard A., Bertha L., Sarah L. and Richard E.

'Squire Phelps is, in many respects, a unique character. He is a man of fine personal appearance, straight and athletic, and, notwithstanding his rough frontier experiences, is remarkably well preserved and youthful in appearance for one who has crossed the half century line. He is a man warm in his friendships, earnest, if not impulsive, in temperament, and his friends are limited only by the extent of his acquaintance.

DAVID CHOATE PROCTOR.

David Choate Proctor, son of John and Lucinda Gould Proctor, and youngest of the Proctor brothers in Peoria, was born in Henniker, New Hampshire, September 9, 1832.

The Proctor family removed from Manchester-by-sea, Massachusetts, to New Hampshire in 1798, and were descendants of John Proctor, of England, who came to this country in 1635. The Proctor and Choate families were connected and long associated in Essex County, Massachusetts—whence his name. His school days were passed in Henniker and in Andover, Massachusetts. At an early age he came West, and between 1850 and 1856 he was a clerk in the trading house of Major Henry at Fort Smith, Arkansas, the simple life of the frontier and its picturesque scenes having great attractions for him. His duties required him to make occasional journeys into the Indian Territory, and he often recalled the incidents and adventures of those days of the Red man, the bison and the Pony Express. In September, 1856, he came to Peoria, and went into the wholesale grocery business with Mr. Joseph W. Parrish. In 1867 with Mr. Richard Culter, he established the business incorporated as the "Culter and Proctor Stove company," which they conducted with excellent success, and with which he was connected during the rest of his life.

May 5, 1869, Mr. Proctor married Miss Sarah Storrs, only child of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Storrs, of Brooklyn, New York. Their three children were born in Peoria, and two of them still live here, while the youngest is a resident of New York City. In 1880 Mr. Proctor's health failed, and he went to Brooklyn, New York, for medical treatment, but was never able to return. His death occurred there December 17, 1880, and the following spring his remains were brought to Peoria and interred in Springdale Cemetery, his grave being upon the hill whose extensive and lovely prospect he used to enjoy.

David Choate Proctor was rare and noble in person and character. His ideals were high. To be—not to seem—was his principle of life. Faithful to every trust, genuine, generous and sympathetic, he scorned pretence and ostentation. He was always solicitous for the prosperity of Peoria and enthusiastic about its natural advantages, desiring that the beauty of its commanding line of bluffs should be appreciated and preserved. A favorite plan of his was for a continuous drive along the brow of the bluffs from Kickapoo Creek to Prospect Heights, thus giving the city a matchless boulevard. No Peorian would have greater pride in its present progress than he.

EZEKIEL ALLEN PROCTOR.

Ezekiel Allen Proctor, son of John and Edna (Dean) Proctor, was born in Henniker, New Hampshire, October 5, 1819. His education was that of the time in the common schools and academy of his native town.

In 1840 he came West, stopping at Cincinnati, Louisville and St. Louis, but not finding satisfactory business, from the latter city he took a boat up the Illinois River to Lewistown, near which place he taught school for one term. From there he came to Peoria, where his brother, Francis Proctor, joined him and where both settled permanently. Peoria had then but seven or eight hundred inhabitants, with no outside communication except by river and the stage-coach. Herds of deer were occasionally seen on the near prairie, and wolves howled nightly in the swamps and ravines. There was little money in circulation and all business was dull.

Mr. Proctor met the privations and hardships incident to the early settlers with courage and resolution.

In 1843 he began the manufacture of agricultural implements and his brother, John C. Proctor, was his partner in this business from 1844 until 1859. Later, he was for years one of the directors, and afterwards President of the Mechanics and Merchants Bank of Peoria. For sometime, however, he has had no active business in the city, but has given his attention to his farms and to stock-raising. He married, Jan-mary 18, 1850. Miss Emily Powell, of Lawn Ridge, Marshall County, Illinois. Their children and grandchildren are all residents of Peoria.

Esteemed by all who know him, of strict integrity, enterprising and independent, yet unassuming, Mr. Proctor has always been ready to do amply his part in whatever would contribute to the prosperity of the city he has seen grow from small beginnings to its present size and importance.

I. FRANCIS PROCTOR.

Francis Proctor, elder brother of E. Allen and John C. Proctor, was born in Henniker, New Hampshire, July 31, 1817. For generations, the Proctor family, in both of its branches, has been identified with New England history. Francis Proctor's great-grandfather, Isaac Proctor, was a native of Ipswich, Massachusetts, as was his wife, Lucy Proctor, nee Goodhue. Their son, Lieut. John Proctor, was born at Manchester, Massachusetts, and married Hannah Cogswell, whose birthplace was Essex (Ipswich) in the same State. They were the parents of Francis Proctor's father, Capt. John Proctor, who was born in Manchester-by-the-Sea, July 7, 1788, and married Edna Dean, a native of Hamilton, Massachusetts, born in the same year as her husband. Edna (Dean) Proctor's parents were Captain Israel and Edna (Dodge) Proctor, both of whom were natives of Hamilton, Captain Proctor's immediate ancestor (and great-grandfather of the Peoria Proctor family on the maternal side) being Israel Dean, also a native of Hamilton, married Anne Storrs, whose birthplace was Mansfield, Connecticut. From this genealogical record may be traced the name of Edna Dean Proctor, the gifted poetess of New England and sister of the Proctor brothers of Peoria, who inherits her name from their mother.

Mr. Proctor's education was obtained at his birthplace and in Keene, New Hampshire. In 1838, he left Henniker and taught school in New Jersey, Indiana, and in Mississippi, until 1841, when he came to Peoria, and bought a quarter section of land on the West Bluff. Here he engaged at first in stock-raising and afterwards in growing choice fruit. In March, 1843, he was married in Peoria to Loville Aiken, who was born December 6, 1816, in Deering, New Hampshire. Mrs. Lovilla Proctor died August 27, 1881. Their children were Henry Francis and Edna Dean (Mrs. Field).

Upright, independent and honorable in all his dealings, Mr. Proctor is a man of quiet tastes and habits, yet always intelligently interested for the best good of the community, and always ready to do generously his part as a citizen. From his pleasant home on the Bluff, with its commanding outlook, he has seen the city gradually extending and covering the green prairie below, where, in the early years of his residence, only herds of cows were feeding. His son, Henry Francis Proctor, was a soldier in the Civil War, enlisting (August, 1861), at the age of seventeen years, in the Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and giving continuous, faithful, exemplary service until he was killed, June 6, 1864, in a skirmish with guerrillas in Arkansas, as the regiment was returning from the Red River expedition. His body was brought to Peoria and buried in its beautiful cemetery, and his grave is one of those that Decoration Day sees heaped with flowers. He was a young man of such excellent character and promise, that his death was deplored by all who knew him, in the army and at home.

Mr. Proctor's only grandchild is Francis Proctor Field, who was born in Peoria, August 7, 1876, and is now a student of medicine in New York City. When the Spanish War came, in 1898, he left Columbia University to enter the army with the Twenty-second Regiment New York National Guard, of which organization he was a member, and remained with the army until the war was over, when he resumed his studies.

JOHN C. PROCTOR.

In looking over the list of the older persons represented in this biographical collection, it is a pleasure to find some who still survive. John C. Proctor is one of these, still in active business, and as attentive to it as at any time during his business career. He was born on the 11th day of October, 1822, in Henniker, New Hampshire, the son of John and Edna Dean Proctor. His education was acquired in the schools of his native town. While the schools of his day were not quite what they are at present, yet the common schools of New England gave all persons an opportunity to become comparatively well educated in the common English branches. It was because of the advantages of the common schools of New England that so many of her sons and daughters, scattered over the whole country, have always proved a success.

In 1841 Mr. Proctor left New Hampshire for the State of Mississippi. A year later he removed to the State of Illinois, and for a time taught school in Fulton County. In 1843 he came to Peoria, and in the following year commenced the manufacture of agricultural implements with his brother, E. A. Proctor, which business was carried on successfully until 1850. John C. Proctor then engaged in the lumber business in Peoria, and has continued in it from that time to the present.

He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Peoria, in 1863, was elected its President in 1875, and still continues in that position.

Mr. Proctor is a rare man. His temperance in all things, and his care for his personal welfare, have enabled him to engage constantly in exacting business without evidencing any of the wear and tear so often seen in business men. He has rarely ever been ill, and, when in the city, has devoted himself daily to the conduct of his business. He is a man of excellent judgment. His advice and assistance have been sought as often and as generally as that of any man in the city of Peoria. He has, without niggardliness or meanness, dishonesty, oppression, fraud or wrong-doing, accumulated a large fortune, and is the owner of many farms in the State of Illinois. Frugal, temperate and careful in his habits, he has been a liberal contributor to the charities of the city and to the churches. He has been on the right side of every question affecting the education or morals, or the religious training of the residents of Peoria. He has built, at his own expense, the Cottage Hospital, and placed it in the hands of a corporation for the benefit of the present generation and those to come, thereby erecting, in this one act, a monument to his memory, infinitely more enduring and more valuable than any notoriety that could possibly come from mere political preferment. He has been a successful business man, and his example can be cited to the rising and future generations, as in every way worthy of imitation and emulation. He has not made his money by wild speculation or by oppressing anybody else. It is the result of painstaking, persistent work, of sound judgment, of a careful, temperate and worthy life. No one except himself really knows of the manifold acts of kindness and charity which have characterized his career. The writer of this sketch personally knows of many instances where, through his faith in human nature and his desire to be helpful, he has saved from ruin men who were pushed and oppressed by others intent only upon worldly gain, regardless of the means used for its acquirement—men who deceive themselves, but do not deceive their fellows.

Mr. Proctor is a brother of Edna Dean Proctor, and he has two brothers still living in Peoria—Francis and Ezekiel—both older than himself, and both remarkable for their retention of all their mental and physical faculties. They are of good, sterling New England stock. They brought with them, from New England, correct ideas of morality, education and religion. They have adhered to their principles, and the result, in their lives, shows the value of the stock and early training of New England.

NORMAN H. PURPLE.

Norman H. Purple was born March 29, 1803, in Otsego County, New York. His father was a native of Connecticut, a carpenter by trade and a farmer by occupation. Judge Purple received an ordinary common-school education, supplemented by study in an academy, then common in New England and New York State. He commenced the study of law with Judge N. B. Eldred, in Wayne County, Pennsylvania, but completed his study in the County of Tioga, and was admitted to the bar in 1830. In 1837 he removed to Peoria and settled down to the practice of his profession. At that time there were a number of able lawyers in Peoria and in other cities in Central Illinois. Judge Purple immediately took a prominent position as a lawyer, and secured at once a lucrative practice. He was well read in the law, had been a diligent student of jurisprudence, and hence laid a broad foundation for the technical work of the lawyer. He was industrious, painstaking and accurate.

From 1840 to 1842 Judge Purple held the office of State's Attorney for the Ninth Judicial Circuit, composed of the counties of Peoria, Kendall, Kane, DeKalb, Ogle, Bureau, Stark, Marshall, Putnam and LaSalle. In 1844 he was chosen a Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket, and, in 1845, received from Governor Ford, an appointment as Justice of the Supreme Court of the State, to which he was formally elected by the Legislature in December, 1846. During his incumbency in this office he presided in the courts of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, embracing the western part of the State, making his home at Quincy. Upon his retirement from the bench by the adoption of the Constitution of 1848, he returned to Peoria, and resumed practice there, which he continued for the remainder of his life. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, representing Peoria and Stark Counties in that body, with Julius Manning as a colleague.

In 1849 Judge Purple published an edition of the Real Estate Statutes of Illinois, embracing the acts of the Legislature relating to descents, limitations, judgments, executions, partition, dower, conveyances and revenue—a most valuable volume for practitioners of that period. There was much litigation then, and for some years subsequently over land titles in the Military Tract. Judge Purple was, perhaps, at the head of the Illinois bar as a real-estate lawyer. He had given the subjects pertaining to estates very careful and thorough investigation, and was authority upon all subjects relating to land titles. This he followed, in 1856, with a compilation of the General Statutes of the State, which became widely known to the profession as the "Purple Statutes." Subsequently he undertook a similar compilation and classification of the laws enacted between 1857 and 1864, but the completion of this work was interrupted by his death. These works, prepared while Judge Purple was upon the bench or in active practice, gave evidence of his industry and zeal in this branch of his profession. He was extremely methodical in all that he did and his work was always done with neatness and dispatch.

Judge Purple was not an eloquent orator, as were some of his associates in the city during his active career, but no man at the bar surpassed him in the ability of clear, concise, logical statement of a case. His success before a jury did not depend upon his ability as an orator, but largely upon the logical clearness and force with which he made his opening statement to the jury. In fact, at times, with a good cause, his case was won with his opening statement. He became the leading practitioner in the central portion of the State, in the United States Court, and maintained a decided prominence in this branch of the business so long as he lived.

He had the respect and confidence of the

John S. Thomas

Judges. He had infinite respect for the law, and he never indulged in any of the tricks of the profession for his success. No man ever entertained more thorough contempt for another than Judge Purple did for any lawyer who would stoop to trickery or dishonesty in a law-suit. Any lawyer caught in anything under-handed, dishonest, secretive or outside the legitimate rules of practice was forever detested by Judge Purple. He was the soul of professional honor, and entertained a profound reverence for the law, and respect for all who labored to administer it in its purity.

During the period of his active practice in Peoria, Judge Purple was associated in a partnership capacity and at different times with the following members of the Peoria bar: Halsey O. Merriman and George T. Metcalfe before his elevation to the Supreme Bench, and, at a later date, with Ezra G. Sanger, Lorin G. Pratt and Alexander McCoy—the latter being his partner at the time of his death, which occurred in the city of Chicago, August 9, 1863.

On January 3, 1831, before coming to Peoria, Judge Purple was married to Ann Eliza, daughter of Hon. Ira Kilburn, of Tioga County, Pennsylvania. Six children were the fruit of this union, two of whom survive at this time: Mrs. Ida Robinson, of this city, and Frank H. Purple, of Colorado.

Judge Purple's rank in the profession in Illinois was in the very front, and in some departments he was easily the superior of his professional brethren. His office work was a model of neatness and order. His method of putting away and keeping his papers furnishes an excellent example for all young men. He had a place for everything, and insisted upon everything being in its proper place. He was methodical in all his habits, and the soul of punctuality in all his business engagements. He was impatient with all who failed to keep their promises, or were not punctual in meeting engagements. He had no use for a coward or a liar, and none for a pettifogger. Towards all such he indulged in biting sarcasm, in the use of which he was a master. He was friendly and helpful to all young men, honorable, honest and upright, and would lend them a helping hand. As a lawyer, we may safely say that he stood second to no practitioner in Illinois.

FRANK MAXIMILIAN REINHART.

No name has been more prominent in connection with the musical history of the city of Peoria, than that of Professor Frank M. Reinhart, for nearly twenty years a leading teacher of various branches of instrumental music, as well as, during the same period, Peoria's most widely known and accomplished church organist. Mr. Reinhart, besides inheriting a taste for musical art, is a native of a country famous for its distinguished musicians and composers, having been born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, April 4, 1842. His father, Joseph Anton Reinhart, was born in Trenfurt-on-the-Main, Bavaria, in 1806, and graduated at Wurzburg in the school of Professor Froelich, one of the most celebrated musicians of his time, and soon established a reputation for himself as a skilled physician and teacher. In 1838 the elder Reinhart was married to Ursula Rothenhofer, who was born in Retzstadt, Bavaria, in 1813. After spending some years in Wurzburg, during which he was engaged in teaching, he came to America with his family, in 1850, locating at Peru, Illinois, where he resumed the teaching of music in all its branches, including both instrumental and vocal, and in which he spent the remainder of his life, dying there in 1889. His wife survived only about four years after coming to America, dying in 1854. While attending the public schools of Peru, Mr. Frank M. Reinhart received his musical education solely under the instruction of his father, and, at the age of sixteen years, began traveling with various concert companies. This he continued until 1862, when he came to Peoria and immediately entered upon a career as a teacher of instrumental music, which proved conspicuously successful. A matter of interest in connection with Mr. Reinhart's professional life in Peoria, is the fact that his first pupil after locating here was Miss Laura Bradley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tobias S. Bradley, as a monument to whose memory, in large part, Bradley Institute was established by her bereaved mother a few years ago. Besides giving instruction upon the piano, violin and other instruments, Professor Reinhart officiated for some time as organist of the First and Second Presbyterian churches, and, later, for some ten years, in the same capacity in the Universalist church. One of the notable periods in his career was between 1864 and 1872, while serving as conductor of the famous Spencer's Band, which gained such a wide reputation under his efficient leadership, during the war period, and, for some twenty years, was probably the most widely known band in the State.

While Professor Reinhart's most noteworthy achievements as a musical artist were probably as a performer upon the organ, piano and the violin, he proved himself a master upon nearly every other style of instrument in popular use. A competent and appreciative critic, in one of the local newspapers—Mrs. Theo. Rees Marsters, in the "Peoria Herald-Transcript"—speaking of his qualities as a musician, a couple of years ago, said of him:

"As a pianist, Mr. Reinhart is best known to Peorians; his rare touch, brilliant execution, and artistic interpretation making him one to be remembered by all who have heard him. But he also played the violin with grace, skill and much beauty of tone; he was equally successful with the viola and cello; was an accomplished and brilliant organist, and, I believe I have heard him play every band instrument in existence from the cornet to the French horn, and play every one as well as if he had given his entire attention to that one instrument. His knowledge of these instruments was by no means confined to the playing of them, however, for he understood the range, capacity and possibilities of each, and excelled in arranging music for different combinations of instruments."

About 1878 a threatened nervous trouble compelled Mr. Reinhart to withdraw from the position he had so long held as a church organist, and two years later he gave up teaching and appearing in public entertainments. Nevertheless, he has still maintained his interest in the art to which he devoted so many years of his life with such signal ability and success, and enjoys, in an eminent degree, the respect of his many former pupils, and the lovers of music generally, who remember with pride and admiration his achievements of a score and more years ago.

Mr. Reinhart was married on April 8, 1885, to Miss Annie Kidder, the only daughter, as well as the youngest and, at present, only surviving child, of Alvan Kidder, a prominent and successful business man and real estate operator of Peoria, who died November 19, 1871. Mr. and Mrs. Reinhart reside in the pleasant home occupied during his life by her father on Sixth Avenue, Peoria. In politics Mr. Reinhart is a Democrat.

PERCIVAL G. RENNICK.

Whether as an educator, politician, or promoter of the all-around well being of Peoria, Mr. Rennick has evinced a conscientious regard for the best interests of all with whom he has been associated, and an uncompromising devotion to principle as rare in the holders of public trust as it is admirable and far reaching in its effect. To his credit, also, is the fact that his career has been marked by an unusual appreciation of the opportunities by which he was surrounded, and in the grasping and utilizing of which he has proved himself the competent builder of his own fortunes. Far from reaping an easily won and immediate success, and thus forswearing those moulding attributes of persistence, industry and patience, the distance from his father's farm in Stark County, Illinois, where he spent his early years, to his present position as Collector of Internal Revenue of the Peoria District, has been traversed studiously, thoughtfully, and with ever increasing mental and moral strength. A prime factor in the formation of his character and ambitions has been the example set by the large thought of his parents, Francis and Sarah (Cousins) Rennick, the former of whom emigrated from the North of Ireland when eighteen years of age, and upon locating in Montreal, engaged for a time in the grain business. His parents afterwards removed to the United States and settled on a farm near Toulon, Stark County, Illinois, where they successfully engaged in farming and stock-raising.

As the youngest son in his father's family, Percival G. Rennick, who was born March 4, 1864, was educated in the public schools of Stark County, and after graduating from the Toulon high-school completed the course at the Northern Illinois Normal College. Subsequently he engaged in educational work as Superintendent of the graded schools of his county, and at times had charge of the schools of Castleton and Wyoming. The better to gain a practical insight into the intricacies of a great profession, he read law for two years under a private tutor. From early youth he took an active interest in the undertakings of the Republican party, and while still in his teens, the young educator became a force in the politics of Stark County, and, soon after attaining his majority, was chosen a delegate to the Republican County Convention. His excellent services in the interests of his party proved to be far-reaching and of more than local significance, and attracted the attention of Julius S. Starr, at that time Collector of Internal Revenue of the Peoria District. It thus happened that, soon after Mr. Rennick's removal to Peoria, in 1889, he was tendered and accepted the position of Inspector of Internal Revenue, a responsibility resigned at the end of four years to become bookkeeper for the wholesale establishment of the Wilson Grocery Company. In 1896 he was appointed Deputy Circuit Clerk, a position maintained with unusual credit until assuming the duties of his present office. As Chairman of the Republican County Committee Mr. Rennick was instrumental in greatly increasing the prestige of his party in Peoria County, and was recognized as one of the most energetic and helpful workers. He was twice elected Chairman of the County Central Committee, and was also elected Chairman of the Fifth Supreme Court Judicial Committee. So pronounced was his administrative and organizing ability during the conduct of three different campaigns, and so thoroughly in touch was he with Republican principles and issues, that when the position of Collector of Internal Revenue of the district of Peoria became vacant, there was practically no opposition in his way. And to Mr. Rennick it is a pleasant remembrance that one of the last official acts of that great citizen and statesman, William McKinley, was his appointment of Mr. Rennick to the office which he now occupies.

April 10, 1890, Mr. Rennick married Jennie Gharrett, daughter of B. F. Gharrett, of Castleton, Illinois. Although not affiliated with any particular church, Mr. Rennick was baptized into the Episcopal Church, of which he was a constant attendant in his youth. Fraternally he is both prominent and popular in Peoria, and is identified with various well-known organizations, being a charter member of the Redwood Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, a member of the Independent Order Odd Fellows—which he joined when twenty-one years of age—and of the Masonic order, with which he became associated two years later. He is also a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. For seven or eight years he has been a director of the Workingmen's Loan and Homestead Association. In 1899 he was active in recruiting Troop G, First Illinois Cavalry, of which he served as Second Lieutenant, until forced by his arduous civil duties to resign in 1900.

LESLIE ROBISON.

Leslie, son of James and Isabella (Leslie) Robison, who came to this country from Aberdeenshire, Scotland, was born near Detroit, Michigan, August 8, 1834. Mr. Robison's father first settled in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, then went to Detroit, and from there removed to a farm at Leslie, in Elm Grove Township, Tazewell County, in this State. Leslie Robison attended the common schools at Leslie and later a select school in Tremont. From there he went to Knox College in Galesburg, and then to Yale College, where he graduated in the classical course in 1858. Upon his return to Peoria he took up the study of law and was admitted to the bar at Springfield, Illinois, January 6, 1860. He was introduced to the Court by the illustrious Lincoln, an honor of which Mr. Robison is justly proud. He practiced successfully for twenty years, but, owing to large business interests, was compelled to retire. His father-in-law, Col. Charles Ballance, owned large tracts of land in the City of Peoria, which became involved in law and debt. Mr. Robison took charge of these interests and by his legal ability, sound judgment and energy managed the property in such a way that Mr. Ballance was enabled to leave, at his death several years ago, a very large and valuable estate.

Mr. Robison has acquired for himself, through hard work, good management and conservative judgment, a comfortable fortune. He is still as actively engaged in business and devotes as much time and energy to it as at any time in his life. He was elected Mayor of Peoria on the Republican ticket in 1876-77, and was a director of the Peoria Gas Light & Coke Company for twenty-five years, and President for five years. Has also been a director in the firm of Nicol, Burr & Company, engaged in the foundry and machinery business, since 1882; and President of and a director in the Peoria General Electric Company for several years, and is now President of and a director in the Gipps Brewing Company, and has been since 1891.

Mr. Robison was married in Peoria, January 7, 1864, to Miss Julia Ballance, three children being born in them: Charles Webb, Leslie and Willis B. Charles Webb, the oldest son, alone survives. Mrs. Robison died May 12, 1871. On June 27, 1872, Mr. Robison married Miss Elizabeth Rutherford, daughter of William and Isabella Rutherford, of Peoria.

GEORGE WOODWARD ROUSE.

It is a pleasure to write brief biographical sketches of those whom one has known somewhat intimately in the business, professional or social world. It is somewhat saddening to have names recalled, in so a large number, of one's associates that have passed away—men who have been identified with prominent business or professional interests in the city of Peoria. George Woodward Rouse figured conspicuously, a few years ago, in business circles in Peoria, and was one of the organizers of the Humane Society of the city, which was afterwards erected into a public office by legislative enactment, and became a name only, furnishing a place for some local politician.

He was born at Litchfield, Connecticut, July 17, 1831, to Albion C. Rouse and Esther Susan (Woodward) Rouse. His father was a farmer of sterling old anti-slavery stock, which accounts possibly for the humanitarian views of the subject of this sketch later in life. At the age of eighteen he removed to Illinois and engaged in school teaching at Metamora, in Woodford County, and was Principal of what was known, years ago, as the Metamora High School. He was a graduate of Illinois College, and also more or less interested in the subject of education. In 1864 he removed to El Paso, Illinois, and engaged in the implement and farm machinery business which business he continued to the date of his death.

In 1859 he married Mary E. Wilson, of Metamora, who was a graduate of Knox College and descended in direct line from John Robinson, the Pilgrim pastor. One son was born as the result of this marriage, Harry G. Rouse, well known in business circles, but lately deceased.

In 1875 Mr. Rouse came to Peoria and engaged in the same business, part of the time individually and part in partnership with his son. He was a man of great energy and determination, was very active and energetic, always diligent in business. He was a man of large, sympathetic nature and interested himself in rendering assistance to those in need wherever and whenever he could. He left his large and growing business to his son, who conducted it successfully for several years, latterly under the corporate name of Rouse, Hazard & Co. Mr. Rouse was an ardent Union man, an opponent of slavery and a radical temperance man. He had strong convictions and always the courage of his convictions, whether popular or unpopular. He was a Congregationalist in his church relations, and an earnest worker in the church.

Mr. Rouse was happy in his domestic relations, was proud of his son who early developed fine business capacity, and was a worthy successor to a worthy father.

RUDOLPHUS ROUSE.

Among the pioneers of the West, and especially of Illinois, on account of its location in the heart of the Mississippi Valley, its fertility of soil and the beauty of its landscape, have been numbered many of the brightest, most intellectual and enterprising young men of the Eastern and Middle States. There is a fascination about a new country where Nature has distributed so many of her richest gifts, which irresistibly draw the choicest young men and women from the older communities, and these attractions the Illinois of an early day possessed in lavish profusion. Among those thus lured to the "Prairie State" during the period of its early development was the subject of this sketch—Dr. Rudolphus Rouse. He looked over this field as it lay almost in a state of nature, and selected as his home and the theatre of his future activities the most charming spot in it—Peoria. He was a man of medium height, full figure, compactly built—really a model in physique. In mentality and culture he was far above the average; he shone in the best circles, sparkled with wit and humor and, on occasion, scintillated with sarcasm. With all he was an honorable man of the strictest integrity and unimpeachable moral character. As a business man he was public-spirited and took a leading part in all enterprises tending to the upbuilding and development of the city of his adoption, while as a physician he had no superior and few equals in the State.

Dr. Rouse was of German descent on the paternal side, one of his ancestors being John Rudolphus Rouse, of Hanover, Germany, whose son, John Fernandus Rouse, emigrated from Hanover about 1715. His father was a farmer in Rensselaer County, New York, where the son was born July 20, 1793, and where he spent his boyhood on the farm. His mother's name was Lydia McConnell, the daughter of George McConnell. Largely through his own personal efforts he acquired an academic education, and through the influence of an uncle who was a physician and whom he was accustomed to visit frequently, he was induced to study medicine, taking courses in Philadelphia and New York. He engaged in practice first in New Jersey in the vicinity of New York City, and later in Brooklyn; also served as Surgeon's mate during the War of 1812, at its close receiving an honorable discharge with the thanks of the commanding officer for his faithful and efficient service. In 1833 he decided to seek his fortune in the West, and after making a brief stay in St. Louis, which he first thought of making his permanent home, he was attracted to Peoria, where he at once settled down and engaged in practice. His standing in his profession is indicated by the fact that he became the first presiding officer of the State Medical Society, which was organized at Springfield in 1850. He also became prominent in business affairs, served as a member and Chairman of the first Board of Trustees of the Town of Peoria, retaining that position continuously for six years, and for some time was President of the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad Company, a part of which was absorbed by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, while the remainder became a part of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw line. He acquired a handsome property in Peoria real estate, including some of the most prominent business locations in the city. Fraternally Dr. Rouse was a Royal Arch Mason and Knight Templar; was affiliated with the Episcopal Church and served for many years as vestryman of St. Paul's Church of Peoria. Politically he was an old-line Whig in early life, but became a Republican on the organization of that party, so continuing until his death, which occurred at his home in Peoria April 30, 1873, at the age of nearly eighty years.

Dr. Rouse was married October 6, 1825, to Miss Margaret Banta, daughter of Henry Banta, of what was known as the "English Neighborhood" in New Jersey—his wife's family being of Holland descent. Eight children were born of this marriage—five daughters and three sons—as follows: Margaret (wife of H. J. Sweeney), died April 11, 1900; Amelia R., widow of Elias Winchell; Martha (wife of Z. N. Hotchkiss) died October 28, 1861; Henry B.; Mary; Jennie; Rudolphus and John F.—the last named dying August 28, 1890. Five children—two sons and three daughters—still survive.

The "Peoria Medical Journal," in its issue of May, 1900, paid the following tribute to the memory of this honored citizen of early Peoria: Dr. Rouse was a man of great energy and perseverance, as well as gifted with professional skill. He was a man of excellent business character and public spirit, and when the time appeared ripe for the organization of the regular profession of this State, he appeared as one of the acknowledged leaders and took his place at the front."

HENRY IDE RUGG.

Henry Ide Rugg, early merchant and druggist, Peoria, was born in Salem, Massachusetts, August 11, 1813, the son of John and Persis (Hildreth) Rugg, both of whom were descended from English ancestors who came to Plymouth Colony at an early day in colonial history. From Salem the family moved to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, which became the permanent home. The father died in middle life, while the mother lived to the age of over eighty years. Their son, Henry, was educated at Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts. On October 20, 1835, he was married, at Portsmouth, to Miss Celia Brackett Akerman, whose family, on the paternal side, was of German descent, and on the maternal, of Irish extraction. One of Mrs. Rugg's brothers was Amos T. Akerman, who went to Georgia about 1850, where he became distinguished as a lawyer. Although he espoused the cause of the Confederacy during the Civil War, after the war was over, he became an earnest reconstructionist, and, in 1870, was appointed by President Grant Attorney-General of the United States, serving two years.

After the decease of his father, Mr. Rugg purchased a stock of goods in Boston and in 1838, in company with a brother-in-law, Walter Edwin Akerman, started West with a view to engaging in mercantile business at Rochester, New York. After having looked over the situation at Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo, and finding the outlook unsatisfactory, he went on to Chicago, and being equally dissatisfied with the prospects there, sold out his stock of goods at auction. In a letter dated at Chicago September 30, 1838, Mr. Rugg wrote to his friends, "I am disappointed in Chicago. From a book called 'Illinois in 1837-38,' I was led to expect greater things.

* * * I find buildings irregular and small, and rents high. A small store costs four to five hundred per year, and board is from five to nine dollars per week." This was in the closing year of Chicago's first boom, which was followed by a period of depression. The real estate men of that period, in their wildest imaginings, had no conception of the changes which would be brought about in population, rents and business conditions in the course of sixty years.

Finding little to attract him in Chicago, Mr. Rugg extended his journey to Alton, then the principal commercial town in Illinois. In a short time he came to Peoria and joined his brother-in-law, already mentioned, in establishing a country store, which was located on Main street Street, near Water. In 1840 he entered into partnership with Mr. John Reynolds, and purchasing the stock of Rugg & Akerman, removed it to Farmington, Fulton County, where he remained several years, when he returned to Peoria and here engaged in the drug business, first in partnership with Charles Fisher, under the firm name of Rugg & Fisher, at the corner of Fulton and Water Streets, but, in the latter '50s, conducting a drug business alone on Adams, at the head of Bridge Street, finally retiring in 1861.

Mr. and Mrs. Rugg were intensely patriotic, and, during the Civil War, he made more than one trip to the South carrying hospital and sanitary supplies to the Union Army, in which his son was serving. It was while on one of these trips during the siege of Vicksburg, that he contracted a severe cold, from which he never fully recovered, dying April 27, 1867.

Originally a Whig, under the political conditions growing out of the repeal of the Missouri Compromise and the attempt to extend slavery into free territory, he became an ardent Republican. Reared in his native New England as a Congregationalist, after coming to Peoria, he united with the First Presbyterian Church of that city, but later became one of the founders of the Second Church of the same denomination, of which he remained a member until the time of his death. He was a man of true New England type, of medium height, sparely built, quiet in demeanor, gentlemanly in deportment, upright and conscientious in all his dealings and held in high respect by his fellow-men. That he placed devotion to his country above everything else was demonstrated by his willingness that his only son should enlist in the army for the suppression of the rebellion. From that day forth, as it had been before, his devotion to the welfare of the men in the field was assiduous, and it is more than probable that he sacrificed his own life in his country's cause. Mrs. Rugg was one of the original members of the Ladies' Soldiers' Aid Society of Peoria, and continued to be a member under its several changes of name until her death, which occurred May 28, 1897.

FRANK P. SARGENT.

Among the overwhelmingly strong organizations which the enlightenment of the present has rendered possible, and which is an emphatic acknowledgment of the world's debt to the employed, is the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of which Frank P. Sargent is Grand Master. To the uninitiated this title may carry little significance; yet, to those who have watched the march of labor and capital and have seen the old order of things recede into the shadows with conditions which made the French Commune possible, and assured to the laborer the bitterness, but not the compensation, of toil, there has come a consciousness of an advance of unprecedented proportions, best typified by those splendidly proportioned heads of organizations which formerly obeyed but now also command.

The origin of the name of Sargent is, at best, but vaguely speculative, but may possibly be derived from the Latin "Sergeus" or "Servius." The genealogical record of the family, compiled by Edwin Everett Sargent, of St. Johnsbury, Vermont, and published in 1899, gives at least forty different spellings of the name, "Sargon" being the most ancient. Sargon was king of Babylon four thousand years before Christ, and 722 B. C., Sargon or Sargian was king of Assyria. The name, with but slight change of orthography, is found in Persia, Gaul and the Netherlands. There are several distinct families in America, and many bearers of the name have distinguished themselves in their respective walks of life. Frank P. Sargent traces his descent directly to William Sargent, who came from England to Ipswich, Essex County, Massachusetts, in 1632, and died at what is now Amesbury, Massachusetts, in 1675. The line of descent from this New England pioneer includes William the first and second, Jacob, Winthrop, John, Josiah, Jacob P., Charles and Edwin—the latter being the immediate ancestor of Mr. Sargent.

The commanding personality upon the industrial horizon to which forty-two thousand locomotive firemen look for guidance, and which six hundred lodges regard as their head, has something of the ruggedness of his native hills of Vermont in his nature, and something of the largeness of outlook and courage of judgment which unfailingly lives with those who have known the life of the frontiersman upon the Western plains. With a fair amount of schooling he started out to learn the photographic business in New Hampshire, and later followed it in Massachusetts until failing health made a change of location and occupation necessary. A solution of his difficulty seemed to beckon him from the diversity of Arizona, and when arrived there he enlisted in the United States Cavalry, and contributed his share towards the extermination of the murderous Apaches. Following his honorable discharge from the service in 1880, he resolved to try his hand at railroading, and so entered the service of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at Tucson, Arizona, in the humble capacity of wiper. At the end of three months he was fireman on a construction engine; in six months he was a regular fireman on the road, and in twelve months a member of the Brotherhood—his initiation taking place in an improvised lodge room in a coal-bin in Tucson. As financier of the lodge he first displayed that genius for management and detail which have since gained command of large responsibilities, and, more than all else, elevated him to the present position of trust. In 1882 he was a conspicuous figure at the convention at Terre Haute, Indiana, and the following year, at Philadelphia, was made Vice-Grand Master, and was created Grand Master in 1885.

In 1898 Mr. Sargent was tendered a position on the Industrial Commission by President McKinley, but eventually resigned and continued his efforts for the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen. As further evidence of the esteem entertained for him by the great statesman and President, he was then tendered the position of Chief of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, which responsibility Mr. Sargent appreciated but did not accept. At times, while endeavoring to adjust matters which the unsettled condition of general affairs has made particularly arduous, Mr. Sargent has proved a generalship beyond the expectations of his warmest admirers. One of the most perplexing problems up for consideration was the settlement of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy strike in 1888, which was discontinued at the end of a year, but would have been indefinitely prolonged had it not been for Mr. Sargent's remarkable executive ability, and the confidence entertained in him by his subordinates. Again, in 1894, at the time of the strike of the American Railway Union, his utmost ingenuity was taxed, and the holding together of the various factions of the organization seemed an almost insurmountable difficulty. However, victory was achieved, and the credit was largely due to the master mind whose calm controlling force never wavered, or for an instant lost its grip upon the essentials of good management.

October 17, 1881, Mr. Sargent married Georgie N. McCulloch, a native of Saugus, Massachusetts. Mr. Sargent is a Republican in politics, and is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Fraternally he has an extensive acquaintance with many of the prominent organizations in the country, notably the Masonic Order—the Blue Lodge, Chapter, Commandery, Scottish Rites, Indianapolis Consistory, the Mystic Shrine, Knights of Constantine, the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Ancient Order United Workmen,—of which last he was a charter member at Yuma, Arizona, and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen. Though practically a young man, and in the prime of a vigorous mentality, Mr. Sargent has made his way by the exercise of principles and ability which insures a continuation and increase of his present prestige in the industrial and social world.

On April 4, 1902, Mr. Sargent received from President Roosevelt the appointment of Commissioner General of Immigration for the United States, as successor to T. V. Powderly, and assumed the duties of the office July 1st, with headquarters in the Treasury Building in the City of Washington.

JOHN F. SCHIPPER.

In the history of Peoria mercantile enterprises no name has been more conspicuous than that of John F. Schipper, for many years the senior member of the firm of Schipper & Block, proprietors of the extensive department stores conducted under their name in Peoria and Pekin. Mr. Schipper was born at Wundel (which was the home of the Schipper family for over 200 years), near Wirdum, in Ostfriesland, Germany, December 22, 1838, and died in Pekin, Illinois, September 25, 1893. His father, Frederick Schipper, was a man of strong and pleasing personality, who occupied various positions of trust and honor in his day. Although in later life belonging to the landed gentry of Northern Germany, he bore an active part in the defense of his fatherland against the aggressions of the First Napoleon, being one of those who, under Blucher, took part in the overthrow of the despoiler of Europe finally consummated on the field of Waterloo. He was also active in the engineering department which constructed many of the public works of Northern Europe, especially the harbor at Cherbourg, France. He died respected and honored, in the old home in Germany, in 1876, at the advanced age of eighty-five, having survived his wife for many years.

John F. Schipper was the third of a family of five sons, and spent his boyhood in the family home in much the same manner as boys of his station and period. His educational advantages were of a superior order and, coupled with studious habits and an eager desire for knowledge, fitted him for the business career which he was ultimately destined to pursue. His preliminary training was received from private tutors and in the gymnasium at Wirdum, after which, at the age of seventeen, he took a course in a business college, when he obtained a position in a dry-goods store in Emden, and later spent two years in a similar position in Rotterdam, Holland. During the latter period, his health having become somewhat impaired he determined to visit Japan; but was induced by the urgent advice of his father to change his destination to America. This was in the year 1865, immediately after the close of the war for the preservation of the Union—a period when many young Germans of high culture and liberal principles were having their attention directed toward the New World, as that of their countrymen had been after the Revolution of 1848.

Coming to Pekin, Illinois, in the year just named, with the business experience gained in his native country, Mr. Schipper soon found employment as clerk in the dry-goods store of M. Heisel, but six months later entered into partnership with C. Bonk under the firm name of Bonk & Co., which continued until the death of Mr. Bonk. He soon after organized a partnership with Mr. Henry Block, out of which, in addition to the Pekin establishment, have since grown the great department store of Schipper & Block, and the Schipped & Block Furniture and Carpet Company, of Peoria, which, combined, transact a larger business than any other concern in the State outside of Chicago. Of these Mr. Schipper was the President, and for many years was also a member of the banking firm of Teis Smith & Co., of Pekin. Although Mr. Schipper had the advantage of being born in affluent circumstances, he took the same pains to qualify himself for a practical business career as if he had been dependent upon his own resources. With such training it is not surprising that he should have developed one of the most successful business enterprises ever achieved in the State, and that, too, only by the employment of legitimate business methods.

Strongly cosmopolitan in his tastes, Mr. Schipper traveled quite extensively before coming to the country of his adoption, and during 1873, in company with his wife, visited the great Exposition at Vienna, and the ancestral seat of the Schipper family, later extending his travels throughout Germany and other portions of Europe. Again, in 1892, he and his wife made an extended tour through the United States, deriving especial enjoyment from a visit to the Pacific coast and adjacent regions.

On November 3, 1869, Mr. Schipper was married to Anna Look, the only daughter of Ibe and Lena (Steen) Look, of Pekin, Illinois. Six children were born to them—three daughters and three sons. Charlotte, the eldest, died at two years of age; Martena at the age of one year, and Leonora at seventeen. The three sons—Carl, I. John and Frederick—survive; the two older embarked in business in Pennsylvania and the younger is preparing for a future career by study and travel. All are young men of ability and promise, who have received an ideal training from a devoted and loving mother.

Mr. Schipper was trained in the tenets of the Lutheran Church in his native land, but, inspired by a broad-minded independence and free from bigotry and sectarianism, he liberally aided other denominations in their worthy enterprises, and contributed freely but unostentatiously to public and private charities. Without being a politician in the partisan sense of the term, he believed in the principles of the Republican party, and more than once received its nomination for important offices; also served the city faithfully and efficiently as Alderman and Inspector of Schools for a number of terms. His death, in the very zenith of his business career and in the midst of his greatest usefulness, was an irreparable loss to the cities of Peoria and Pekin, with whose interests he had been so long and so intimately identified.

JACOB P. SCHNELLBACHER.

A justifiable and discerning faith in the future of Peoria has led Mr. Schnellbacher to invest heavily and accomplish largely, and almost irretrievably to associate his fortunes with the city whose needs he has so thoroughly understood. From earliest youth his life has been fashioned upon strong and common-sense principles, inherited largely from a Teutonic ancestry, whose religion included unswerving loyalty to parents, to country and to every trust assumed. A native of Wersau, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, he was born August 25, 1855, and, at the age of ten years, came with his parents to America and settled in Pekin, Illinois, where the father engaged in the shoe business.

The childhood of Mr. Schnellbacher contained little of the joy and irresponsibility which is the portion of the average American lad, for, a few months after settling in the new home, he hired out to work on a farm for a year at $8 a month. His innate recognition of duty was, perhaps, best expressed in the disposition of the $96 which rewarded the year of toil, for his only expenditure was a fifty-cent ticket of admission to Dan Rice's circus, the remaining $95.50, together with $13 received for an extra month's work, being turned over to his father. That next winter he went to school in Pekin, and the following spring again hired out to a farmer—this time for three months at $13 a month, which profit also found its way into the parental purse. Again he attended school during the farm leisure of the winter months, and the coming spring found him physically stronger and more capable and able to command $15 a month for another summer in the harvest field, which increase of finances served to swell the much needed home fund. At the age of fifteen he was placed at the shoe bench and taught to fashion foot-gear after the most approved methods, and in time became one of the most rapid and skilled knights of the awl and bench in the county. For several of the eight years devoted to shoe-making his skill brought in eight dollars a week, which earnings went the way of the farm-hand profits. With what seems like incredible industry he had, in the meantime, bolstered up his educational deficiencies by attendance at night-schools during the winter time, and had become an expert bookkeeper. At the age of twenty-one he began to think about his own future, and to save whatever he earned for the nucleus of an independent business. This fund was materially increased through good fortune which came his way when twenty-three years of age, owing to a position assumed as bookkeeper for a large dry-goods and clothing house in Pekin, which paid him $900 for a year's services, which salary was the largest paid by any concern in the city up to that time. Out of these earnings he saved $631.25, with which he came to Peoria April 15, 1881, and started a little shoe store at 112 North Adams Street. After a time there was such an increase of business that, by 1885, he was obliged to remove to more commodious quarters at 110 South Adams Street, in what was then known as the Dewein Block. Here he worked up the largest shoe trade in the retail line in Illinois, and laid the foundation for his more extended general business success. With the making of money came also the necessity for investment of the same, and in this Mr. Schnellbacher displayed great sagacity and forethought. In 1896 he purchased the Frederick Hotel property, on the corner of Adams and Liberty Streets (now Hotel Grant), with a frontage of one hundred and four feet, and, besides the purchase price, expended $25,000 in an effort to make it one of the finest hotels in the State. In August of 1900 he purchased the fine business block in which his store is located, and the name of the structure was then changed from Dewein to Schnellbacher. The hotel and business block net their owner the handsome yearly rental of $15,000. Mr. Schnellbacher also owns the Peoria Shoe Company's business, and is one of the stockholders in the large shoe factory of the Jones-Earl Shoe Company, of Racine, Wisconsin. Besides a large amount of valuable city property, he is a stock-holder and director in the Central National Bank of Peoria, and was one of the foremost promoters and builders of the $120,000 race track in the city.

The marriage of Mr. Schnellbacher and Lena Leisey occurred October 3, 1889, and Mrs. Schnellbacher died in 1897, leaving three handsome and promising boys: Freddie, Albert and Jacob Paul—aged, respectively, nine, seven and four years. Mr. Schnellbacher is very prominent in fraternal circles in Peoria, and, as a Mason, is identified with the Chapter, Commandery and Shrine, and is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the Creve Coeur Club, and was President of the National Saengerfest held in Peoria in June, 1902. Mr. Schnellbacher exerts a fine and progressive influence in the midst of his cosmopolitan surroundings, and is a liberal contributor to church and general philanthropic undertakings. He furnished the first and one of the finest and largest rooms in the new addition to St. Francis' Hospital in honor of his deceased wife, Mrs. Lena Schnellbacher, and is now erecting one of the handsomest monuments in Springdale Cemetery to her memory. An extensive traveler in this and other countries, he has observed broadly and imbibed freely from the improving resources of art, letters, and music, and is withal entitled to the appreciation so gladly rendered by his fellow townsmen.

WILLIAM SCHRODER.

In common with the successful builder of all time and place, William Schroder is granted a satisfaction denied the followers of many occupations, and though now enjoying a well-earned respite from business cares, may walk abroad in many streets of many towns of the State, as long as he lives, behold the tangible evidences of his skill and energy rising in strength and usefulness. Though skilled in computations, materials, and different methods of construction, he has been none the less successful in fashioning the foundation of his own career, or in forging his way through limitations and discouragements to the satisfying present. A native of Sulingen, Hanover, Germany, he was born March 12, 1826, a son of Henry and Magdalene (Sudmann) Schroder, and grandson of Conrad Schroder, all of whom were natives of Hanover. Henry Schroder emigrated from his native land to America in 1842, and from New Orleans came up the river to Cincinnati, where his death occurred in 1849.

The childhood of William Schroder was filled with little of the joy and expectancy of life, for at an early age he was obliged to assist in the family maintenance, and can hardly remember a time when he did not have to support himself. He worked first as a teamster, and the thrift and economy of the man was evinced by the fact that, though making but four and a half dollars a month for between three and four years, he managed to save fifty dollars of his wages. When about twenty years old he began to learn the carpenter's trade, at which he worked four years, but, before completing his trade, the Mexican War broke out, and he enlisted in the Fourth Ohio Infantry. During the year's service in Mexico he saw service at Matamoras, Vera Cruz and Pueblo, and after the restoration of peace, returned to Cincinnati and worked for five years at his trade. In 1852 he became associated with Peoria, and two years later began contracting and building, and there are now standing to his credit, besides numerous other buildings of importance, Calvary church, the First Methodist Episcopal and the German Methodist churches, the Young Men's Christian Association building, the Peoria Transfer House, and the Fey House (another important addition to the city), and Kingman's Warehouses, which were burned to the ground. Different parts of the State have also profited by the ingenuity of Mr. Schroder, and, among his outside creations, may be mentioned the school-houses of Chillicothe and Geneseo, churches at Pittsfield, Henry, Princeville, Wenona and Watseka, as well as churches and other buildings at Fort Madison, Iowa.

March 6, 1849, Mr. Schroder was united in marriage at Cincinnati with Margaret Mielbar, daughter of Albert Mielbar, who brought his family from Sieke, Hanover, to Baltimore, and thence to Cincinnati, in 1842. Mr. Mielbar was a farmer on a large scale, and eventually settled in Dearborn County, Indiana. To Mr. and Mrs. Schroder was born one son, Frederick H., who is now deceased, leaving eight children and two grandchildren. Mr. Schroder and family are members of the Presbyterian Church. As a staunch Republican he has served his party in various capacities, and, for the last four years, has been a member of the County Board of Supervisors. The home life of Mr. Schroder has been a singularly happy one, and March 6, 1899, occurred the golden wedding which indicated the half century mark of an ideal and helpful association. Gathered to bid them welcome at the Calvary Presbyterian Church, where the celebration was held, were eight hundred guests, among them being Mr. and Mrs. Vennemann, who, fifty years before, had assisted at the original ceremony. Both Mr. and Mrs. Schroder occupy an enviable place in the hearts of their friends and associates, and Peoria has been the gainer by their hospitality and general good fellowship, as well as by the splendid earlier work of Mr. Schroder.

JAMES HADLEY SEDGWICK.

James Hadley Sedgwick, lawyer, of the firm of Bailey & Sedgwick, Peoria, was born at East Union, Coshocton County, Ohio, September 4, 1840. His father, Samuel Sedgwick, was a physician who was born in Connecticut about 1800, and who was a descendant of Robert Sedgwick, a native of London, England, born in 1590. After spending his earlier years in mercantile pursuits in his native country, Robert Sedgwick came to America in 1635, settling in Massachusetts, where he became prominent in Colonial affairs, serving as a Representative in the General Court (Colonial Legislature) and as commander of colonial forces under Cromwell. In 1654 he participated in the conquest of the French colony of Acadia (now Nova Scotia), which resulted the next year in the forcible removal of the French inhabitants and their dispersion along the Atlantic coast and the drifting of a part of them into Louisiana. As one of Cromwell's Major-Generals and Governor of the Island of Jamaica, Carlyle pays him a high tribute, saying of him: "Brave, very brave, zealous and pious man; letters in Thurloe best worth reading of all."

While still a young man, Samuel Sedgwick removed from Connecticut to New York, where he attended medical lectures, conceiving so high an opinion of his instructors that he named his boys for them. Hence, the name of James Hadley Sedgwick. The elder Sedgwick married Renhama P. Knight, of Oswego County, and afterwards removed to Ohio. While the Polk campaign of 1844 was on, he made another removal with his family to Illinois, locating at Little Rock, in Kendall County. The then youthful James recalls the fact that the first scrap of poetry that found a lodgment in his boyish mind was the following couplet from a campaign song of that period:

"Oh! the road that Polk erects us Leads to slavery and to Texas."

The first event of which he has a clear recollection, is being in a mover's wagon stuck fast in the middle of a big pond, which he thinks must have been near the eastern border of Illinois—probably an Illinois "slough" of that day. He remembers his father as a quiet, kind, grave man, whose word was fundamental law to his boyish offspring, but who died when the latter was eight years of age. The next eight years were spent at home with his mother, attending district school, working on the farm, reading everything he could lay hands on. The family then removed to Sandwich, Illinois, where James attended an academy for a few months, clerked for a year in a village store, then went to school at Oberlin, Ohio—first as a student in the preparatory department and then in the college. During his vacations he engaged in manual labor and taught school some to help along.

Life began for him in reality in the fall of 1859—about the time of the John Brown raid at Harper's Ferry—when he went to Missouri to engage in teaching at Iron Mountain, but soon finding that he was persona non grata, he thought it best to leave—an opinion in which his patrons appeared to be unanimous. Not having seen enough of the South, however, he went to New Orleans, thence to Galveston, and finally to Washington County, Texas, where he took a school, remaining until February, 1860, when he returned North, on the way taking in Peoria, with which he seems to have been captivated, as he says of it: "The lake, smooth and clear as a mirror, reflecting forest on the southern shore and town on the northern shore, seemed one of the most beautiful scenes he had ever beheld."

After spending more time at Oberlin, in 1861 he began the study of law in Chicago with Judge Booth, was admitted to the bar and opened an office, the same year, at Sandwich, Dekalb County. When, after the battle of Bull Run, Father Abraham called for more men to defend the Union, he enlisted in the army, spending three years in the service—part of the time in a Southern prison—receiving an honorable discharge, in 1865, as Sergeant of the Fifty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Then, returning to Sandwich, he resumed practice, edited the village paper for a time, and married Maria B. Merritt, his present wife, who is a second cousin of General Wesley Merritt. For two years (1867-69) he was, at Sycamore, the partner of Judge Lowell, but in 1873 opened an office in Chicago with his present partner, O. J. Bailey, Esq. In 1875 the firm removed to Peoria, where both of its members have since resided and practiced their profession. Mr. Sedgwick has four children living: Dr. H. M. Sedgwick, William C., Philip D. and Edna E. Sedgwick. He is a member of Bryner Post, No. 67, Grand Army of the Republic. In politics he is conservatively independent, or independently conservative—not believing that it is the chief duty of an American citizen to run for office, but to keep his eye open, watch events, cast his vote on conscientious principles and exert his influence on the side of stability and righteousness in government.

JAMES SELBY.

Among the pioneers in building up what has become, within less than fifty years, one of the leading industries of Peoria, no name has been more prominent than that which stands at the head of this article. James Selby was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, March 9, 1819, and spent the first twelve years of life in his native county, when he left to seek those opportunities for advancement which were denied him in his early home and its surroundings. His boyhood and early youth, in common with many others of his time and locality, was a period of struggle and privation. Before reaching nineteen years of age, he adopted the carpenter and building trade, which he prosecuted for a few years, when he began, in a small way and on his own responsibility, the manufacture of farm implements—his product, at that time, being confined chiefly to fanning-mills and grain-drills of his own invention. The early years of his manufacturing life were spent chiefly at Deavertown and Lancaster, Ohio, his labors as a mechanic being diversified, at times, by becoming his own agent in selling the product of his handiwork. In 1857, having determined to seek a larger field for the development of his enterprises, he came to Peoria and established himself in the manufacture of grain-drills, bringing with him a number of partially finished machines from his former location in Ohio. The site of his first factory in Peoria was at the foot of Persimmon Street, which he exchanged a year later for one at Oak and Washington Streets, and this he continued to occupy during his business career. About the time of this removal he entered into partnership with George W. Jones, for many years Clerk of the Appellate Court at Springfield, and the late Josiah Lombard, of Chicago, under the firm name of James Selby & Co., about the same time adding corn-planters to the product of their factory. This partnership lasted about three years, and at a later date he associated with him his two sons-in-law, M. D. Spurck and A. J. Elder, and Mr. R. A. Culter, the firm name remaining unchanged, by which the concern became widely known in this and other States. Mr. Elder withdrew about 1865 or '66, and Mr. Culter in 1867, the partnership with Mr. Spurck continuing until 1896, when Mr. Selby sold out to Mr. Spurck and his sons, who then formed the Union Corn-Planter Company. Mr. Selby was the inventor and patentee of the devices employed in the manufacture of his various machines, as well as the controlling spirit in conducting the business; and, to his untiring industry, enterprise and perseverance was due the success which was recognized by Mr. Ballance in his "History of Peoria," in speaking of the establishment of which he was the head, in 1870, as doing the largest business in its line in Peoria. The value of the service rendered by him to the agricultural industries of the country, through his inventions and manufactured products, was recognized in the numerous prizes awarded to him by County, State, Inter-State and National Fairs and Expositions, at which his machines were on exhibition, including the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia in 1876. Besides numerous money prizes, these took the form of diplomas, bronze, silver and gold medals, according to the plan on which the exposition was conducted.

In 1885, in consequence of having become heavy indorsers for the firm of Hart & Hitchcock, manufacturers of farm machinery, Mr. Selby and Julius S. Starr, Esq., became proprietors of that establishment, the company taking the name of Selby, Starr & Co. A year later, this factory, then located at the corner of Washington and Chestnut Streets, having been burned out, was removed to North Perry Street and Glendale Park

About 1898 Mr. Selby suffered from an attack of apoplexy from which he never fully recovered, although devoting his attention to business nearly two years longer. A second stroke overcame him while sitting at his office-desk on the morning of March 7, 1900, and, two days later (March 9th), on his eighty-first birthday, surrounded by his wife and her son Willis, two of his daughters and their families, his physician (Dr. Johnson), two nurses and numerous friends of the family, he breathed his last in the home which he had enjoyed during the last twenty-five years of his life. His widow and four children by former marriages survive him.

During all his business career Mr. Selby sustained a reputation for sterling integrity and honor, and was regarded as one of the most careful and conservative, as well as progressive and enterprising business men of Peoria and the State. Physically strong and of remarkable vitality up to the last two years of his life, his career had been one of tireless energy and strenuous activity. Mild, unobtrusive and sympathetic in temperament, he was ever ready to assist the suffering and the needy, and hundreds of workmen who had been in his employment found in him a faithful friend and adviser, and cordial and earnest were the words of sympathy coming from many who had profited by his advice and assistance. For seven years he served as a vestryman of Christ Reformed Episcopal Church of Peoria, contributing liberally to its support and attending its services regularly until prevented by failing health. His death was regarded as the removal of one of the most conspicuous industrial land-marks of Peoria, and was most deeply mourned by those who knew him best.

FREDERICK H. SMITH.

Frederick H. Smith was born in Buffalo, New York. His father, William Henry Smith, was for many years General Manager of the Lackawanna Railroad Company, and was prominent in railroad and general business circles.

Frederick H. Smith is a graduate of De Veaux College, and received a practical business education in the office and under the instruction of his father. When quite young he started out with a view to entering upon an independent business career, and, coming to Peoria, became established as the General Agent of a fast-freight line, representing Eastern railroads, in which he remained until 1891. On May 27th of the latter year he was married to Sarah Brockway, of Saginaw, Michigan, and since that time has devoted his attention chiefly to real estate and general business in the city of Peoria. His wife inherited a large fortune, and the care of it has devolved largely upon her husband. He is a director in the Merchants' National Bank of Peoria, besides being interested in timber and lumber lands in the States of Wisconsin and Washington. He has been quite successful in his business affairs, and is considered a man of sound judgment and good business capacity.

In recent years Mr. Smith has become quite prominent in local politics, and is recognized as a force in State politics as well. After the inauguration of Governor Tanner in 1897 he was selected as a member of the Governor's staff, and commissioned with the rank of Colonel. This position he continued to occupy during Governor Tanner's administration, and on the accession of Governor Yates was reappointed to the same position. Under the last two administrations it has devolved upon him and his amiable wife to entertain the representatives of the State Government on visits to Peoria, and this they have done in a most generous and hospitable manner.

At the Republican State Convention held in Peoria in 1900 Colonel Smith was selected as a delegate from the Fourteenth Congressional District to the Republican National Convention of that year, was Committeeman on "Rules and Order," and performed his duty to the general satisfaction of the members of his party throughout the State. During the last year he was named by Governor Yates as Commissioner in connection with the Charleston Exposition, was elected President of the Commission and had charge of the Illinois Department during the exhibition. He is, and always has been, a Republican in politics, and for three years past has been President of the Kickapoo Club, a large and well-known Republican organization of much influence. The Club does not engage in active local politics, but was organized to keep alive and foster the spirit of true Republicanism, and to keep in remembrance the anniversaries of National characters, with an idea of fostering and perpetuating a spirit of patriotism among its members and the community generally. He is also a member of the Country Club of Peoria, and has been its President, besides being President of the Central Illinois Golf Association, and was First Vice-President, and afterwards President, of the Peoria Corn Exposition and Carnival Association of 1901.

Colonel Smith has purchased a beautiful home upon the Bluff, and is prominent in social circles in the city of Peoria. His genial and affable manners, his kindliness, his courtesy and generosity have made for him many warm friends, not only in the city, but throughout the State at large, where he has a wide acquaintance. The fact is generally recognized that he is destined to hold the position in social, political and business affairs which he has already achieved.

The home of Colonel and Mrs. Smith is always open to their friends, and its hospitality is greatly enjoyed by a large circle who always meet a cordial and friendly welcome.

JOHN LANCASTER SPALDING.

When on May 1, 1877, John Lancaster Spalding, Priest Assistant in St. Michaels' Parish, New York City, was consecrated First Bishop of the Diocese of Peoria, this city was made the abiding place of a vital force in American life. The inheritance of talent and piety come to him from a sound-hearted wholesome race, had been so largely increased by his personal worth, that he at once took high rank in a distinguished hierarchy.

The Spaldings are an old English Catholic family from Lincolnshire where Spalding Abbey, founded in the Middle Ages, still stands as a monument to their early devotedness to the church. The American Spaldings date their origin in the days of Lord Baltimore. For two hundred and fifty years the numerous branches of the family have been conspicuously active in the development of Maryland and Kentucky. No name shines brighter in the annals of the Catholic Church in America than that of Martin John Spalding, Archbishop of Baltimore.

John Lancaster Spalding was born in Lebanon, Kentucky, June 2, 1840. Early in the days of his happy boyhood he began to show signs of the priestly vocation and set about fitting himself for that holy calling. His preparatory studies finished at Bardstown, he went to Mount St. Mary's, Emmitsburg, thence to the American College, Laurain, Belgium, when he was ordained priest in 1863. Among his class-mates at this institution, which had been founded a short time before by his uncle, the Archbishop Spalding, was Archbishop Riordan of San Francisco. A year then spent in special studies in Rome left him thoroughly equipped to begin his life work. In 1865 he entered upon his priestly career at the Cathedral of Louisville. Even at this time he was a scholar of such marked attainments that he was chosen Theologian to Archbishop Blanchet of Oregon at the second Plenary Council of Baltimore in 1866. With Father Hecker, the Paulist, and Father Ryan, now Archbishop of Philadelphia. He was selected, though but twenty-six years of age, for the rare honor of preaching at the Council.

His labors, on his return to Louisville, included the founding of a parish for negroes, which, in spite of many difficulties, he completed and left in a flourishing condition after three years of zealous and persistent effort.

In 1872 death ended the strenuous career of his illustrious uncle, Father Hecker, to whose keeping the archbishop's papers had been entrusted, persuaded that the records of a life so worthy should be cast in permanent form, set about finding some one equal to the task. His choice fell upon Father Spalding who left his parish in Louisville and took residence in the House of the Paulist Fathers in New York in order to devote his uninterrupted thought to this labor of love.

When the life of Archbishop Spalding was published it was accepted as the best biography in American Catholic Literature. One distinguished critic, Brownson, says: "It proves the author an accomplished literary man, a deep, earnest thinker, a learned and enlightened theologian, and a devoted priest. . . . The author shows a breadth of view, a depth of reflection, a knowledge of the moral and spiritual wants of modern society, of the dangers of the country and the real issue of the hour that promise the country an author of the first order, and to the church a distinguished servant."

Father Spalding did not return to Kentucky but resumed work as Assistant to Father Donnelly at St. Michael's Church, New York. A preacher of rare excellence he soon impressed himself on the thought of the city; priests and people flocked to hear the orator who could make men think.

From the field of promise, while still an Assistant Priest, he was called to another sphere of activity in the newly erected diocese of Peoria. He accepted the responsibility and was consecrated Bishop of Peoria in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, May 1, 1877.

Here his work has been writ large; he that runs may read. Churches, schools and charitable institutions have sprung up everywhere; waning parishes have waxed strong again; scattered communities have been united into parishes; a strong, purposeful priesthood has been formed, and all in a spirit of such kindly and masterful leadership that not once in twenty-four years has an appeal been made against his judgment.

But a diocese afforded too narrow a scope for action. He had a message for mankind. Keen observation and study had convinced him that Catholics were slow to understand that America meant opportunity for the church. Most of them were gathered in a few cities. The vast numbers of immigrants who came from many countries of Europe, especially from Ireland, were swallowed up in the large centers of population. For generations they had tilled the land at home and could not suddenly enter another kind of life without danger to themselves and, perhaps, ultimate deterioration for their children. With wise prevision of these lamentable consequences Bishop Spalding, in association with Archbishop Ireland, established the Catholic Colonization Society for the purpose of placing the immigrant farmers on the fertile prairies that stretched illimitably over the whole West. It was a magnificent conception. In time prosperous parishes, flourishing dioceses would spring up; the church, unhampered, would grow into vigorous life, and, in free America, the dream of centuries would come true.

Notwithstanding the immense labor and energy of its two great promoters, the plan did not wholly succeed. The immigrants are still in the cities; the land is held by a thriftier race; the opportunity is gone forever, while the prosperity of the colonies that were established proves the wisdom of their founders.

Through a lecture on The Higher Education of the Priesthood, delivered at the Silver Jubilee of Archbishop Heiss of Milwaukee, the Catholic world was made aware of another grand conception that had for some time been taking form in the mind of Bishop Spalding. In due season it was given expression in the Catholic University of America at Washington. During the ten years of its existence it has developed more and more into the ideal seat of universal knowledge that is to be the intellectual center of American Catholicity.

In many other ways has he shown deep interest in things educational. The comprehensive Catholic Educational exhibit at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago, was due to his breadth of view in the office of President of the Board. Spalding Institute, a Boys' High School established in Peoria, will be a fitting memorial to his munificent faith in education.

Bishop Spalding is by nature a teacher. The deepest purpose of his life and writings is to lead men to higher life to give emphasis to the divine in man. He is the embodiment of his own ideas. America has no finer type of the cultured Christian gentleman; an uncynical sage, a thinker not afraid, a churchman without cant, an unselfish patriot, a large minded, genuine, reverent man.

His writings have the ring of kindly sincerity; he writes himself into books. In The Life of Archbishop Spalding one can feel the throbbing of a great heart.

"Essays and Reviews", a reprint of articles that appeared in the Catholic World, is a volume of rugged discussion of church questions, supplemented by a charming "Essay on Religion and Art." "The Religious Mission of the Irish People" was written to further the cause of the Catholic Colonization Society, but will long outlive the occasion that inspired it. Two books of virile verse, "America and Other Poems," and "The Poet's Praise," gave assurance that the versatile Bishop of Peoria was a poet. The assurance has been made doubly sure by the translation, "Songs Chiefly from the German," which has the rare merit of recreating both the body and the soul of the originals.

But thus far his literary fame will rest on his series of essays in education. In these four volumes, "Education and the Higher Life," "Things of the Mind," "Thoughts and Theories of Life," and "Education and Opportunities" and other essays, there is the chrystalizing in brilliant permanency of expression of his profoundest thought. No more inspiring appeals to higher manhood have been uttered in these latter days. The spirit of eternally hopeful youth breathes in them, the soul is stirred to courageous aspirations, humanity is lead into its high inheritance.

On May 1, 1902, Bishop Spalding celebrated his Silver Jubilee as Bishop of the Diocese of Peoria, commemorating the twenty-fifth anniversary of his consecration to that high and holy office. The occasion was a memorable one in the history of the church in this city, and the imposing ceremonies were participated in by the leading dignitaries of the church throughout the country and by nearly three hundred priests. Bishop Spalding celebrated the solemn Pontifical High Mass at the Cathedral, and the eloquent jubilee sermons delivered by Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Ireland, breathed the fervent spirit of deep appreciation and religious brotherhood. At the banquet, which followed at the Episcopal residence, Bishop Spalding was presented with a purse containing $7,000 from the clergy of the diocese, and an engraved check for $1,000 from Spalding Council, Knights of Columbus, for the establishment of a free scholarship in Spalding Institute to be controlled by the Bishop. The addresses delivered by Archbishop Keane, of Dubuque, Archbishop Riordan, of San Francisco, Dean Keating, of Ottawa, Dean Greve, of Peoria, Dean Mackin, of Rock Island, and Rev. Frank J. O'Reilly, Rector of the Cathedral, were heartfelt tributes to the high personality and progressive spirit of the man in whose honor they had assembled.

At the beginning of this new century Bishop Spalding stands Prophet-like apart to remind men of the nobler purposes of living.

MICHAEL D. SPURCK.

Michael D. Spurck (deceased), manufacturer and dealer in agricultural implements, was born in Zanesville, Ohio, May 5, 1833, and died in Peoria, Illinois, June 18, 1897. His parents were George and Ann L. Spurck, who came to Peoria in 1846, and where they afterward became prominent in business and social circles. The first business venture in which the son, Michael D., was engaged, was in connection with his father in the distilling business, to which he devoted his talents and industry for several years with great success, both in a financial point of view and in laying the foundation for a future business career.

In 1860 Mr. Spurck was married to Miss Harriet U. Selby, the daughter of the late James Selby, who came to Peoria in 1857, and for a period of more than forty years, and to the time of his death in 1900, was one of the most prominent manufacturers and business men of the city. In company with his father-in-law, in 1863, Mr. Spurck began the manufacture of corn planters on a large scale, which was continued until 1896, when, on account of failing health, he retired. Out of this co-partnership grew the Union Corn Planter Company, which still exists, being conducted by his sons. In 1890 he organized the Spurck Paving Brick Company, and for several years was Vice-President of that concern. During his life he was connected with many other important business enterprises, his entire life being devoted to manufacturing and commercial pursuits.

Although not a politician in the ordinary acceptance of the term, his desire for the advancement of Peoria as a city and his love for his fellow man, led him to take a keen interest in all questions affecting the welfare of society and the State, and to throw his influence on the side of right and justice. Intelligence, capacity and worth, as essential elements of the highest character, always found ready recognition at his hand, as can be attested by many a business man who receives his first impulse in a successful business career through his financial support and wise advice.

Mr. Spurck was eminently successful in his business enterprises, and, at the time of his death, was one of the largest property holders in the city of Peoria. He was shrewd, active and energetic in the utilization of his business opportunities, but honest in every sense of the term. Maintaining an unblemished character and spotless reputation, his home life was as happy as his business career was successful. He lived a rich, full and complete life, and died as he had lived—a God-fearing man.

As a result of too long and constant application to business which had weakened his vital powers, Mr. Spurck succumbed to an attack of la grippe, on June 18, 1897. There still survive him his widow, Mrs. Harriet U. Spurck, and their seven children: Charles J., Frank S., Clara I. (now Mrs. Eugene P. Blake), Walter L., George A., Luella C. and Michael D., Jr., all residing in Peoria, except Frank S., whose home is in Nelson, Nebraska.

JOHN SANBORN STEVENS.

John S. Stevens was born at Bath, New Hampshire, September 16, 1838, the son of Joshua and Abigail (Walker) Stevens, both of whom were natives of New Hampshire, the father being of English and the mother of Scotch ancestry. They were married in Bath and continued to reside there until 1849, when they removed to Hardwick, Vermont. Here the son received his primary education in the public schools, and fitted himself for college at the Caledonia Academy, meanwhile supporting himself by working upon a farm and by teaching during his vacations in the district schools. In 1858 he entered Dartmouth College, graduated with honors in 1862, and in due time received the degree of Master of Arts.

Soon after leaving college Mr Stevens came to Peoria, where he engaged in teaching for a couple of years—for the first year in the grammar school and the next in the Peoria High School—when he carried out a purpose, entertained in his college days, by entering upon the study of law, in the office of Alexander McCoy, a prominent attorney of that period. In June, 1865, Mr. Stevens was admitted to the bar, and immediately entered into partnership with his preceptor, which was continued with various changes in its membership until 1870, when Mr. McCoy removed to Chicago. Others who were associated with the firm during this period were Judge Marion Williamson and Lorin G. Pratt.

On the dissolution of the firm of McCoy & Stevens in 1870, Mr. Stevens formed a partnership with Judge David McCulloch, which lasted until 1876, when without solicitation or agency on his part, the office of Postmaster of the city of Peoria was tendered to him, under the administration of President Grant, and accepted. During the next four years he gave his attention to the duties of this office, though not entirely withdrawing from the practice of his profession. As, during 1877, he entered into partnership with the late Senator John S. Lee. Patrick W. Gallagher was also for a time a member of the firm. Walter S. Horton later became a partner in the firm, which took the name of Stevens, Lee & Horton. This firm continued until the death of Mr. Lee, and soon thereafter, by the admission of William T. Abbott, it became Stevens, Horton & Abbott, as it exists at the present time.

In June, 1868, Mr. Stevens was united in marriage with Miss Sarah M. Bartlett, a native of Peoria and daughter of the late Amos P. Bartlett, who was, in his day, a prominent merchant and public-spirited citizen, as well as founder of one of the most highly respected families of Peoria. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens have had two children, both of whom died while quite young.

The estimation in which Mr. Stevens is held by members of the legal profession throughout the State is indicated by his position at the present time (1902) as President of the Illinois State Bar Association. Although a lifelong and earnest Republican, and frequently urged to allow the use of his name as a candidate for the Legislature, or some other office, he has been in no sense a seeker for office, preferring to devote his attention to his profession. Besides one term as Postmaster of the city of Peoria, which came to him unsought, the political positions held by him have been limited chiefly to membership in local and State Conventions, and upon the Republican State Central Committee, to which he was elected for the Peoria District at the time of the Republican State Convention of 1900. Liberal, patriotic and high-minded in his connection with State and National politics, he looks rather to the honor of his party and the welfare of the whole people than to selfish promotion or advancement. With an ambition to be a lawyer in the highest and most honorable acceptance of the term, he has advanced to the front rank of the profession, and is to-day in the enjoyment of as large a practice as any member of the profession in the city of Peoria or Central Illinois, representing, as counsel, many of the leading corporations in this section, besides numerous business firms. The following deserved tribute to his abilities and worth as a member of the legal profession is taken from "The Bench of the Bar of Illinois," issued a few years since under the editorship of the late ex-Gov. John M. Palmer—a publication presumed to be especially suited to furnishing a just and discriminating estimate of those with whose characteristics, as lawyers, it had to deal: "Possessed of a mind of rare keenness of perception and of great powers of analysis, and having had the advantage of a good collegiate education, Mr. Stevens took up the study of law as a profound science, rooting itself in those fundamental principles of right which ought to govern in all the affairs of men. Having laid his foundation deep, he has by constant application of these great principles been able to practice his profession with such a degree of success as to have merited and gained the confidence of all who have known him. As a citizen he is highly esteemed, and his kindly impulses and cordiality of manner have rendered him exceedingly popular among all classes."

Mr. Stevens has always been a devoted advocate of popular education, and for several years last past has been, and is now, a member of the Board of School Inspectors of the city of Peoria. For this position his education, his experience as a teacher and his knowledge of the law have rendered him in an eminent degree fitted.

He is a member of Christ (Reformed Episcopal) Church, in which he has held the office of vestryman from the time of its organization.

WILLIAM E. STONE.

William E. Stone was born in Beaver, Pennsylvania, August 13, 1836, and died at Peoria, Illinois, December 28, 1894. His father was a New England sea-captain who lost his vessels and his fortune during the Napoleonic wars. His mother was a woman of superior culture and mental endowment, who had the benefit of the instruction of Mary Lyon, in Mt. Holyoke Seminary, then the leading school for young women in this country.

Mr. Stone received his education at Beaver Academy and Washington College, Pennsylvania. In 1855 he came to Peoria with his brothers, George H. and Marshall P. Stone, and associated himself in the banking business under the firm name of M. P. Stone and Company. William was connected with the firm until it was succeeded by the First National Bank when he became its book-keeper and later cashier and director, retaining that position until his death. He was an excellent financier and, under his management, the First National Bank soon took first rank in the city and in the State outside of Chicago. Mr. Stone was perhaps entitled to as much credit as any other man for the development of the city of Peoria. He was one of the foremost spirits in the building of the West Bluff car line, and the rapid advancement of this section of the city was largely due to his efforts.

He was a pioneer, also, in Averyville, as is attested by the Fairholm Addition and the Straw Board Mill, which he was largely instrumental in building. He was also active in South Peoria, platting, selling and building up large tracts, now known as Bismarck Place, Westmoreland, Humboldt and various other sub-divisions.

Together with Mr. William H. Binnian, Mr. Stone bought the Hodges Harvesting Machinery plant, and this enterprise, now known as the Acme Harvester Company, is another monument to his rare business judgment.

He was a thoughtful, kindly, generous, open-hearted, broad-minded man. One of his characteristics was that he never said, "I don't know." His knowledge on all subjects was deep and showed the results of years of study. He had collected one of the finest private libraries in this section of Illinois. He never cared for conspicuous public place, but voluntarily chose the quiet side of life. His greatest joy was a holiday in the woods with his family. He knew all the flowers, the birds, the trees. Geology and astronomy were also familiar pursuits to this many-sided man. His children idolized him and would forsake their companions any hour for a tramp with him in Rocky Glen or other favorite resorts of natural beauty.

Mr. Stone was so identified with various business interests of Peoria, so generally known and consulted touching all matters of public enterprise, that his loss has been most seriously felt by the community and his place has not been filled.

Mr. Stone married Gertrude H. Gustorf, and his married life was exceptionally happy. His wife, two sons, William E. and Harry C. Stone, and four daughters, Carolyn M. Hays, Gertrude G. Hastings, Pauline S. Newton and Ethel S. Cassell survive him.

HENRY THIELBAR.

Henry Thielbar was born in the Kingdom of Hanover, Germany, May 10, 1832, to Albert Henry and Margaret (Schweke) Thielbar. His father was a farmer, but, finding it hard to make a living in his native country, he came to America with his family in 1842, and settled in Dearborn County, Indiana. He enjoyed the advantages of a few terms in a country school in Dearborn County, laying there the foundation for work which he afterwards accomplished in his education. At the age of fourteen he was apprenticed in Cincinnati, Ohio, to learn the trade of a shoe-maker. While he was preparing himself for the trade, he devoted all his spare time to study, thereby acquiring a very good knowledge of the elementary branches of education which enabled him, in after life, to adopt a broader and more general line of reading and study.

He came to Peoria in 1853 where he worked at his trade for one year, then bought out his employer and continued custom-work until 1861, when he began to deal in ready-made boots and shoes. His business continued to grow, and he built up a large and lucrative trade. During all the earlier years of his business career, he was compelled to make frequent trips to the East for the purchase of his stock of goods. In 1893, he organized a corporation known as "The H. Thielbar Shoe Company," and conducted the business under that name to the time of his death, and it is still continued by his daughters and son under the same name.

He was a very ardent Republican and an earnest supporter of the Government during the Civil War, but was precluded from rendering personal service in the field by having both his legs broken, thereby rendering him unable to do military service. He, however, opened a recruiting office and did what he could for the Government. He was for many years an active member of the A. O. U. W. and the Odd Fellows. He was also very much interested in Sunday School work, and did much to establish schools among the poorer classes of the city of Peoria. In early life he belonged to the Lutheran Church, but afterwards became connected with the Methodists and continued a member of that church till the time of his death, in 1897.

He traveled extensively in Europe with much pleasure and profit. He married Frances Brunga in 1856, by whom he had eleven children, five of whom are still living: Minnie, Margaret J., and Henry W., now residing in Peoria; Frederick J. Thielbar, residing in Chicago; and Mrs. Lydia Eckerman, residing at Los Angeles, California.

Mr. Thielbar took great interest in the growth of the city of Peoria and the development and extension of its manufactories and trade. He was also interested in what seemed to be for the best interests of the city and performed his full part as a citizen. He left a name for honor, uprightness and fairness in his dealings surpassed by none.

JOHN WESLEY VAN SANT.

John Wesley Van Sant, dentist, was born October 2, 1852, at Lower Bank, Burlington County, New Jersey, the son of Rev. Isaac Newton Van Sant, who was born at Fort Republic, New Jersey, May 31, 1830. The Van Sant family, as indicated by the name, are of Dutch origin, their American ancestry having settled at a place called Shamony on the Delaware, nearly two hundred years ago. The Rev. Isaac N. Van Sant was a Methodist minister of engaging personality and rare oratorical powers, who spent his life as an itinerant in New Jersey and New York State, dying at Stony Point, New York, December 27, 1897. Gov. Samuel R. Van Sant, the present executive of the State of Minnesota, belongs to a lateral branch of the same family, being the cousin of Dr. Van Sant, of Peoria.

Doctor Van Sant received his primary education in the common schools of his native State, and at thirteen years of age began learning dentistry with E. F. Hanks, a celebrated dentist of New York City. He began practice at Amboy, New Jersey, in 1866, and four years later (1870) came West, after visiting various points, finally locating in Peoria. After eleven years' successful practice here he decided to give up the profession of dentistry, and removed to Gage County, Nebraska, where he engaged in stock-raising. This venture, however, proved unsuccessful, and, after having sacrificed most of his savings in an experiment lasting between three and four years, he returned to Peoria and resumed the practice of his profession. Beginning anew he soon regained the success which he had previously achieved, and is to-day probably doing a larger business than any other dentist in a city of equal size in America.

In 1899 Doctor Van Sant erected a building at the corner of Adams and Chestnut Streets, three stories in height with basement, and costing about $40,000, and is now (1902) erecting an addition of 60 by 80 feet, with the addition of a fourth story to the original structure, the improvements to cost $35,000. His establishment is, in some respects, unique, as it amounts practically to a dental sanitarium, containing, besides operating rooms, sleeping and living rooms in which he furnishes lodging and board, free of charge, to out-of-town patients whose cases require that they should remain in the city for any considerable period. In this way, as well as by his skill in dental surgery, he has attracted patients not only from distant points in Illinois, but also from many adjacent States. With the aid of competent assistants he operates eight chairs, many patients coming hundreds of miles to avail themselves of his mode of treatment. He was one of the first to make seamless crown-work a specialty in his department, and has kept pace with every modern advancement in his profession.

Having begun to feel the strain of over-work in 1897, Dr. Van Sant determined upon a vacation. For this purpose he chose the rather novel and adventurous plan of a trip to Alaska, which included an almost mid-winter trip on his return from Dawson City. Having reached the Pacific coast on his outward trip, he embarked on a steamer at Seattle about the first of August, reaching Skaguay on the 8th, and was a member of the first party who mapped out the trail from Skaguay to Lake Bennett, the head of navigation on the Yukon, where they arrived on September 10th. Here they hired boats built and descending the Yukon arrived at Dawson City September 23d, where he soon after engaged in mining, remaining until the latter part of November. The return trip required twenty-seven days, which was accomplished by means of a dog-train of sixteen dogs with five sleds to carry provisions. The trip was a successful one even in a financial point of view, as, besides the experience gained in an absence of six months, the Doctor brought out with him $5,000 above his expenses. In the meantime Mrs. Van Sant had kept the dental parlors in Peoria going, and had made as much as, or more than, he had.

Doctor Van Sant was married September 22, 1876, to Miss Ida Siefkes, who is of Holland descent, and they have three children: Birdie; Ralph Newton, now a student in the Dental Department of the Northwestern University, Chicago; and Lepert, who is at the present time a student at Notre Dame University, South Bend, Indiana. In politics he is a Republican; is a thirty-second-degree Mason, a member of the Mystic Shrine, a Modern Woodman of America and a Forester. He has an interest in mines at Cripple Creek, Colorado, and in the Meteor mines near the British Columbia line.

ISAAC WALKER.

Isaac Walker, former head of the Isaac Walker Hardware Company, and one of Peoria's pioneer business men, was born at Williamstown, Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, December 1, 1803, the son of James and Ann (Cain) Walker. His parents came to America from the north of Ireland, his family on the maternal side being of Scotch-Irish extraction.

Mr. Walker received a common-school education and then learned the hardware business in his native town. Coming to Peoria in 1842, with Harvey Lightner as a partner he opened a retail and jobbing hardware store at the corner of Fulton and Water Streets, where they remained about two years, when they removed to a building which they had erected on Main between Washington and Water Streets. Mr. Lightner having retired from the firm, he was succeeded by George H. McIlvaine, when the style of the firm became Walker & McIlvaine, so continuing for many years. During the existence of this copartnership, the store was removed to Mr. McIlvaine's building on Adams between Main and Fulton Streets, where it remained until the withdrawal of Mr. McIlvaine to engage in the banking business. About this time the business was removed to the northwest corner of Washington and Fulton Streets, and Mr. Walker began to give his attention exclusively to the wholesale trade, admitting his son Edward H. into partnership. Alexander Thompson was also a member of the firm for some time.

Mr. Walker conducted a quiet, conservative business and, after the admission of his son to partnership, much of the management of its affairs devolved upon the latter. New life was gradually infused into the business and more progressive methods adopted, the effect of which was soon seen in the doubling of the volume of trade. Although gradually yielding the management of the firm to younger hands, Mr. Walker remained at its head and active in its affairs up to the very day of his death, which occurred November 27, 1880, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. On the 1st of January, 1879, the firm took the name of Isaac Walker & Son, and after his decease, its location was removed to Adams Street between Liberty and Fulton. Here it remained until the completion of the magnificent new building which it now occupies at 514-516 South Washington Street. In the meantime, after the demise of Mr. Walker, the firm name was changed to "The Isaac Walker Hardware Company," as a memorial in honor of its founder on the part of his children.

Mr. Walker was married, April 1, 1845, to Miss Sarah S. McIlvaine, daughter of Robert and Sarah (Slemens) McIlvaine, of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. Of this union seven children were born, of whom four died in infancy. The surviving children are: Edward H., President of the Isaac Walker Hardware Company;

John W. Van Sant

Mary, now Mrs. William A. Herron of Peoria, and Anna, present Mrs. N. G. Moore, of Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago.

In politics Mr. Walker was an earnest, high-minded and patriotic Republican, who vigorously sustained the Government during the period of its greatest peril. He became a professing Christian in 1858, and united with the Second Presbyterian Church of Peoria by letter, in 1866, ever after adorning his profession by a consistent life which won the respect of all classes. To a reputation for integrity, which placed his name beyond the faintest suspicion of wrong-doing, he joined a spirit of generous benevolence, which made him the friend of the deserving poor. Trustful and confiding in others, he commanded the confidence of all who came in contact with him. It has been claimed by one who knew him best, that "his virtues were as conspicuous as they were gentle and helpful," and that "he never had an enemy." In fine, he was accorded, by the unanimous testimony of his fellow-citizens, the reputation of a pure and high-minded Christian gentleman.

BENJAMIN WARREN.

Benjamin Warren, Jr., was born at La Harpe, Hancock County, Illinois, July 22, 1852. His paternal great-grandparents were Benjamin and Charlotte Warren, born in England; his grandparents, Luther and Charlotte Warren, were born in Waterboro, Maine. His father's name is Benjamin Warren, born in Shapleigh, Maine.

Benjamin Warren, Sr., first went to Boston, where he lived a few years, and then moved to La Harpe, Illinois. He was engaged in the mercantile business for a number of years, but is now retired and still lives at La Harpe. Benjamin Warren, Jr., attended the common schools at La Harpe, and afterwards the High School at Macomb, where he graduated in June, 1869. After his graduation he clerked for about two years in a dry-goods store in La Harpe, and then commenced buying grain. March 15, 1876, he came to Peoria and went into the grain and commission business, under the name of Warren and Company. His transactions in the grain business during all these years have been very large and his business career has been attended with marked success. Notwithstanding his attention to business, he has taken a decided interest in the up-building of Peoria and has been identified with most of the important public enterprises in the city. Mr. Warren was one of the prime factors in the organization of the Peoria Herald Publishing Company. He has been, for many years, a director of the Iowa Central Railway Company, is Secretary and Manager of the Iowa Elevator Company, a director in the Peoria Gas and Electric Company, a director of the Illinois National Bank, has been a director of the Board of Trade for more than twenty-five years, and was instrumental in building. He completed his Peoria Wagon Company, and Vice-President of the Peoria Terminal Railway Company, which he was instrumental in building. He completed his third term as Trustee of the Pleasure Driveway and Park District of Peoria, and is now President of the Board. Thus it will be seen that Mr. Warren has identified himself with many things which have tended to develop and build up the city.

In politics, Mr. Warren has always been a Democrat, but has never allowed his political actions to be controlled by partisan spirit. In all local matters he has been controlled more by the public good than partisan preference or prejudice. He refused to go with his party in 1896 and in 1900, being a strong believer in the gold standard.

Mr. Warren was married, February 12, 1879, to Bertha Day, of Joliet, her father having been a prominent merchant in Joliet for many years. Mrs. Warren was born in Brattleboro, Vermont. Three children have been born to them: Ella, born August 4, 1880; Charles D., born January 3, 1882; and Frank M., born March 1, 1885. Ella, the oldest child, is now a student at Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts.

Mr. Warren's domestic life has been a happy one, and he is justly esteemed in the community for his good citizenship, his interest in all public affairs and his efforts in behalf of the city. He has always enjoyed a personal popularity, justly merited.

CROSBY WHITE.

During an unusually active life Mr. White has diversely applied his abilities, and, though engaged in the grocery business since 1871, and consequently one of the pioneers in that line in Peoria, he has a correspondingly thorough knowledge of the brewery business, and of the uncertainties which beset the venturesome and ever-confident miner. He has traveled much and observed broadly, and his deductions have resulted in a wise conservatism consistent with the best and most enterprising citizenship. A native son of Illinois, Mr. White was born in Springfield, June 4, 1840, and is a son of Robert Crawford and Mary A. (Wright) White. When four years of age he removed with his parents to McLean County, Illinois, and, two years later, to Woodford County, where he was educated in the public schools and well trained in the duties of the agriculturist.

When eighteen years of age Mr. White entered upon his business career at Wesley City and afterwards at Peoria; and, in a surprisingly short time, had mastered every detail of the brewing business, and become an expert yeast-maker, his salary advancing in leaps and bounds from starvation wages to one hundred dollars a day. During his busiest years as a brewer, he was connected with distilleries in Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Arkansas and California, and was at one time half-owner of a distillery near Jackson, Tennessee. His most valued services were in connection with the firm of Dobbins & Spears, at Wesley; Clark & Company, Zell & Francis, Spears & Company, and the Thomas O'Neil Company, at Peoria; Nusbaum & Company and the Dow distillery in San Francisco;

Mattingby Brothers and Schultz & Company of Louisville, Kentucky; the Hopkins & Company distillery in Robertson County, Tennessee, and the Ketchum distillery near Nashville, Tennessee. It is doubtful if any man in the State has a more accurate knowledge of the brewing business than has Mr. White, or has made a more practical demonstration of his advanced theories. In spite of his successes he determined, in 1871, to withdraw from his former occupation, and the grocery business has since been his largest field of activity, and his most remunerative source of income. Mining also—which at one time loomed upon the horizon with astonishing possibilities, and was tested from all sides during his residence in California—has been abandoned to the limbo of things found wanting, and substituted by the slower and less erratic dealing in necessary commodities.

July 25, 1869, Mr. White was united in marriage with Mary A. Butterfield, of Louisville, Kentucky, and of this union there are two children: Lucy B., who is now the wife of Richard Rees, of Oak Park, Illinois, and Jeanne, who is living at the home. Fraternally, Mr. White is very prominent in Illinois, and has been identified with the Masonic Order since his twenty-first year. He has taken all of the degrees except the thirty-third, and is a member of Temple Lodge, No. 46; the Commandery, No. 3; the Chapter, No. 7; the Peoria Council, and the Peoria Consistory. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias, and of Peoria Lodge, No. 250, Knights of Khorassan; the Royal Arcanum; the Royal League; the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Politically Mr. White entertains most liberal views, and believes that the men best qualified for public trust should be the incumbents of office, regardless of the color of their political faith. Mr. White is one of the representative men of the Middle West, and it would seem, from the volume of his business and the esteem in which he is held, that to an unusual degree he has realized his expectations of a successful life.

RICHARD H. WHITING.

Richard H. Whiting was born in West Hartford, Connecticut, January 7, 1826. His early years were spent with his parents, Allen and Amanda Whiting, upon a farm, during which time he had the advantage of the educational opportunities that were afforded at that period—the common school and academy at West Hartford.

Thereafter different enterprises engaged him, until in 1850 he located at Victoria, Illinois, where he engaged in mercantile business until 1860, when he removed to Galesburg, where, in the same year, he built and owned the Gas Works, and, a year later, built the Gas Works at Aurora, Illinois.

Mr. Whiting was married, July 28, 1851, to Miss Elizabeth H. Kirkbride, of Woodsfield, Ohio, a lady of marked qualities who survives him, and whose father was one of the pioneers of the "Buckeye" State. David Kirkbride was an aggressive and public-spirited man, and, at Woodsfield, was Postmaster, and for years was Probate Judge of Monroe County.

By this union there resulted eight children, only four of whom are now living—three having died in infancy, and the oldest daughter, Ida, who married Howard Knowles, having died a few years after her marriage. Ellen, the second daughter, married John R. Farnham, of New York City. Charles R. and Thomas W. Whiting live in Kansas, where they are engaged in farming and stockraising, and Frank K., who resides upon the old homestead.

Mr. Whiting, by close application and persevering industry, became prosperous and acquired an honorable reputation as a business man. He invested his money always to good advantage in different enterprises, a great portion of it in farms in Knox County, Illinois, and in Kansas, and to some extent in stock-raising.

During President Lincoln's administration he was appointed Paymaster in the army, with the title of Major; he was next appointed United States Assessor, the office then being located at Galesburg, which office he held until it was merged into the office of Collector of Internal Revenue in 1871, when President Grant, of whom he was a personal friend, appointed him Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fifth Collection District of Illinois, with headquarters at Peoria, where he lived during the remainder of his life. He resigned the office of Collector of Revenue to take his seat in the National House of Representatives, to which office he was elected in 1874. One term satisfied his ambition as an office-seeker, for, although he always was a Republican and tended to conservatism, yet, when convinced that wrong would be perpetrated or extended by conservatism, he was a radical. He was independent in thought, of sound judgment, and abhorred party strifes and the distasteful jealousies of political wars.

He was for many years prominently identified with the Masonic fraternity. There was no public enterprise of utility but with which he identified himself; he was slow to form attachments, but true as steel when formed; his devotion as a citizen was to the common good; as a man, his relations to his fellow-men were pleasant, co-operative and cordial; as a neighbor, the soul of accommodation; as a father and husband, devoted and indulgent. His hospitality and generosity were not often seen in the highways; but his helping hand was opened to the worthy and the needy, unknown and unseen by the public.

He was clear-headed, penetrative and emphatically practical in all his transactions. A sound and reliable judgment directed his deliberations; he had the ability to analyze things and look forward and lay his hand upon the "hem of results." His investments were made with great care, and gratifying and substantial were the realizations; his life was a sample of solid virtues; it was a scene of activity, unostentatious, and rounded, in its decline, with comforts and crowned with worldly competence. Major Whiting died, May 24, 1888.

OTHO BOYD WILL.

Whether regarded as a general practitioner, as a specialist in the line of gynecology, or as a medical writer, Dr. Otho Boyd Will holds a prominent place among the members of his profession in Illinois. Dr. Will was born at Mercersburg, Franklin County, Pennsylvania, June 27, 1846, the son of William S. and Elizabeth (Baxter) Will, both of whom were natives of the same State, his father having been born at Mercersburg and his mother at Lancaster. His paternal grandparents, David and Elizabeth Will, were born at Welsh Run, Franklin County, Pennsylvania, while his maternal grandfather (William Baxter) was a native of Ireland, the wife of the latter having been born at Lancaster, in the Keystone State. Mr. Baxter, after coming to this country, became an apprentice in Benjamin Franklin's printing office in Philadelphia, and later founded the Lancaster (Pennsylvania) Bee, and was also connected for a number of years with the Mercersburg Journal, being one of the pioneer journalists of the country.

In 1856 Dr. Will's parents removed to Illinois, locating at Canton, Fulton County, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Here the Doctor attended the primary and high schools, still later pursuing a course in scientific studies under Prof. John Wolf and other private tutors. In 1866 he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. William M. Swisher, of Canton, and, in the following year, matriculated at Rush Medical College, Chicago, from which he received the degree of M. D. in 1869, subsequently taking a post-graduate course in gynecology and nervous diseases in New York. During the year last named he located at the village of Kickapoo, in Peoria County, and later assisted to build up the town of Dunlap, in Radnor Township, on the line of the then newly constructed Rock Island & Peoria Railroad. In 1881, after taking a course in special studies in the East, he came to Peoria, and, in conjunction with the late Dr. J. L. Hamilton and Dr. T. M. McIlvaine, assisted in organizing the Cottage Hospital. In 1894 he was elected President of the Illinois State Medical Society, of which he has been an active member for many years; has also been President and Secretary of the Military Tract Medical Association, is a member of the American Medical Association, the Chicago Gynecological Society, the North Central Illinois Medical Society and of the Peoria City Medical Society, and has served as President of the Rush College Alumni Association, besides being identified with several non-professional societies, including the Peoria Scientific Association, of which he has served as President. Biology is a department of general science in which he takes a deep interest and to which he devotes much of his leisure time. Since locating in Peoria, Dr. Will has spent considerable time abroad studying the Old World masters, and investigating the great hospitals of Europe, in order to perfect himself in the department of medicine which he has espoused as a specialty. For six years past he has been editor of the "Peoria Medical Journal," and is also a member of the medical staff of the Cottage Hospital. He has been a member of the Creve Coeur Club since its organization, and, for two years, one of its Directors. In politics he is an Independent Republican.

On April 14, 1870, Dr. Will was married to Miss Elizabeth Grant, of Brimfield, Peoria County, and they have had four children—all deceased: Maud Elva, Otho Grant and Blanch Irene—the fourth dying in infancy.

ERASTUS SWIFT WILLCOX.

That man may be considered fortunate who succeeds in finding a place in the business or educational world, for which he is in all respects thoroughly adapted.

The above reflection applies with full force to Erastus Swift Willcox, the Librarian of the Peoria Public Library. Mr. Willcox was born at Port Henry, Essex County, New York, February 16, 1830, to Henry Willcox and Mary Keziah (Meacham) Willcox. They both belonged to that sturdy, substantial, sensible class common to New England and New York State. The father was a farmer. He came West as one of the first colonists who settled on the prairie where the city of Galesburg, in Knox County, now stands. His object in settling there was to give his children the benefit of a liberal education in the college which, under the plan of Dr. George W. Gale, was about to be established in Galesburg, now and for a long time known as Knox College.

James Willcox, grandfather of Erastus S., was born in Killingworth, Connecticut. His ancestors came from Plymouth, England, about 1640. In 1773 the grandfather, being about the age of eighteen, removed to Bridgeport, Vermont, where he owned a large farm on the shore of Lake Champlain, residing there until the time of his death in 1840. He was one of the two guides to help Ethan Allen and his Green Mountain boys across the lake at the time of the capture of Fort Ticonderoga in 1775. His remembrance of the language of Ethan Allen, at the time of his demand for the surrender of the fort, was: "In the name of God's Mighty," etc., instead of the language usually attributed to him.

The great-grandfather, on the mother's side, was Capt. William Meacham, Commander of a Company in Colonel Woodbridge's Regiment. He was killed at the battle of Bunker Hill, June 17, 1775, and his name is inscribed on the bronze tablets at Winthrop Square, just below that of General Warren.

Thus it will be seen that the subject of this sketch is descended from patriotic, fighting stock, and it accounts, in a measure, for that persistent tenacity which has characterized his entire career.

Mr. Willcox graduated in the classical department of Knox College in the class of 1851. As before stated, his father was a farmer, and Mr. Willcox was reared upon the farm. His taste, however, was not for that sort of a life, but rather for books. After graduation he taught a select school in Farmington, Illinois, for one year; then became clerk in a bank in Peoria, where he remained for a year, after which he studied and traveled in Germany, France, Italy, and England, for two years, with his personal friend, Professor Churchill, of Knox College. He was then Professor of Modern Languages for six years, until the War of the Rebellion compelled retrenchment in the college finances. He then returned to Peoria, studied law, and subsequently engaged in the business of manufacturing and coal mining, which he continued until 1891, when he assumed the duties of Librarian of the Peoria Public Library. Probably no man in Peoria was so actively and earnestly engaged in the establishment of the Public Library as Mr. Willcox. Soon after his return and settlement in Peoria he interested himself in the Library as it then existed, and was one of the prime movers in the establishment of the Mercantile Library. With great persistence and sound judgment he aided in the development of the latter, and subsequently, in connection with others, brought about the establishment of the Peoria Public Library, to which was transferred all of the personal property of the Mercantile Library Association. The beautiful building, now known as the Public Library building, was largely the result of the earnest efforts of Mr. Willcox, and it will stand as a monument for years to come of his zeal and interest in the education of the people. He has occupied the position of Inspector of the Peoria Public Schools, and was President of the Board for two years. He has always been especially interested in the subject of education, not only in the public schools, but through the influence of the Public Library, and has been noted during his whole career in Peoria for his devotion to this cause. His experience as a Director of the Mercantile Library from 1864 demonstrated that a subscription library—the only kind of public library known in those days—was a failure, so far as reaching the masses of the people was concerned; and, for the very good reason that the women and children who hungered for books did not hold the family purse-strings, while the men who held the purse-strings did not care particularly for books.

Mr. Willcox has always earnestly favored the societies and organizations that had for their purpose the development of all that was best in the city, and has given of his time and means generously in that direction. He is the author of the present State Library Law, which was adopted March 7, 1872—the first really comprehensive Free Public Library Law in the United States, and the model of the Library Laws which other States have enacted since. The proof that such a law was needed is seen in the fact that, whereas the old Subscription Library had a membership never exceeding 300, the Free Public Library now, April 1, 1902, has a membership of 8,000.

He grew up under the influence of the Presbyterians and Congregationalists, but, in his maturer years, has not been able to subscribe to all the peculiar tenets of either of those churches, but has always believed in all that was best in all church work.

In politics he is and has always been a Republican, but believes in that manly independence which leads a man to vote for the best man for public office, especially in local affairs, whether belonging to his own party or another.

In July, 1857, Mr. Willcox was married to Mary T. Hotchkiss, of Peoria, the only daughter of J. P. Hotchkiss, and granddaughter of General Walter Booth, of Meriden, Connecticut. She died January 10, 1863, leaving two children: George M. and Mary H. (now Mrs. Sisson), of Flagstaff, Arizona. Mr. Willcox's second wife, whom he married June 22, 1869, was Mary L. Hatch, of Warwick, Massachusetts. Two children have been born to them: William Arthur and Harold Hatch.

As the beginning of this short sketch indicates, Mr. Willcox is the right man in the right place. His thorough education, his foreign travel, his interest in and acquaintance with books, render him an invaluable man in the position he now occupies. It would be exceedingly difficult to fill his place with any one so well fitted to discharge the duties of the position. He has for years kept himself well abreast of the times, and well informed in reference to books and writers. His sound judgment touching the value of books peculiarly fits him for the position. He has made a special study of Public Libraries, and is well versed in all modern methods relating to their operation. All the friends of the Public Library earnestly hope for many future years of his efficient, acceptable service, and would seriously regret his retirement. He has always in all his dealings and life been highly regarded for his high purpose, his advocacy of all that is best in personal, municipal and National life. The influence of such men is not always fully appreciated during their life, but it leaves its mark for good upon the community, becoming more apparent and potential as time goes on.

EDGAR LAMAR WILLIAMS.

Rev. Edgar LaMar Williams, Presbyterian minister and evangelist of Peoria, was born in Bucyrus, Ohio, in 1848. His paternal grandparents were Thomas O. and Susannah (Stier) Williams. His father, Owen Williams, was born at Beverly, West Virginia, in 1809, and was a prominent and successful merchant and banker. His mother was Catharine A. (Moffett) Williams, born at Hagerstown, Maryland. The maternal great-grandparents were John and Elizabeth (Fergus) Moffett, born in Scotland. General Fergus, a brother of Elizabeth, was with General Washington in the Revolutionary War, and died at Dayton, Ohio, at the age of one hundred and nine years. The grandparents, on the maternal side, were William Moffett, who was born in Ireland in 1783, and died at Hagerstown, Maryland, in 1832; and Elizabeth (Shuman) Moffett, of German descent born in 1793, and died at Brownsville, Pennsylvania, in 1839.

Isaac Walker

Mr. Williams' parents moved to Indianapolis, Indiana, when he was four years old. Scarcely had he reached the age of fourteen when his father met with business reverses, which forced the boy into a personal experience of earning his own living. Unflinchingly he met these new conditions, and, with a courage born of older hearts, he faced the future, shadowy with uncertainties and thick with difficulties, determined that, if integrity, honesty and conscientious service counted for aught in the conflict, he would win.

He was blessed with a Christian home, where he was taught, both by precept and example, the truths of the gospel; yet he had reached the age of seventeen before he yielded his heart and life in loving, loyal service to the Master. Having taken this step, he at once united with the Third Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis, then under the pastorate of the Rev. George C. Heckman, D. D. This decision did more than simply add another name to the membership of the church; it not only changed the entire trend and purpose of his life, but solved the greater question of his future. Often had he read and heard the words, "The harvest truly is great but the laborers are few;" yet the true significance of their meaning was not understood until he saw the golden harvest of immortal souls ripe for the gathering, with so few willing hands to thrust in the gospel sickle for the gathering. Under the divine influence and the greater needs presented, he determined to be one of the glad messengers of hope and joy, and, with this object in view, he determined on a thorough collegiate and theological course of study. With only a small sum saved from his meager earnings, and with no other financial assistance, he entered Hanover College, Indiana. He afterwards went to Butler University, now the University of Indianapolis, where he completed his literary course. He then entered McCormick Theological Seminary at Chicago, where he remained two years, and, in 1876, graduated from the Union Theological Seminary, New York City, in a class numbering forty-six members. He was ordained to the gospel ministry by the Indianapolis Presbytery in June of the same year, and at once assumed the double pastorate of the Eighth and Twelfth Presbyterian Churches of Indianapolis. His successful ministry in these fields extended his reputation beyond the borders of Indiana, and he was soon called to become the pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Albia, Iowa. He brought to this work the same quality of service and Christian zeal that had marked his previous labors, and it was not long before the churches of Geneseo and Rochelle, Illinois, recognizing his ability and worth, called him successively to these larger and more important fields.

Mr. Williams possessed, to an eminent degree, the spirit and qualifications of a successful evangelist. He responded to the many pressing invitations to assist the pastors in other parts of the State, which attracted the attention of the Synodical Home Mission Committee of Illinois, and, at their urgent request, he consented to assume the more arduous and varied work of State Evangelist. After two years of very marked success in this department of labor, the committee reluctantly accented his resignation, and, at the unanimous invitation of the congregation of Grace Presbyterian Church of Peoria, he became their pastor. About four years of unquestioned success followed, resulting in the marked advancement of the church and congregation along the lines of spiritual and material affairs. The music of harmony succeeded the discord of strife. Breaches in Zion's walls, occasioned by contention and indifference, were repaired and strengthened, the sweet gospel of Christian love and faithful service was exemplified in a reunited and prosperous church, and it was only because of his earnest convictions of the greater needs and wider door that he was induced to take up the work of an evangelist. In many of our Western and Middle States, where for more than five years he has conducted meetings, both pulpit and press have testified, in unmeasured terms of praise, of his remarkable success.

As a pastor, Mr. Williams' affable address, genial manner and sympathetic nature have always won the respect and love of his people, and given him a glad welcome to the hearts and homes of those to whom he bore the gospel message of comfort and grace. As a preacher, he is strong, clear, original and attractive, always adding to the earnest message the graces of oratory and the beauty of illustration. He is ever loyal to the truth, and his hearers are never led by tricks of sophistry into paths of doubt or speculation. He is a student and thinker, never following the beaten paths of others, but by blazing new trails into unexplored regions, and pushing into untrodden fields of scholastic research, literary knowledge and biblical truths, he brought to the people in his sermons and addresses the results of thorough study and original thought. He has preached an entire gospel; he does not hesitate to proclaim "the terrors of the law that he might persuade some," but magnifies the glories of the cross with its full and free salvation, so that the most abandoned need not despair. Through the fierce diapason of God's hatred of sin could be heard in his earnest message the sweeter harmony of divine love for the sinner.

During his busy life as pastor and evangelist, Mr. Williams has found time to publish many of his sermons in pamphlet form, which have met with wide circulation, and his facile pen has furnished, both to the secular and religious press, many articles of interest and profit. He has in preparation for publication in the near future, a large volume of his carefully revised sermons and addresses, which will be elaborately illustrated. In his leisure moments, following the trend of a naturally inventive mind, he invented and has perfected the noted Archarena parlor game-board for home and social amusement, combining more than fifty games on one board. Although it has been on the market for a comparatively short time, the sales have already reached the phenomenal number of one hundred and seventy-five thousand boards, and the business is still in its infancy.

Mr. Williams has a large and generous heart, and the remarkable success of his business enterprise will enable him to realize, in the near future, some of his most cherished desires, chief of which is to perfect and carry out larger plans and broader Christian work. He is rapidly arranging his business affairs, placing them under competent management, so that his time and talent may be used unhindered in the more glorious work of preaching the gospel.

He has traveled extensively both in this country and in Europe, and being a keen and intelligent observer of customs, places and people, the experience and knowledge thus gained has added much to the interest and charm of his address in pulpit and social circle alike.

In his home life Mr. Williams especially exemplifies the character and qualities of a Christian gentleman, an affectionate and devoted husband, a wise and loving father, and sways the scepter of love over his charming household. He was married September 25, 1878, to Miss Matilda J. Woerner, daughter of Philip Woerner, of Indianapolis. Six children have been born to them, four of whom are now living: Frieda Kate, born March 24, 1881; Susie Bell, born May 19, 1883; Clayton Edgar, born May 22, 1894; and Philip LaMar, born March 24, 1898. To his devoted and faithful wife, Mr. Williams owes much of his success in the Christian ministry. In perfect accord and hearty sympathy with all his work, he gratefully yields to her the well-earned meed of praise for the helpfulness of her wise counsel and her unfaltering support. Cheerfully she has shared his every burden, sweetened every sorrow and brightened every joy.

MARION WILLIAMSON.

Marion Williamson was born in Adams County, Ohio, in November, 1825. He received an education in the common schools of that State only. He was dependent upon his own personal exertions for a larger education and his knowledge of the law. He studied law in the office of William Burke, in Adams County, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar in 1852. Immediately after such admission he went to Ottumwa, Wapello County, Iowa, where he remained for only one year, and then removed to Oquawka, Illinois, where he engaged in the practice of his profession for three years. In 1856 he removed to the city of Peoria, and, for three years, was associated with Judge Wead, who was, at that time, one of the leading lawyers in the State of Illinois. After dissolving partnership with Judge Wead, he conducted an office of his own. In 1865 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court, the circuit at that time being composed of Peoria and Stark Counties.

Judge Williamson was always an earnest student and an indefatigable worker. Unlike most lawyers, in investigating the law upon any subject as held by the courts in this State, he would not use a Digest, but would stand at his case and go through the volumes of reports, one by one. Whenever his eye caught a case involving principles new to him, he made a minute of it and entered it in his brief book. In that way he became familiar with the decisions of the courts and familiar with the principles of law generally. His knowledge of law was not confined to any particular branch. From the beginning of his career, when employed in any case, no matter how insignificant and unimportant, he thoroughly investigated the law upon that subject, both for and against his side of the controversy, and made a complete brief, which he entered at length in a book kept by him for that purpose. This method he uniformly followed and hence became one of the most thoroughly posted lawyers for his age, in the State of Illinois. His knowledge of law in all branches was remarkable.

After he retired from the bench, he entered the law firm of McCoy & Stevens, which was composed of Alexander McCoy, Lorin G. Pratt and John S. Stevens, and the firm name became Williamson, McCoy & Co. The business of the firm grew very rapidly and was in an exceedingly prosperous condition when Judge Williamson was suddenly taken ill with hemorrhage of the lungs, which resulted in his death, April 21, 1868, at the age of 43.

The writer of this article was associated with Judge Williamson in the practice of the law, and also practiced before him while upon the bench. Judge Williamson was a man of strong prejudices, but he had as profound a respect for the law and equity as any man with whom the writer has ever been acquainted. Nothing of a personal character, no influence of any kind, could move Judge Williamson to render any decision not strictly in accordance with the law, as he understood it. He was a man of the highest personal integrity, truthful, open and honorable. No man ever despised the tricks of the profession more thoroughly than did Judge Williamson, and no man was more open in his expression of opinion concerning them or more determined in exposing and punishing them. His reverence for the law was of the loftiest character. He was, in the opinion of the writer of this article, the best posted man in all branches of the law to be found in the central portion of Illinois at the time of his death. He knew absolutely nothing of the commercial spirit which has since crept in and apparently dominates the profession at the present time. It was impossible for him to prostitute his legal attainments to the purpose of mere money-getting. When he retired from the bench, the Peoria bar, as a slight testimonial of their appreciation of his character as a Judge, presented him with a magnificent gold watch and chain, a present he would not have accepted had he continued upon the bench. Judge Williamson was not an orator in any sense of the word. He was a very plain, incisive advocate, without any of the flowers or rhetoric or the graces of oratory. His thorough comprehension of the case and plain statement carried conviction where the best efforts of oratory would fail. While not the best educated man at the bar, he prepared a better set of instructions than any of his associates. His instructions were always the plainest, most concise, simple and direct statements of the law governing the case.

In 1860 he married Louise Maxwell, the only daughter of David Maxwell, and left at his death, his widow and two children: Sally M., intermarried with J. F. Vincent, and Marshall H., now in the real-estate business in the city of Chicago.

GEORGE A. WILSON.

Prominent among the citizens of Peoria whom it is a pleasure to hold in affectionate remembrance was George A. Wilson. Although not born within the precincts of Peoria County, yet he must be regarded as a native Peorian. His father, Jacob Wilson, and his mother, Emily (Donahoe) Wilson, were both among the earliest settlers in this vicinity, they having become residents of what is now Fond du Lac Township in Tazewell County as early as 1823 or 1824. When the new county of Peoria was organized Jacob Wilson was appointed by Governor Coles one of the first Justices of the Peace, and, on March 22, 1825, he performed the first marriage ceremony in the new county by uniting in the bonds of matrimony William Blanchard and Betsey Donahoe, sister of his future wife. In December of the same year Jacob Wilson and Emily Donahoe became husband and wife, and took up their residence on a farm at the foot of the bluff directly opposite the present village of Averyville, and continued to make it their home for a period of almost forty-four years. Mr. Wilson and Major Donahoe, his wife's father, were among the most prominent of the settlers at Ten Mile Creek, the former having, as soon as the public lands had come into market, secured a half-section, and both of them having been assessed for taxation among the highest in the settlement.

When Tazewell County was separated from Peoria, the settlers at Ten Mile Creek no longer formed a part of the population of Peoria County, but, because of their proximity to the village of Peoria, they continued to maintain a very close intimacy with its people. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were both devoted Methodists and the adherents of that denomination living in Peoria were accustomed frequently to cross the river to attend meetings at their house. Mr. Wilson's house was the rendezvous of all the Methodist ministers in the vicinity, several of whom would frequently meet there. He also built the first church in that settlement, which was located at what is now the intersection of the Pekin and Spring Bay Road with that leading to Metamora. He also furnished and hauled to Peoria the rafters for the first Methodist Church erected in Peoria.

Mr. Wilson, after a long and useful life spent on the farm, died September 15, 1869, his wife surviving him until November 25, 1888. They had a large family of children of whom Joseph F. and George A. enlisted in the army at the outbreak of the rebellion, while a third, Robert T., became a sutler and was killed in an attack by guerillas near Helena on the Mississippi River. In the battle of Fort Donelson Joseph received a desperate gun-shot wound, which caused the loss of nearly the whole of his lower jaw-bone, and it was only through the heroic efforts of his brother George he was rescued from his perilous position and brought to his home, where, through skillful treatment, his life was saved. Joseph F. Wilson was a lawyer by profession but, by reason of this disaster, he was totally disabled from continuing his professional life, but was given important positions in the government service at Washington, filling them with credit until his death, which occurred January 4, 1898.

George Asahel Wilson was born in the year 1840, on the home farm, and continued to reside with his parents until he was old enough to be sent to college. Having a desire to enter professional life, he entered the senior preparatory department of Eureka College in September, 1856, where he remained for two years. He was in the same class with Rev. B. J. Radford, D. D., now President of the College; Hon. Jonathan H. Rowell, late member of Congress, and Charles P. Taggart, once County Superintendent of Schools of Peoria County. He would have graduated in 1861, but left in June, 1858, at which time he began the study of medicine in the office of Drs. John D. Arnold and Clark D. Rankin, of Peoria. In due time he entered Rush Medical College at Chicago and attended its lectures until about the time of the breaking out of the war, when, within a short period of his expected graduation, fired with patriotic zeal for his country, he abandoned his studies and came home to enter the army. On May 25, 1861, he was mustered in as a private in Company G, of the Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Colonel Leonard F. Ross. The company in which he enlisted was made up largely of volunteers from Woodford and Tazewell Counties, with many of whom he had become acquainted at and near Eureka, among whom its Captain, Otis A. Burgess, and its First Lieutenant, Jonathan H. Rowell, were his intimate friends. He was soon thereafter assigned to duty in the regimental hospital, where he gained much valuable experience. Having served in that capacity over a year, he was appointed First Assistant Surgeon in the Fourteenth Regiment, Illinois Cavalry, then recruiting at Peoria, under the command of the veteran, Colonel Horace Capron, and was mustered in with that regiment, January 7, 1863. He was with the Seventeenth at the spirited battle of Fredericktown, Missouri, on October 21, 1861, in which battle that regiment took the leading part; also at Fort Donelson, where his brother was so desperately wounded, and at the battle of Shiloh, where his regiment did much to save Grant's army from disaster on the first day of that memorable contest. While with the Fourteenth Cavalry he accompanied his regiment in all its weary marches and raids until August 3, 1864, when, in Stoneman's Raid in the vicinity of Macon, Georgia, he was made prisoner and was confined at Macon and at Charleston, South Carolina, until the last day of October, when he was exchanged. He remained in the service until the final victory was in sight, and resigned his office April 7, 1865, the regiment remaining in the service until July 31, of the same year.

After leaving the army Dr. Wilson resumed his studies and graduated at Rush Medical College in 1866. He then entered upon the practice of his profession in Peoria with good prospects of success, but, being somewhat inclined towards political life, he accepted the Democratic nomination, in 1868, for the office of Circuit Clerk of Peoria County. His election to that office was a signal testimonial to his character as a citizen, as well as his patriotic devotion to his country. The Republican party was then in the ascendancy, and while it had carried such veterans as Isaac Taylor, John D. McClure and John C. Yates into the offices of County Treasurer, County Clerk and Judge of the County Court, respectively, Dr. Wilson received sufficient support from that party, especially from his late comrades, to give him a handsome majority. In the discharge of the duties of this office he was faithful and painstaking, and at the end of his first term was again nominated and without difficulty re-elected. Had he desired it, he might have had the nomination for a third term; but the holding of office for more than two terms being then a vital question in politics, upon which the Democratic party had taken the negative side, he declined the use of his name for re-nomination.

Dr. Wilson was a Democrat from principle. While taking the side of the War-Democrats in support of the Government in its efforts to suppress the rebellion, and having for four years rendered his personal services in the army, he never yielded up those principles of Jeffersonian Democracy which he considered essential to good government. He was in favor of maintaining State sovereignty so far as compatible with the preservation of the Union, and against every tendency to centralization of power in the General Government; he was opposed to all class legislation which would tend to build up one class of interests to the detriment of another; he was opposed to the concentration of wealth in the hands of banks and other corporations, and in favor of a currency issued directly by the Government and having a gold and silver basis; in short, he was an earnest advocate of all those measures which had, in former times, distinguished the Democrats from the old line Whigs. He therefore earnestly supported his party and endeavored by every means in his power to promote its success. When Grover Cleveland came to the front as a political factor, and long before he was nominated to the Presidency, Dr. Wilson was his ardent admirer.

Having during his term of office taken advantage of the opportunities it afforded for engaging in the study of the law, he was, in the year 1876, admitted to the bar, and after his retirement from office entered upon the practice of that profession. By diligent work and faithful devotion to the interests of his clients he had attained to a good measure of success, when, in 1885, the Democratic party having, at the election of 1884, been successful in the election of Mr. Cleveland as President, Dr. Wilson received an appointment at his hands to the responsible office of Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fifth Collection District of Illinois. This position he filled with signal ability for the term of four years, at the expiration of which time, the Republicans having again been successful, he was superseded by Julius S. Starr.

His devotion to his party was possibly too earnest for his own good, for on two occasions he was induced to accept, at great odds, a nomination for Congress, once against Thomas A. Boyd and once against Philip Sidney Post; and notwithstanding the great popularity of these two experienced men, he succeeded in materially reducing their expected majorities.

After retiring from the office of Collector of Internal Revenue, Dr. Wilson resumed the practice of the law and entered into co-partnership first with Dan F. Raum, son of Commissioner Green B. Raum, and, later, with Hon. Sabin D. Puterbaugh, formerly Circuit Judge of this Circuit. Upon the election of Grover Cleveland for the second term and the appointment of James W. Hunter to the office of Collector of Internal Revenue, he was made Deputy Collector, in which capacity he served so long as the state of his health would permit. This was his last public service. For several years prior to his death his health gradually failed under the insidious ravages of a spinal complaint, having its inception in exposure and an injury received during the war, which terminated fatally on the 6th day of April, 1900. Two days later his funeral was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends and he was borne to the tomb by a deputation from Bryner Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, of which he had long been an active member. His character is well summed up in the following lines written at the time of his death: "Probably no man ever lived who more fully exhibited the true spirit of democracy in his daily life and conversation. At all times and in all places he was the same frank, courageous, open-handed gentleman. He recognized neither caste nor creed, age or condition. He saw only the man created free and equal with himself, and entitled to the same consideration." The same kind consideration for his fellow-men which characterized his every day life led him to discard the rigid doctrines held by the so-called orthodox churches, and to unite with the Universalists. His life, public and private, political and domestic, was pure in an eminent degree, and, although sometimes seemingly engulfed in the maelstrom of party politics, he invariably came out triumphant without a smirch upon his character.

On February 21, 1876, Dr. Wilson was united in marriage with Helen Marr Hoskinson, daughter of John L. Hoskinson, an influential citizen of Macomb, Illinois. This union was a happy one, and it was the Doctor's chief delight to surround his home with everything within his means that would promote its happiness. For this he was well rewarded in the comforts bestowed upon him during the weary months of his last illness.

Dr. Wilson was one of the charter members of Bryner Post, of the Grand Army of the Republic, and its Commander in 1882, and, during life, took an active interest in its prosperity. Since his death his memory has been most fittingly perpetuated by naming for him "The George A. Wilson Circle" of the "Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic."

JOHN WILSON.

John Wilson was born in Poughkeepsie, New York, June 7, 1826. His parents were Henry and Martha (Wood) Wilson, who came to America from Strawberry Bank, Westmoreland County, England, about the year 1824. John was third youngest of nine children, four boys and five girls.

Shortly after his arrival in America, the father began to search for a place to locate. He visited various sections of the country and, finally, the beautiful prairies and fertile valleys of Illinois, then very sparsely populated, seemed to offer the greatest attraction, and he concluded to move his family thither. Accordingly, early in the year 1835, while the snow was yet upon the ground, father and mother, with their four youngest children, including our subject, drove in a one-horse sleigh West from Bainbridge, New York, to Olean on the Alleghany River in the western part of that State. Here a raft was constructed upon which the party floated down the Alleghany and Ohio Rivers to Louisville, Kentucky. The raft was abandoned, at this point, and the journey continued by steamer; thus the party arrived at Peoria in June, 1835.

For several months thereafter, the family lived at the corner of Main and Washington Streets, Peoria, on the present site of the First National Bank; but when, in the autumn of 1835, their residence was destroyed by fire, they moved to the neighborhood of Monroe's Mill on the Kickapoo, and in the spring of 1836, to a farm in Limestone Township. Here the son remained until sixteen years of age, working upon the farm, and, during two winters, when his services were not otherwise needed, he attended the neighborhood school, where the foundation of his education was established.

At the age of sixteen years, he determined to go out into the world and earn his own livelihood. He came to what is now known as South Peoria and engaged himself for two years as an apprentice at the cooper's trade, receiving for his two years' services the sum of seventy-five dollars. At the end of this term, he started for New Orleans, but being without funds, he did cooper's repair work on boats for his passage. After a short time, having decided to return to Peoria, he worked at his trade at various points en route, finally reaching Peoria after an absence of about three years. Here he worked at his trade until the spring of 1850, when he joined a party of "argonauts" and, with an ox-team, crossed the plains to California, and became a gold-miner.

This occupation he followed about Hangtown, on the South Fork of the American River, California, with some success, until 1852, when, growing weary of life in a lonely cabin in the wilderness, he concluded to return to his Peoria home. Having reached Panama by steamer from San Francisco, he walked across the Isthmus and took a steamer on the eastern shore for New Orleans, and thence by boat to Peoria. He then engaged in the retail grocery trade, but still dissatisfied, sold out his grocery business and, in the spring of 1853, organized a company and again started for the gold-fields of California. While in Iowa en route, he invested all the funds at his command in cattle, which were driven to California and sold there at a very considerable profit. He again became a miner, but, in 1854, again returned to Peoria via Nicaragua. Again he entered the retail grocery business, but retired shortly and, after trying various occupations, about the year 1860, he decided to become a dealer in cattle and other live stock. This business he has gradually enlarged and extended until it involves the handling, annually, upon the farms in Illinois, and the ranches owned by him in the Western States and Territories, and at the distilleries in and about Peoria, of a vast number of cattle prepared for human food.

Mr. Wilson has ever been a representative citizen of Peoria, and an earnest worker for the advancement of the city, always interested in its welfare and proud of its standing in every way. He was one of the original promoters and a prominent stock-holder of the Central City (Peoria's first) Street Railway; also, the Commercial National Bank, of which institution he is now a Director; the Peoria Savings Loan and Trust Company (now the Illinois National Bank), of which institution he is also a Director; the German-American National Bank of Pekin, of which he is a Director; the Wilson Grocery Company (Wholesale Grocers), Peoria, of which he is now the President; the Peoria Packing Company, Peoria, of which he is now President; the Illinois Sugar Refining Company, and the American Distilling Company of Pekin, of which institutions he is also a Director, besides numerous other industrial enterprises of lesser importance.

On June 5, 1855, John Wilson was married to Emily J., daughter of Samuel and Clementine Woodruff, who came to Peoria the same year as did our subject (1835), from the State of Ohio, and settled in what is now known as South Peoria. Seven children were born to them, five of whom survive, as follows: Arthur W., of Peoria; Everett W. and Charles L., of Pekin, and John A. and Frederick L. of Peoria.

In politics, Mr. Wilson was an old line Whig, casting his first vote for Zachary Taylor. Since Lincoln's time, he has been a staunch Republican, but has never aspired to any office or belonged to any secret societies.

JOHN C. WOELFLE.

Germany has contributed to this country a class of citizens of which any country might be proud. Intelligent, industrious and honorable, they have found this new world opening up to them avenues of industry and employment not anticipated when they left their fatherland. They become citizens of the Republic, and at once identify themselves with all that pertains to the prosperity and best interest of the localities where they reside. They are not foreigners, but Americans in every true sense of the word, in the various homes of their adoption.

John C. Woelfle, born in Baden, Germany, January 16, 1843, is one of the class above referred to. When fourteen years of age, he entered upon an apprenticeship in the jewelry business. After passing examination of the trade, at Gewerbeschule, he left his fatherland, in the fall of 1863, and came directly to the city of Peoria, where he has resided ever since, except for a short time. He immediately commenced work at his trade, and, by his industry and economy, having saved something from the salary he received, in the fall of 1871, purchased the jewelry business carried on for some years previous by Mr. M. E. Erler. Commencing with the capital saved from his earnings while working for others, he entered upon his business career in the location still occupied by him, at 122 South Adams Street, and by his courteous, gentlemanly and obliging demeanor, and his uprightness and strict integrity, has succeeded in securing a large trade, ranking as one of the leading jewelers in the city of Peoria.

On November 1, 1888, he married Miss Hesler, daughter of Mr. August Hesler, who had established himself in a successful business in the city of Peoria. One child—a daughter—has been born to them.

Mr. Woelfle received his education and his early training in Germany, which was such as to make him an accurate, pains-taking, careful business man. He has never sought for notoriety, nor has he ever attempted to do business beyond his means. In his business, where there is such a large opportunity for dishonesty and fraud, he has commanded the public confidence, and his word is always relied upon.

Mr. Woelfle has never taken an active part in politics, but has interested himself in whatever he believed to be for the best interest of the city of Peoria. He has always been on the side of good government, and, in the administration of public affairs, has done his part to secure economy, honesty and fidelity. He has no sympathy with trickery, fraud or deceit, either in politics, religion or business. He has the confidence of the community.

WILLIAM FREMONT WOLFNER.

Among the younger business men of Peoria, there is none who has achieved a larger or more notable degree of success than he whose name heads this sketch. Mr. Wolfner was born in Chicago, March 10, 1862—the son of Isaac and Josephine (Saxe) Wolfner, who were natives of Bohemia, Austria, which was also the birthplace of his four grandparents, Carl and Bertha Wolfner, and Joseph H. and Francesca Saxe. After receiving his education in the public schools of Chicago and St. Louis, at the age of nineteen (1881) he came to Peoria as the Assistant Secretary of the Great Western Distilling Company and the local representative of the cattle interests of Nelson Morris, the well-known Chicago packer. In 1887 he became manager of the Great Western Distillery, which position he continued to fill until July, 1897, when he purchased an interest in the Mound City Distilling Company of St. Louis. A year later (July, 1898) he became associated in the same capacity with the Standard Distilling and Distributing Company of Peoria, which he still retains, having charge of the manufacturing branch of the Company's business. He is also Vice-President of the National Cooperage and Woodenware Company, besides having other large financial interests connected with the city.

Mr. Wolfner is prominent in charities work, having, within the last few months, been re-elected President of the Hebrew Relief Association of Peoria—a position which he has held continuously for the past ten years, and for which he is eminently well qualified both by his business capacity and his sympathy in the welfare of the poor. Of a modest and retiring temperament, he makes no effort to parade his service before the public, but enjoys the confidence of all acquainted with his career. While adhering to the religious faith of his fathers, he is liberal and tolerant towards all other forms of religious belief. In politics he is a staunch, high-minded and conservative Republican, who seeks rather to promote the welfare of the whole people than mere partisan success.

Mr. Wolfner was married, January 26, 1887, to Sophia Woolner, of Peoria, and they have three children: Ira W., Rose and Josephine.

SAMUEL WOOLNER.

Samuel Woolner, distiller and financier, was born in the City of Szenitz, Hungary, on March 11, 1845, the fifth son of Solomon and Sallie Woolner, who were also natives of Hungary. He acquired his education in the schools of his native city, where, during his minority while still at home, he gained a practical knowledge of the distilling business in which his father had been engaged. In 1863 he came to America. Arriving almost penniless, he went to Cleveland, Ohio, where, through the assistance of one of his countrymen, he engaged in peddling merchandise throughout the State of Ohio, for a few months; but peddling being distasteful to him, he sought employment at his own trade. Having succeeded in reaching Philadelphia, he obtained employment as a distiller, and soon acquired a reputation for himself in this line which made his position very lucrative.

On the 20th day of March, 1869, Mr. Woolner was married to Miss Johanna Levy, with whom he lived unto her death, which occurred in the city of Peoria in 1872, leaving one child, Hannah, now Mrs. William B. Woolner. He remarried on the 19th day of October, 1892, being united to Miss Miriam Sternbach, his present charming and charitable wife, daughter of Louis Sternbach of the city of New York, and they have one son, Seymour Woolner, now about nine years of age.

Soon after his first marriage, Mr. Woolner and his brothers, Adolph and Ignatius, who had preceded him to America, entered into co-partnership and purchased a distillery in Louisville, Kentucky, which they conducted jointly until their removal to the city of Peoria in 1871, where soon after they purchased several distilleries and have remained in that business ever since. As soon as their business permitted they sent for their brothers, Jacob and Morris H., whom they had left in Hungary, and who, also being practical distillers, upon their arrival, were immediately admitted to partnership in the various distilling enterprises in which their predecessors were already engaged—a relation which was continued until 1891. Having adopted the maxim of Abraham Lincoln, "United we stand, divided we fall," the brothers kept united.

The surviving brothers at the present time are Samuel, Jacob and Morris N.—Abraham, Ignatius and Adolph having died in the city of Peoria.

The Woolner Brothers have become one of the most widely known firms in connection with distilling and other branches of business in the city of Peoria. They have also been instrumental in founding and building up the grape sugar business in Peoria, and were large stockholders in the Peoria Grape Sugar Company, an institution which they established. At present Samuel Woolner is engaged with his nephews, the sons of his brothers Ignatius and Adolph Woolner, in various extensive business enterprises. In addition to the distilling business, Mr. Samuel Woolner has also been prominent in connection with banking enterprises, and, at the present time, is a Director and Vice-President of the German-American National Bank, the most largely capitalized institution of its kind in Peoria. He is also a large stockholder in several Chicago banks. In 1894 he built the Atlas Distillery, at that time the largest distillery in the city. In 1890, in connection with his brother Adolph, he erected the Woolner Building, the largest and most complete office-building in the city, which stands as a monument to the enterprise and business foresight of the Woolner Brothers.

Mr. Samuel Woolner is a member, and has filled nearly all the offices, of the Peoria Board of Trade, including the Presidency, and has served the city of Peoria faithfully for eight years as one of the members of the City Council. A few years ago, on account of pressing business, he was compelled to decline the nomination for Mayor of Peoria, tendered him by a Republican convention. He is a member of Schiller Lodge and a thirty-second degree Mason, a member and President of the "Anshai Emeth" Congregation (Hebrew) of Peoria, and has served as President of the order B'nai Brith for this District, and of the Home for Aged and Infirm Israelites at Cleveland, and is now a Trustee of the Jewish Orphan Asylum at Cleveland, Ohio, which maintains five hundred orphan children. He is also Vice-President of the Union American Hebrew Congregations, whose college is located at Cincinnati, Ohio, and he is largely interested, and an active worker in, almost every Jewish and non-sectarian charities organization, being a firm believer in Conservative Reform Judaism. His liberal donations of time and money to the above and kindred causes, have made him known as one of "the Jewish Philanthropists of America."

Nature has endowed Mr. Woolner with an indefatigable will-power and thorough business sagacity, which, coupled with sterling honesty and frugal habits, has not only given him the reputation of being one of the foremost business men of Peoria, but has also won for him a national reputation. His success in life and the enviable position which he now occupies, furnish an exemplification of the opportunities which this country offers "to good worthy men," of which fact no one is more appreciative than Samuel Woolner.

JOSEPH WRIGHT.

Joseph Wright was born in Camden, Camden County, New Jersey, July 1, 1816, where he spent his early life. At sixteen years of age he began to serve his time as a brick mason, and spent four years in learning the trade in Philadelphia, working nine months of each year, for which he received his board and the munificent sum of $25 per year, leaving the other three months without salary and with his board to pay. During that time the working hours were from fourteen to sixteen each day. He especially prepared himself for the finer work of laying fronts of buildings.

After completing his time, he went to New York, where he remained for one year, and from there sailed to New Orleans. On this trip the vessel experienced the roughest of weather, and every man on board was compelled at times to take his turn at the pumps. Food and water became scarce before the end of the voyage, but the vessel finally reached its destination. While in New Orleans Mr. Wright went through a season of epidemic cholera, and subsequently went through a similar experience at Natchez and Vicksburg. He was charmed with the climate in the South, however, and would have located there had it not been for slavery. Leaving New Orleans, he journeyed up the Mississippi River, and then up the Ohio, landing at Cincinnati in 1838, where, two years later, he married Theodosia Eldridge Rork, making that city his home for about nine years.

In the fall of 1847 Mr. Wright came West prospecting for a new location, and selected Peoria as his future home. He then returned to Cincinnati, disposed of all his interests there, and, in the spring of 1848, settled permanently in Peoria. Here he invested in real estate, which seemed, at the time, far removed from the center of the city, with no immediate prospect of any increase in value; but the wisdom of his selection was shown by subsequent events when the property became valuable, and he realized from it a reasonable fortune.

Mr. Wright was always interested in educational matters in the city, a staunch supporter of public schools, and of various charitable institutions that grew up, from time to time, in the city. His charities were numerous but never ostentatious. He never gave to be seen of men, but to be helpful to the needy and unfortunate.

In politics he was a Democrat of a pronounced type; but such was his integrity that he did not allow his politics to prevent him from voting for those whom he considered best fitted for local administrative offices. He was a man temperate in all things, of earnest convictions, who formed his own judgment, and who had the courage of his convictions and his judgment; a man of the strictest integrity, and of the highest personal character.

He died, after a few days illness, on September 11, 1895, in his eightieth year.

PHILIP ZELL.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." This sketch, however, shows that a good name and riches are not necessarily inconsistent or antagonistic.

Philip Zell was a prominent figure in the business enterprises of Peoria for many years, and his name was always a synonym for integrity, uprightness and purity of life. He was born in Schlitz, Prussia, September 8, 1829, where he received the ordinary school education of a German boy. He was always fond of books, and all his life was a student; was especially fond of practical chemistry, and devoted considerable time to its study, becoming reasonably well-informed upon the subject. His father was a miller and the son was taught the trade of a cooper. At the age of twenty-one the latter left Germany, as he had no taste for military service, which the Government was about to compel him to perform. Coming to this country, he went to Baltimore, Maryland, where he entered into business as a cooper. From Baltimore he removed to Madison, Indiana, and there started in the cooperage business for himself. Three years afterwards he removed to Peoria, and in the summer of 1857 commenced the distillation of alcohol, bringing to Peoria the first alcohol still used in the city. He was engaged in this business a number of years, in partnership, at different times, with Charles P. King, Hervey Lightner, P. R. K. Brotherson and Alexander Tyng, and later with John H. Francis and H. & J. Schwabacher. In the year 1888 he severed his connection with the distilling business, owing to the formation of what was called the Distiller's & Cattle Feeder's Trust—an organization which he did not approve. Prior to this time (in 1870) he engaged in the banking business with Walter B. Hotchkiss, under the firm name of Zell, Hotchkiss & Company, which business was continued, under that name, to the date of his death, April 11, 1900.

He was for many years President of the Peoria National Bank and Vice-President of the Savings Bank of Peoria, and was one of the organizers of the Peoria Mercantile Library Association, with which he continued his connection until it became the Peoria Public Library. He always took a deep interest in the prosperity of the Library, and was faithful in the discharge of every duty connected with its development and management. Other business enterprises in which he was interested included the electric lighting plants in the city of Peoria and the building of the National Hotel.

Public-spirited and enterprising as a citizen, Mr. Zell was interested in whatever pertained, in his judgment, to the prosperity of the city. He was conservative in his ideas of business, but progressive, keeping up at all times with the spirit of the age. He was always willing to do his part financially and otherwise, in developing any and everything he considered beneficial to Peoria. He was a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, and a vestryman for a number of years.

Mr. Zell was married, March 28, 1854, to Sophia Green, and to them were born five children—one son and four daughters: Katherine S., George H., Elizabeth V., Annie I. and Edith S.

Mr. Zell, although in every way public-spirited, never desired or sought public office, preferring to serve the people in some other capacity. He was essentially a home man, domestic in all his tastes, fond of his family and of being with them. No man had a better reputation for integrity of character, purity of life and honorable business methods, and consequently none enjoyed in a greater degree the profound respect of all who knew him. He left his mark for good upon the city and its institutions, as well as all those public and private enterprises with which he was associated. The death of such a man is always a public, as well as a personal, loss.

JOHN R. ZIEGLER.

Capt. John R. Ziegler was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, December 10, 1832, the son of Jacob and Maria (Myers) Ziegler. His father was in the flour-milling business, and under his instruction John received his first business education. In 1851 he built and operated, in Zanesville, Ohio, a sash, door and blind factory, but sold out and came to Peoria in 1852, and engaged in carpenter work and building. Prior to this time he had been a railroad engineer on the Pennsylvania Railroad, foreman on the Delaware Canal, and a contractor in construction work for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. In all these different lines of business he acquired a very general knowledge of business affairs, and whatever work he was engaged in he pushed with remarkable energy.

In 1861 he enlisted in Company E, Eleventh Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, was elected Captain, and served with credit and distinction for three years. When his term of service expired, he returned to Peoria and engaged in the undertaking business, which he conducted, with marked success, to the time of his death.

Captain Ziegler was a man of great energy and public spirit—liberal with his time and money for the benefit of the public. He always took a very active interest in the administration of public affairs, although he was never an office-holder or an office-seeker. He always discharged his duties, as a citizen, by doing his full part in the selection of public officials. He was a member of the Masonic Order of the Consistory and Knights of Pythias. At one time he was interested in Mexican coffee lands, and made several trips to Mexico in the interest of his holdings.

He was not a member of any church, but was reared in the Presbyterian faith, which was the faith of his ancestors. In politics he affiliated with the Democratic party, but did not allow his partisan zeal to warp or control his judgment in the selection of municipal and local officers. He believed in absolute honesty on the part of every official in the discharge of his public duties, and sided with those who held them to a strict accountability, regardless of political preferences.

In May, 1858, he was married to Ellen Smith, the daughter of Harrison Smith, Esq., an old, respected, prominent and influential citizen. Three children, born of this union, still survive: Warren C., Florence and J. Frank.

Captain Ziegler was eminently social in his disposition, genial and companionable. He was liberal in all respects, and always contributed fully up to his means, to the charitable institutions of the city. He was attentive to his business, but, owing to his energy and business methods, he found time to discharge his other duties as a good citizen of Peoria. He was always greatly interested in the development and growth of Peoria, and favored everything looking to its improvement, and particularly to the improvement of the streets of the city. He was a public-spirited citizen, and continued such to the day of his death, which occurred December 2, 1896. He was strictly honorable in all his business transactions, and thus he left to his posterity the inheritance of a good name.

He was the owner of slaves by inheritance, but being opposed to slavery, he freed them before the Civil War. At sixteen years of age Mr. Barnes began to learn his trade, had charge of a gang of men before he completed his apprenticeship, and, in the fall of 1862, started out as a builder. He built the Mower Military Hospital at Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, a building that accommodated 3,500 patients; after that built the McClelland Hospital at Nicetown, Pennsylvania, and also one

Later, he filled a position in the office of the Avery Planter Company at Des Moines, Iowa. The next four years were spent in the employment of Beasley Bros. and Steele Bros. in the saddlery hardware business. In 1878 he commenced teaching in an ungraded school in South Peoria, a year later was transferred to the Peoria High School as instructor in mathematics and the sciences, then became Principal of the old Franklin School, and, in 1889, was promoted to the principalship of the High School, which (1902) he still retains. He has been frequently called upon to read papers before educational associations and is recognized as one of the prominent educators in the West. He was married, November 29, 1876, to Miss Mary Ramsay, born June 6, 1856, and they have four children: Robert K. (deceased), Frederick E., Alfred F. and Jules de Labarthe. His father was born at Lorch, Wurtemberg, January 22, 1831, and came to the United States in 1848. He lived some time in Cincinnati, Ohio, and while there joined the Avery Methodist Episcopal Church of that city. He was a local preacher of the Methodist denomination from 1853. He came to Peoria in 1851, when it was a mere village without a single railroad, and the business center was the corner of Bridge and Washington Streets. July 9, 1853, he married Miss Katharine Rapp, a native of Alsace, then residing at Pekin. Of this union four sons and three daughters were born. The sons are Jacob, Fred C. and George H. One of the sons, John, died in infancy. The surviving daughters are Mrs. Lena Morn, of Ottumwa, Iowa, and Mrs. Thomas Fallon of this city. Mrs. Taylor, the third daughter, died in June, 1899. Mr. Behner was a carpenter and builder by occupation, and lived for a number of years on the West Bluff. During the Civil War he served in the Eighty-second Illinois Infantry. He died in 1901, the funeral services being held in the First German Methodist Church, of which he was a member. Jacob Behner worked for a florist between his thirteenth and sixteenth years. He next worked three years in Clark's flour mill, and since that time he has been engaged in farming. For nine years he was a tenant of the Bradley Farm at Hopedale, and for the same length of time he had charge of the Bradley Home Farm in the suburbs of Peoria. In 1897 he put in the first experimental crop of sugar beets in this part of Illinois—thirteen acres in three fields. Since that time he has given his entire time to beet culture. He married Mary Brown in Peoria, December 29, 1881. They have four sons: Walter Lee, Robert John, Edward Llewellyn and Howard Benjamin. Mrs. Behner was born February 10, 1861, daughter of John and Ellen (Mitchell) Brown. Her father was born in Ohio, and came to Illinois when a young man. enteenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with Leonard F. Ross as Colonel and Josiah Moore as Captain of his company. His father was born in County Tipperary in 1836, and the mother in County Clare, Ireland, in 1839. The paternal grandfather, John, came to America with his family about 1839, and settled at Red Hook, in Dutchess County, New York, where he finally died. Dennis Corrigan, a stonemason by trade, came to Illinois in 1850 and first lived at Alton, later settling at Litchfield, where he now resides. Mrs. Corrigan's parents came to America about 1851, and located in New York City, but after the death of the father the mother came to Illinois. Thomas F. Corrigan was educated in the Ursuline Academy and the High School of his native town. When eighteen years of age he was employed as a brakeman by the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railroad, now a part of the Big Four System, remaining there two years. For two years following he was engaged in the same capacity with the Wabash Railroad, and then served as conductor one year, with headquarters at Decatur. At the end of that time he took charge of a department in a large mill at Litchfield, where he remained one year; then became yardmaster for the Indianapolis & St. Louis Road at Litchfield, for two years, after which he accepted a position as conductor on the St. Louis & Chicago Railroad between Litchfield and Springfield. He had charge of the first construction train engaged in the building of that road. Subsequently he took the position of freight conductor and then passenger conductor on the same road, remaining in that position four years, until that road became a part of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis System; since then he has been with that company as a passenger conductor. Mr. Corrigan married Margaret Brennan, in Gillespie, Illinois, June 13, 1888. They have two children, Edward and Thomas. The parents of Mrs. Corrigan are Christopher and Margaret (Hughes) Brennan, natives of Ireland. Mr. Corrigan is independent in politics. He is a member of the Order of Railway Conductors, the Knights of Columbus, and the B. P. O. E.

COUCH, HARRIMAN; Physician; born at West Boscawen, New Hampshire, May 20, 1824; son of Benjamin and Sally (Morse) Couch, natives of West Boscawen. The paternal grandfather was Jacob Couch. He and his son were farmers, but the latter also worked at the joiner trade. When seventeen years of age Mr. Harriman Couch left home and went to Concord, New Hampshire, where he worked for Governor Hill as a compositor on Hill's "New Hampshire Patriot." From there he went to Boston, where he studied medicine and worked at the case to pay his expenses. On account of poor health he obtained passage as a sailor on a vessel bound for California. At Rio Janeiro he went on shore and he and two other comrades were left when the ship sailed. There he obtained work in the Brazilian Government Printing Office, and was brought to the notice of Emperor Dom Pedro, who was very democratic in his ideas and habits. He assisted the Emperor in studying English and was often in the Emperor's company. After a few months he started on a voyage to Capetown, South Africa, on what proved to be a slave vessel. She was overhauled by a British war vessel and the crew made prisoners, but Dr. Couch was soon released for want of evidence against him. He then returned to Rio Janeiro, and thence to Mobile, after which he sailed on a spar-laden English vessel to Brest, France. Returning from France, he made a voyage to Ireland and from there to Boston; next sailed to Mobile and New Orleans, and ascending the Mississippi reached Chicago in 1848. From Chicago he went to Wisconsin and remained there two years; a part of the time he worked on a paper at Geneva Lake. At the latter place Dr. Couch was married to Phebe Ann Macomber, soon after coming to Peoria, where Mrs. Couch died in 1852. Here he became manager and one of the proprietors of the "Voice of the People," a weekly newspaper; also worked on the "Daily Republican" and other papers, and finally opened a job office, which he operated until about 1863, when he entered the service of the Government and had charge of the Military Cemetery at Chattanooga, Tennessee, where ten thousand soldiers are buried. While at Chattanooga he engaged in the practice of medicine, and, on his return to Peoria at the close of the war, he received a diploma and entered upon regular practice, which he has since followed. May 20, 1855, he married Mrs. Margaret A. Gilbert, widow. Of this marriage there is one child, Edward H. D. Couch, born October 1, 1859, who was captain of Company L, Fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in the War with Spain. He is now Captain of Company H, Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Volunteers, in the Philippine Islands. Dr. Couch resides at 312 South Jefferson Avenue, where he has lived forty-five years. His wife died January 21, 1902.

COWELL, BENJAMIN (deceased); Merchant and Street-railway Promoter; born in Providence, Rhode Island, December 28, 1818, the son of Benjamin Cowell, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas Court and Collector of the Port under President Polk, and grandson of Major Samuel Cowell, a soldier of the Revolution. He became one of "Argonauts" to California in 1849, but removed to Peoria in 1858, where he began business here as a merchant. At the opening of the Civil War in 1861 he served as a member of the local Committee of Safety. Mr. Cowell believed thoroughly in the future development of the city of Peoria, and proved his faith by erecting the first store building on block 200 South Adams Street, when it was declared to be foolish to expect business to prosper so far from Main Street. The same spirit animated him in seconding the efforts of his cousin, E. J. Cowell, to secure the building of a street railway on Adams Street. His earnest arguments and persuasions, however, resulted in the construction of the Central City Horse Railway, of which he was a prominent Director, and afterwards Treasurer and practical manager at the time of his death, October 14, 1873. In business he was eminently successful, leaving a large and well established wall-paper trade to his son, who is now conducting the business at 211 South Adams Street where it was originally established by his farsighted father. He was also prominent in church work, serving as vestryman of St. Paul's Episcopal Church up to the time of his death, and the resolutions of respect then adopted by his associates in the Vestry and the Board of Directors of the Central City Horse Railway Company, attest his sterling worth to the community in which he passed the better part of his vigorous and upright life. Mr. Cowell was married, October 1, 1845, to Amey W. Harris, who survived him twenty-eight years, dying December 16, 1901. Their children were: (1) Joseph Harris, born April 4, 1847, served 100 days in the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers during the War of the Rebellion, afterwards graduating from Brown University with the degree of A. B., received the degree of M. D. from Michigan University, and is now a practicing physician in Saginaw, Michigan—is married and has three children; (2) Elizabeth Howell, born October 18, 1848, died April 20, 1895, was one of the "Women's Club" of Peoria; (3) Benjamin, born May 9, 1853, married Mary A. Goss, of Peoria, and has five children; (4) Amy A., born December 30, 1861, married and died without issue, May 26, 1890.

CRANDELL, EUGENE A.; Carpenter and Builder; born at Prospect Hill, Richwoods Township, March 16, 1854; son of John Wesley and Jane (Stringer) Crandell. The grandfather Crandell came from the vicinity of Vicksburg, Mississippi, to Peoria County. His maternal grandfather, Moses Stringer, was a farmer and came to Peoria County in 1832 and settled in Richwoods, where he owned a large tract of land. He was a man of influence and held the offices of Assessor, Collector and Justice of the Peace. He had a family of eight children: Jane (the mother of Mr. Eugene A. Crandell), George, Isaac, Moses, Bettie, Isabel, Sarah and Rebecca. Eugene was born about two months after his father's death, which occurred January 31, 1854. His mother was left with a large family of small children, but she was a woman of strong character, and by her counsel and example her children grew up to be honored and respected. Eugene was born in a log house and went to school in a log school house. While hunting cattle on the river bottoms he often saw wild game and was several times "treed" by wild hogs. When the War of the Rebellion broke out four of the Crandell boys, Moses, Isaac, John and William, enlisted and made honorable records in the service of their country. Mrs. Crandell died July 2, 1897, aged seventy-five years. Eugene stayed at home until twenty-one years of age, and, on that day, leased Frye's Rope Ferry, not far from the upper free bridge, and operated it for five years. Later he moved into Peoria, and worked at the carpenter's trade, during which he helped to build both sugar houses. One summer he operated three pile drivers for the Iowa Central Railway Company. In 1887 he began contracting and has erected several well known buildings about the city, among them the Goldsborough store at 2300 Jefferson Street, the McLane residence at 2302 Jefferson Street, and the Northern Hotel on Adams Street. He helped to build the Log Cabin in Glen Oak Park. In 1895 he built the two-story frame residence at 111 Van Buren Street, where he now lives. He married Julia A. Lower in Peoria, August 3, 1875, and they have five children: George, Ward, Mettie, Lizzie and Willie. Mettie is the wife of Chalmers Sebree. Mrs. Crandell was born January 11, 1855, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Decker) Lower. The father was born in Ohio and the mother in Virginia. The former died in Peoria in 1886, while the latter is still living at the age of sixty-eight. Politically Mr. Crandell is a Democrat. He is fond of hunting and owns a gasoline pleasure launch, which he uses on the river. He is a staunch supporter of the game laws, and is a Game Warden for the Tenth Congressional District, and is a private detective for several large firms and corporations throughout the State.

CRANDELL, ISAAC W.; Contractor and Builder; born at Prospect Hill, Richwoods Township, Peoria County, December 5, 1844; son of John Wesley and Jane (Stringer) Crandell, natives of Ohio. The paternal grandfather, Joshua Crandell, was a native of New England, was a shoemaker by trade and served in the War of 1812. He married Hannah Zane, a daughter of Ebenezer Zane, the founder of Zanesville, Ohio, and his sister, Sarah McIntire, was the founder of the Orphan's Home at Zanesville. He was the owner of a farm near the present village of Hollis Station in Hollis Township, where he settled in the pioneer days of Peoria County, living there until his death, in 1842. The maternal grandfather, Moses H. Stringer, a native of Virginia, was a farmer, and served in the Black Hawk War. He married Mary Warden, who was born in the same State. He owned the west half of section 22 in Richwoods Township, where he lived until his death in 1866. John W. Crandell moved to Richwoods Township after his marriage. His home was on the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 22, where he was engaged in farming till his death, January 31, 1854, in consequence of being shot, at the house of his brother (which was the old homestead in Hollis Township), by his brother-in-law, Isaac Stringer, whom he was taking to the Hospital for the Insane at Jacksonville. He had stopped for dinner, when the man took up a loaded rifle which stood behind the door, and, saying pleasantly, "Look out, Wesley, I am going to shoot you," fired and killed him instantly. The insane man then ran up the bluff, climbed a tree and jumping from it fell a hundred feet and was killed. Mrs. Crandell was thus left with a family of eight children, the oldest being but fifteen years old. At that time the country was still new, and deer, turkeys, wolves, wild cats and wild hogs were very numerous. Mr. Isaac Crandell got his first education in a log school house that stood in the middle of the road in the center line of Section 21. At eighteen years of age he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served from January 6, 1864, to January 6, 1866, mostly in the Department of the Gulf. He took part in the siege of Mobile, the capture of Fort Blakeley and Spanish Fort. He was one of the foremost of his regiment to enter the latter and his regiment was the second in. After coming home he was a farmer for five years, part of the time running a hopyard of ten acres on the river bottom. In 1871 he began carpentering, and in 1872 moved into Peoria, where he has built many residences; also built the Prospect Heights school house, the Amphitheatre at Lake View Park, Andrew Nelson's barn in Richwoods (the largest frame barn in the county), and many wooden bridges. He was the architect and builder in 1896 of the Log Cabin in Glen Oak Park. In 1892 he built the two-story frame residence which he now occupies at 115 Van Buren Street. He has another house and lot at Averyville. He has filled the offices of Supervisor, School Inspector and Highway Commissioner; is also a member of the Redmen and the American Home and Fireside. Mr. Crandell married Elizabeth Phillips in Peoria, May 14, 1866. They have four children: Jennie, the wife of Peter Melius; Ida, wife of Thomas Owen; William W., who married Mabel Thompson; and Isaac W., Jr. The parents of Mrs. Crandell were Joseph and Elizabeth (Sullivan) Phillips, natives of Ohio, both of whom died at the age of seventy-seven years—the former in 1877 and the latter in 1887. The father was a wheelwright and later a farmer in Kickapoo Township, where they settled in 1855. They had eleven children, of whom Elizabeth was next to the youngest. She was born in Clermont County, Ohio, March 3, 1845.

O. B. Will.

Crane and his wife had four sons and two daughters: Frank W., Charles C., Wilbur, Frederick, Estella and Flora. Mr. Crane died in 1870; Mrs. Crane is still living. Charles C. Crane entered the railway service twenty years ago, and since that time has filled several positions in the employ of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway. For eleven years he has been a locomotive engineer, and belongs to Division No. 447. Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Peoria. He is a member of Lodge No. 15, A. F. & A. M., through the Chapter and Commandery K. T. Frank W. Crane, his brother, who was at one time a locomotive engineer, is now superintendent of a lead and zinc mine at Joplin, Missouri. Charles C. Crane was educated in the city schools of Warsaw. He is a member of the Methodist Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

CUMERFORD, MARTIN V. B.: Undertaker; Peoria; was born in Muncie, Delaware County, Indiana, February 24, 1841, the son of George and Harriet (Collis) Cumerford. His father was a native of Virginia, a cabinetmaker by occupation and politically an old line Democrat who became a War Democrat during the Rebellion. The oldest of the family of eight children, with an invalid father, "Mart" was early called upon to take his place as a bread-winner. After obtaining the rudiments of an education in the common schools, with intervals of attendance at Muncie Seminary, at the age of fifteen he became post-boy, carrying the United States mail between Muncie and Marion, a distance of thirty-three miles, in spite of flood and frost never missing a trip. In 1859 he went to Indianapolis, became bell-boy in the Spencer House, then second clerk and finally first clerk, which position he held at the beginning of the Civil War. He then attempted to enlist in a cavalry company being organized by Captain Bracken; but, being rejected on account of his youth, was admitted as bugler, but finding himself unable to master the instrument, discarded it for service in the ranks. The Bracken Rangers saw service with General Sigel at the second battle of Bull Run, and when all the army except Sigel's corps had fallen back on the defense at Washington, young Cumerford was entrusted by Sigel with an order to General Pope, which was delivered after encountering many serious difficulties. Under an order for the discharge of all who had been mustered in as buglers or musicians, Mr. Cumerford severed his connection with the Bracken Rangers, returning to Indianapolis. Previous to this he had been recommended by the officers of his company for appointment to a Lieutenantcy, to which General Sigel added the indorsement—"Mr. Cumerford is one of my orderlies, and an intelligent young man, whom I do not hesitate to recommend." In the hurly-burly of war and press of business incident thereto, nothing came of this. The young soldier's next move was to Nashville, Tennessee, where his old commander, General Milroy, appointed him headquarters purveyor, with Tullahoma as his base of supplies. Here he practically resumed his place in the ranks until October, 1864, when he returned to Indianapolis in time to cast his first vote for Oliver P. Morton for Governor, a month later voting for Lincoln for President. November 15, 1864, he was married to Miss Jennie E. Tout, made a trip to the South and spent two years after the war as a grocer's clerk in Indianapolis; also served as a clerk of the Indiana House of Representatives during the session of 1866-67. Then coming to Peoria, he secured a position as bookkeeper in the office of the Truesdale planing-mills; two years later became manager of Ballard's lumber-yard; still later was employed in the freight-office of the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railroad, and, in 1874, engaged in the grocery trade, from which he retired in 1890. In 1893, in order to assist his son Harry, who had qualified himself for the undertaker's business, he took an interest in the establishment at No. 708 Main Street, with which he is still connected. Although a thorough-going Republican from his first vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1864, he is not in the ordinary sense of the term a politician, but in 1875 was elected the first Alderman from the newly organized Eighth Ward—the only political office he ever held. He is a member of Bryner Post, G. A. R., and of Fort Clark Lodge, I. O. O. F., is of genial temperament, and maintains a character for manly independence and unswerving integrity, which has won for him the respect of the community in which the greater part of his life has been spent.

DAVIS, JOSEPH M.; Engineer; born at Winchester, Delaware County, Indiana, December 23, 1851; son of James F. and Polly (Balny) Davis. His father was born in North Carolina in 1812, and his mother in Westchester County, Pennsylvania. The paternal grandparents were Jonathan and Lucy Davis. The former was born in Wales and came to the United States as a soldier in the English Army, but deserted and entered the ranks of the Continental Army and fought for American independence. He settled in Delaware County, Indiana, where he became the owner of a section of land, dying at the age of one hundred and nineteen years, and his wife at ninety-nine. They were the parents of four sons and four daughters. One of the former is now living at the age of ninety. James F. Davis learned the blacksmith trade, and, in 1856, left Indiana and came by wagon to Peoria. After settling here he became an engineer and acted in this capacity on one of the early steamers on the Illinois River. Later he became a stationary engineer, and was killed by the explosion of a boiler at Chandlerville, Illinois, in 1876. Mrs. Davis died in 1878. They left six children, four of whom are still living. Joseph M. Davis first learned a trade in the machine and brass finishing shop with Frazier, Thompson & Company in Peoria, where he worked five years. He then operated stationary and, later, steamboat engines. He spent fifteen years on Western rivers and the Great Lakes, making his home all the time in Peoria. For six years and a half he was engineer at the Vienna Mill and, for two years, master machinist at the Glucose Factory in Peoria. In December, 1899, he became engineer at the Strawboard Factory, where he is now employed. He is the only Republican ever elected Alderman in the Third Ward. This occurred when P. B. Miles was elected Mayor. During the Mayoralty of William Allen, Mr. Davis was Superintendent of Streets. He is a Mason, a Knight of Pythias and a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of which last order he has filled all the chairs. Coming to Peoria in 1852, he began working at his trade, and operated a furniture factory for about a year, but closed it in 1861, when he enlisted in Col. R. G. Ingersoll's Regiment, the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, of which he was for some time drill-master. On the organization of the Fourteenth Illinois Cavalry, he was made Captain of Company B of that regiment, and served with it till he was captured soon after Stoneman's Raid, afterwards being imprisoned at Atlanta and Charleston. For a time he was Provost Marshal at Macon, Georgia. While with his regiment he took part in all the battles in which it was engaged, and was commended for bravery by General Sherman in his Memoirs. He returned to Peoria after the war and, from 1870 to 1880, was engaged in the manufacture of furniture. He put in the interior finish and office furniture of the Peoria Court House and of several banks. He died in 1882 at the age of fifty-six. Andrew Distler began work in his father's shop at the age of twelve years and, in later years, had charge of much of the fine work which they put up. After the death of his father he continued the business, at a later date being superintendent of several large wood-working establishments. Between 1896 and 1900 he had a proprietary interest in a factory where fine interior finish and store and bar fixtures were made. On the organization of the Archarena Company in Peoria, in 1900, he became its Superintendent. Mr. Distler and Mary A. Sipp were married in Peoria, June 9, 1878, and have three children: Fred William, Veronica and Florence M. Mr. Distler is a member of Western Lodge of Odd Fellows.

David McKinney acquired his education at the Academy in Shippensburg, the Academy at Chambersburg, and at Jefferson College, graduating from the latter institution in 1849. He taught in Millwood Academy and at Shade Gap from 1850 to 1852, came to Peoria in 1853, and was junior partner in the firm of Bushnell & McKinney, lumber dealers. In 1862 he retired from the firm to take a position as secretary of the City Fire Insurance Company at Peoria. MANSFIELD, HENRY (deceased); Druggist and Capitalist in his lifetime in Peoria, born in Esperance, New York, March 22, 1816. He was the son of Leverett and Sarah (Sanford) Mansfield. His father was born in North Haven, Connecticut, in 1786, and his mother in New Haven. The American branch of the Mansfield family is descended from Richard Mansfield, who came from Devonshire, England, in 1639, and locating near the town of Hampden, Massachusetts, became the progenitor of a large family. Nearer the present in time, came Joseph Mansfield, the father of Titus, the great-grandfather of Henry. He was a large landowner and proprietor of the famous Mansfield farm. Titus Mansfield married Mabel Todd, and their son, Richard, a native of North Haven, married Mary Styles. They became the parents of Leverett Mansfield, who lived many years in Esperance, New York, where he held a prominent place in the community. In 1843, having disposed of his property, he settled near Elgin, Illinois, but lived later at Princeville, Peoria County, where he died in 1868. His wife, born in North Haven, Connecticut, March 8, 1789, died December 20, 1868, preceding the passing away of her husband by only three days. Henry Mansfield left home at an early age, going to Albany, New York, where he secured a position in one of the prominent drug stores in that city, remaining until his health demanded a change of occupation. He became a member of a Government surveying party in Northern Michigan, among the Chippewa Indians, a hundred miles from a white settlement. For four years he was engaged in this service, when he came to Peoria on his way to St. Louis, in search of a warmer climate to alleviate lung and throat trouble. Compelled to stop here on account of inability to continue his journey, he placed himself under treatment of Dr. Tucker, a nephew of Dr. Ed. Dickinson, which finally resulted in a partnership between him and Dr. Tucker in the drug business. They were intimately associated in business enterprises until the death of the Doctor in 1888, after a continuance of fifty years lacking only three months. Mr. Mansfield accumulated a fortune by investments in city property and farm lands, which with the addition of property that came to him by inheritance, made him one of the wealthier citizens of Peoria. In 1846 Mr. Mansfield was married to Harriet A. Elding, a native of Red Hook, Dutchess County New York. With her people she came west to Peoria at an early day, and, at the time of her marriage, was living in this city. She had three children, only one of whom, Fannie (now Mrs. Blakesley, of Chicago), is living. In 1856 Mr. Mansfield married Isabelle F. Servoss, a native of New York City, and a daughter of Thomas L. Servoss and granddaughter of John Pintard, of New York City. Of this union were born eight children, all of whom are now living: Louise P., the wife of C. W. Mosher, of Chicago, afterwards of Nebraska; Henry, a lawyer of Peoria; Nathaniel S.; Eleanor T., now Mrs. J. Harold Ross; Isabelle F., now Mrs. J. Lee Newton; Margaret F., now Mrs. F. J. Green; Sarah Sanford, now Mrs. George H. Newton, and Eliza H., unmarried.

Mr. Meals came to Peoria in 1854, and began his career as a blacksmith with the firm of Tobey & Anderson, plow manufacturers. Mr. Anderson having retired from the firm, it was reorganized in 1862 with William Tobey, L. G. Pratt and Barnhart Meals as partners. Upon the retirement of Mr. Tobey, about two years later, the firm assumed the style of L. G. Pratt & Company, and, in 1866, it became the St. Louis & Peoria Plow Company. In 1873 it was incorporated as the Peoria Steel Plow Company. Mr. Meals retained an interest in the concern and was Superintendent from 1879 to April, 1884, which, as he grew older, led him into a wider field. After taking a commercial course at the St. Louis Business College, the young man became bill clerk and telegraph operator for the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway at Washington. In 1870 he entered one of the grain offices of the Board of Trade, at Peoria, as a clerk, and five years later he and his brother embarked in the grain business under the style of P. B. & C. C. In 1862 he joined Volunteer Fire Company, No. 4, and in 1866 was appointed Foreman—a position which he held for the next eighteen years. This was before the era of a paid Fire Department, and, during a part of the time he received a salary of $50 a year from the city as second in command. In 1887 he was appointed Chief of the Peoria Fire Department, continuing in this office the remainder of his life. During his connection with the Peoria Fire Department, Chief Moeller took part in numerous firemen's tournaments in various cities, including Monmouth, Springfield, Galesburg, Pekin, Ottawa, Bloomington, Decatur and Quincy, and, it is claimed, never failed to return with a prize. The grandfather Mounts, born in Virginia, was a civil engineer, and was engaged in public works in that State. He died at the age of sixty. Caleb A. Mounts, who came to Peoria in the early '40s, kept a hat and fur store, where he manufactured hats and fur garments on Main Street, opposite Davis' Drug Store. to Elizabeth Causey, at Washington, Illinois, where she was born. She came to Peoria with her parents when an infant. MURPHY, JOHN; Physician and Surgeon; born in Belfast, Ireland, January 17, 1814, the son of John Murphy, a merchant of that city. In his youth he enjoyed exceptional advantages for acquiring an education and, having taken a preliminary literary course, spent some time in Edinburgh University, after which he entered the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons in London, from which he graduated in medicine and surgery on August 31, 1840. Two years later he came to America, locating first in New Orleans, where he remained until 1845, when, on account of the effect of a semi-tropical climate upon the health of his wife, he determined to come North. Ascending the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers, he reached Peoria, then a village of some 1,200 inhabitants, and, being attracted by the natural beauty of the scenery, he decided to remain here, which has remained his home for a period of over fifty years. His contemporaries of that period include such well-known names as Drs. Rouse, Dickinson, Frye, and of a later period, Drs. Andrew, Arnold, and William R. and John L. Hamilton, of whom he and Dr. W. R. Hamilton are the sole survivors. Dr. Murphy's career as a physician and surgeon has been conspicuously successful, and he has acquired a handsome competence, which he still lives to enjoy with remarkable physical and mental vitality at an age of eighty-eight years. Although retired from active practice for several years, he still retains a deep interest in whatever relates to the advancement of a profession with which he has been identified for more than half a century. His ripe scholarship and intimate acquaintance with general and classical literature enable him to spend the evening of his days in the enjoyment of one of the most complete libraries in the city and in the society of his friends.

NEWMAN, MAX; Cigar and Tobacco Dealer; born in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1834; came to Chicago, Illinois, in 1856, and became bookkeeper in a wholesale house in that city, retaining this position until 1859. He then entered into partnership in Peoria with Harry Ullman, under the firm name of Newman & Ullman, and began a jobbing trade in cigars and tobacco, which has continued without change of name ever since, constituting the oldest original firm in the city. While still a resident of his native land Mr. Newman held the position of Assistant United States Consul for the Kingdom of Wurtemberg under the administration of Franklin Pierce, and, by frequent association with Stephen A. Douglas while in Chicago and by an intimate acquaintance with the late Robert G. Ingersoll after coming to Peoria, he imbibed the principles of the Democratic party. Yet, in common with the great mass of the German American population of that period, he rigorously supported the policy of the General Government in the War of the Rebellion, and, although financially embarrassed at the time and physically disqualified for giving his personal service in defense of the flag, he hired a substitute to bear arms in his place without being drafted, paying therefor $800—a very considerable sacrifice at that early period of his business career. In 1896 Mr. Newman left the party of Bryan and free-silver and adopted that of McKinley and a sound currency, and finding as the outcome a period of universal prosperity declares his purpose to "stick." In 1864 he was married to Rebecca Ullman, who, with four sons and one daughter, constitutes his family. Fraternally Mr. Newman is a member of the Schiller Lodge, A. F. & A. M.

He was united in marriage September 8, 1896, to Miss Isabelle McLoughlin daughter of Patrick and Maria McLoughlin, who reside at 1705 North Jefferson Avenue, Peoria. Mrs. Newman was one of Peoria County's teachers, having taught at Pottstown, Orange Prairie, Dunlap and Kellar Station between the years 1890 and 1896. About 1885 he became a member of the Orchard Mines and Mapleton Coal Company, and soon after united with the firm of Newsam Brothers, remaining with the latter company until 1894, when he came to Peoria to engage in the grocery business. Soon after locating he bought two lots at Nos. 3109 and 3111 South Adams Street, where he built a handsome two-story and basement brick building, in which he now handles a large stock of general merchandise and does a good business. On July 13, 1870, he was married to Viola Staples, of Hancock County, Illinois, who died October 16, 1875, after having borne five children: Frank P., Lenora B., Charles S., Lulu B. and Julia M. March 15, 1893, he was married at Keokuk, Iowa, to Lenora M. Smith, of Hancock County, Illinois. She was a daughter of Joseph Smith, who was born in Ohio in April, 1829, and married Nancy J. Ellis in Hancock County, Illinois, who bore him six children: Ida B., Maria C., Lillian M., James L. A., Lenora M. and Nancy E. Mr. Smith died in 1894; his widow is living. Roy Jett Railsback is the only issue of his father's third marriage. Frank P. Railsback, Mr. Railsback's eldest son, is an engineer in the employ of the Illinois Central Railway Company. He married Estella Leitgart, of Hancock County, and has two children, named Ruby and Lee. Mr. Railsback's daughter Lenora B. married Samuel Cornelius, of Illinois, and has two daughters, named G. Irene and Helen.

READ, JOHN A.; Auctioneer; was born in Hannibal, Oswego County, New York, July 16, 1850. Amos Read married Mary Bennett, in Connecticut, about 1776. Their second child, Caleb, born at Lisbon, Connecticut, November 24, 1780, died in Westmoreland, Oneida County, New York, March 15, 1849. He married, at Montville, Connecticut, September 6, 1804, Mary, daughter of Benjamin and Lettis (Camp) Lefingwell, who was born in Montville, or at Boswell, Connecticut, January 17, 1782, and died September 30, 1825. Their son, Dwight Ripley, the father of John A. Read, was born at Brookfield, Madison County, New York, and married Margaret J. Wasson, who was born at Little Sodus Bay, Cayuga County, New York, in 1825, a daughter of George and Sallie (Brewster) Wasson, who were born near Schenectady, New York. John A. Read at the age of twelve years began to earn his own living. In 1867 he accompanied his parents to Peoria. Two years later, having reached the age of nineteen, he went to Kansas, and in 1872 settled on a Government claim in Morris County in that State, where he remained two years. After spending some time in Iowa, he lived for a year at Elmwood, Illinois, where he was engaged in the auction business. He became an auctioneer and dealer in second-hand goods in Peoria in 1878, and is now the proprietor of the largest and oldest auction-house in his part of the State. In 1899 he was appointed Sealer of Weights and Measures for the city of Peoria. An active Republican politician and a fluent speaker, he has done much effective campaign work for his party. He was married at Brimfield, Peoria County, in May, 1887, to Mary E. Barlow, and they have children: Mary Lillie, Emma Alice, J. Stella, John Wilbur and Sala Hamilton.

REEVES, WILLIAM HAWKS; Architect; born at Bloomington, Illinois, December 1, 1866, is the son of Owen Thornton and Mary E. (Hawks) Reeves, of Bloomington. His great-grandparents on the paternal side were Isaiah and Elizabeth (Davis) Reeves, who were natives of Virginia, and became the parents of William Reeves, also a native of Virginia, who married Mary McLain, a native of Ohio. Their son, Owen Thornton Reeves, was born in Ross County, Ohio, graduated at the Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, and came to Bloomington, Illinois, in 1854, has served for several terms on the Circuit Bench for the Bloomington District and has for many years been a Trustee and a Professor in the Law Department of the Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington. Judge Owen T. Reeves was married to Mary E. Hawks, whose parents were Matthew H. and Elizabeth (Major) Hawks, both born in Kentucky. The parents of last named Mrs. Hawks (who were the great-grandparents of William H. Reeves) were William J. and Margaret (Ship) Major, like their daughter, natives of Kentucky. William Hawks Reeves received his primary education in the public schools at Bloomington, took a three years' literary course at the State Normal University at Normal, and later studied architecture for two years in the State University at Champaign. Soon after leaving college he located at Peoria, and seven years ago became a member of the firm of Reeves & Baillie, architects, and for some five years has been official architect and superintendent of the Asylum for the Incurable Insane, at Bartonville. In 1897 at the establishment of the State Board of Examiners of Architects, he was appointed a member of that Board by the Governor for two years, and was then reappointed for a second term of four years. His firm has furnished plans for the City Hall at Peoria, Spalding Institute, the Christian Science Church, and for other notable buildings, and has given much attention to designing and superintending the erection of large public school buildings. Mr. Reeves and Miss Colima French, of Springfield, were married December 4, 1895, and have one child, Owen Thornton Reeves.

REIGART, WILLIAM H.; Engineer; was born in Lewistown, Pennsylvania, July 4, 1840, a son of Daniel and Barbara (Bechtold) Reigart. His grandfather in the paternal line came from England and settled at Lebanon, Pennsylvania, where his son Daniel was born August 6, 1812. The latter, a tanner by trade, came to Illinois in 1855, and settled at Ottawa, devoting his attention to the cultivation of a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in that vicinity. He died September 26, 1884, leaving several sons. Barbara Bechtold, his wife, was born in Berks County, Pennsylvania, in February, 1818, and died at her son's home in Peoria December 13, 1886. William H. Reigart passed his early life on the farm, and in 1862 became a fireman on the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad. In six months he was made an engineer, and for more than four years ran a locomotive between Peru and Chicago. In 1866 he was given an engine on the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Road, and continued in the service of that line for twenty-seven and one-half years, running most of the time between Peoria and the State line, his engine drawing a passenger train after his first six months' service. It is a remarkable fact that, during that long period, he never suffered an injury. On October 20, 1875, he was presented with a solid gold watch worth $275, by the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railway Company, for meritorious service, his general record, as well as that for care of live-stock, being superior to that of any other engineer on the road. He retired from the road in 1894; is a Republican in politics, and still a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. He has lived at 1002 First Avenue for thirty-five years, and owns considerable property in that vicinity, and is one of the best known and most highly respected railroad men in Peoria. Mr. Reigart married Laura Cutting at Joliet November 9, 1864, who was born at Lowell, Massachusetts, March 14, 1846. She is the daughter of John H. and Abigail (Emerson) Cutting, who were natives of Rochester New York and Methuen, Massachusetts, respectively. About 1849 Mr. Cutting and his family located at Chicago, and a year later removed to Joliet, where they lived thirty-five years. John Cutting, father of John H. Cutting, accompanied John C. Fremont in his western expedition and, in making those discoveries which have led to the development of a vast extent of country, attained distinction as an explorer. He died at the age of sixty-nine years.

RHEA, EBENEZER B., Office Manager Kingman Plow Company; born in Peoria County, Illinois, August 1, 1857, the son of Elias B. and Phoebe (Paddock) Rhea, both of whom were natives of Preble County, Ohio. Mr. Rhea's great-grandfather was Robert Rhea, born in Mecklenberg County, North Carolina, and his grandfather, Jehu S. Rhea, a native of Monroe County, Tennessee. On the maternal side his grandfather was Ebenezer Paddock. He was educated in the common schools in the city of Peoria, and, in 1875, became office-boy in the office of Kingman & Co., where he remained until 1881, when he traveled for a year as agent in Minnesota and Dakota, selling agricultural implements. Returning to Peoria in 1883 he entered into the employment of Kingman & Co. as order clerk, soon after removing to St. Louis, where he occupied the same position in their St. Louis house until 1886, when he went upon the road selling heavy hardware. In 1889 he became associated with the branch house of Kingman & Co. at Kansas City, as correspondent and general office man, remaining there until 1896, when he again removed to Peoria to accept a position with the Rhea-Thielens Implement Company. Here he remained until 1900, when he became office manager for the Kingman Plow Company—a position which he has since occupied. Mr. Rhea was married in Chicago, April 16, 1888, to Mary Bell Hart, and they have four children: Justina, Edith Belle, Helen and Harold Hart. In religious belief he is a Protestant and in political affiliation, a Republican.

RICE, JAMES MONTGOMERY; Lawyer; born in Monmouth, Illinois, March 8, 1842; the son of George Poage Rice, born in Greenup County, Kentucky, October 27, 1812, and Caroline (Montgomery) Rice a native of Danville, Pennsylvania. On the paternal side the Rice family trace their ancestry to Thomas Rice, born in England of Welsh parents, who came to Virginia in 1695, where the next three generations were born. His son, William Rice (who was the great-great-grandfather of James M. Rice, of Peoria) was a native of Hanover County, Virginia, and he and his wife, Sarah, had a son named John, born in Culpepper County, Virginia, who married Mary Finney, a native of Accomac County. The next in line of descent was James Rice, born in Rockingham County, Virginia, married Ann Hopkins, a native of the same county, and settled in Kentucky about 1804, which became the birthplace of their son, George Poage Rice, already mentioned. On the maternal side Alexander and Mary Montgomery, natives of North of Ireland, were parents of Gen. William Montgomery, of Revolutionary fame, born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, who married Margaret Nevin, a native of the same county. Their son, John Montgomery, also of Chester County, married Isabella Bell, and they became the parents of James Montgomery, of Danville, Pennsylvania, who married Margaret Reed, of Chester County, in the same State; their daughter, Caroline, becoming the wife of George Poage Rice, and the mother of James M., as stated above. George Poage Rice settled in Monmouth, Warren County, Illinois, in 1835, and after remaining there many years, removed to Omaha, Nebraska, where he lived with his daughter, Mrs. Lyman W. Case, until his death,

July 7, 1890. His wife died in Nebraska, January 15, 1886. Both are buried at their old home at Monmouth. James M., who was the oldest child of the family, spent his boyhood on his father's farm near Monmouth, and acquiring a primary education in the district schools, entered Monmouth College. The Civil War having broken out during his freshman year, although still a minor, on August 20, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company E Tenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until September 14, 1864, a period of more than three years, without asking a furlough or losing a day from duty. His first service was as Military Storekeeper at General Grant's headquarters, but having been appointed Corporal, he returned to the ranks and took part with his regiment in some of the most important battles of the war, including that at Pittsburg Landing, the advance on Corinth, the Nashville campaign of 1862, the battles of Mission Ridge and Chickamauga, and the march to the relief of Knoxville, Tennessee. Having been promoted to the rank of Sergeant, in December, 1863, he was examined and recommended for a commission in a regiment of colored troops, afterward participating in the battles of Buzzard's Roost and Resaca, in the capture of Rome, Georgia, in Sherman's march to Atlanta, and the battles of Peach Tree Creek and Ezra Church. As opportunity afforded while in the service, he continued his studies which had been interrupted by his enlistment, and, on returning from the field, entered the Law Department of Michigan University, graduating there in March, 1866; was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of Illinois and in the District Courts of Iowa, and, later, in the United States District, Circuit and Supreme Courts. Immediately after graduation he began practice at Aquawka, also serving as Master in Chancery, but early in the next year removed to Peoria, where, a year later, he became a partner of Judge David McCulloch, continuing until his election as Representative to the General Assembly in November, 1870. In 1875 he joined in the reorganization of the National Blues, which took a prominent part in guarding railroad and other property during the great railroad strike at East St. Louis, in 1877; the same year was commissioned Captain and Special Aid on the Governor's Staff; two years later became Lieutenant-Colonel and Inspector of rifle practice; in 1887, as Acting Assistant Adjutant-General of the Second Brigade, took part in suppressing the riots at East St. Louis, and, in 1890, was commissioned Colonel and Inspector-General of rifle practice, I. N. G., resigning this position on the accession of Governor Altgeld in 1896. Colonel Rice is the author of a volume on rifle firing, which has received the approval of officers of the regular army; has also written numerous articles for the periodical press (military and miscellaneous) in which he favored the incorporation of the National Guard into the organization for the National defense. While the principle has not been incorporated into the general law, it has received the approval of many leading military officers, and was partially recognized in the permission given to the National Guard, in several of the States, to enter the service with their regimental organizations at the beginning of the Spanish-American War. From the time of casting his vote for Mr. Lincoln for President in 1864, Col. Rice has been prominent in Republican circles, having served as Secretary of the Peoria County Republican Central Committee, and been a frequent contributor to the press on current political issues. He was a charter member of Bryner Post, G. A. R., organized in 1879, and its first Adjutant and, for three successive years (1894-96), Special Aid on the Staff of the Commander-in-chief, with a view to promoting military training in schools and colleges. In religious belief he is a Presbyterian, and a member of the Second Presbyterian Church. On September 14, 1871, he was married to Miss Eliza F. Ballance, a native of Peoria—where her father, Col. Charles Ballance, settled in 1831—and a graduate of Monticello Female Seminary, and they have five children: Lillian R. (now Mrs. Daniel R. Brigham, of Denver, Colorado), Caroline Montgomery, Mary Virginia, Montgomery, Gordon and Willis Ballance.

RIGGS, JAMES L., pioneer settler, Peoria County; born in Maryland, the son of Romulus and Mercy A. (Levering) Riggs. His father lived for a time in Philadelphia, where the son was educated. The latter came to Peoria County in 1840 and settled on lands which his father had purchased in Jubilee and Brimfield Townships. He was one of the early County Commissioners of Peoria County, and was elected Sheriff in 1850, serving two terms. During his incumbency in the Sheriff's office, he resided in Peoria, but on the expiration of his second term returned to his farm. Mr. Riggs was, for a time, partner of Halsey O. Merriman in the real estate business under the firm name of Riggs & Merriman, and, during this time, laid off an addition to the city of Peoria, which bears his name. It embraced a tract of forty acres, on a part of which St. Joseph's Catholic Cathedral is located. Politically Mr. Riggs was a Republican. He was married, February 11, 1846, at Springfield, Illinois to Marietta Francis, and they had one daughter, Alice, now the wife of Alexander G. Tyng, Jr. He died upon his farm in February, 1859.

ROBERTSON, JOSEPH L.; Educator, County Superintendent of Schools, Peoria; was born at Prairie City, McDonough County, Illinois, October 27, 1864, the son of Hugh and Harriet (Lupher) Robertson. His father was a native of Ayrshire, Scotland, and his mother of Crawford County, Pennsylvania. Mr. Robertson was educated in the high school of his native town, and in the Western Normal College at Bushnell, Illinois. His training in the Normal was acquired during his vacations while engaged in teaching in the district schools, in which he spent some five years, after which he became a teacher in the grammar school in Prairie City, where he remained two years, when he became Principal of the Sheffield school in Bureau County. In 1891 he was chosen Superintendent and Principal of the schools in Chillicothe, Peoria County, continuing in that position four years. In the fall of 1894 he was elected County Superintendent of Schools for Peoria County, was re-elected to the same office in 1898, and in 1902 was nominated for a third term. His successive re-elections afford evidence of satisfaction on the part of the people with the manner in which he has discharged the duties of his office. Mr. Robertson is a member of the Union Congregational Church of Peoria, while politically he is a believer in the principles of the Republican party. In January, 1902, he was appointed by Governor Yates a member of the State Board of Education, which is charged with the management of the State Normal University at Normal, Illinois,—a position of honor rather than profit, as no salary is attached to the office beyond the payment of necessary expenses incurred by the incumbent in attending meetings of the Board. In this case the appointment seems to have been most happily bestowed. Mr. Robertson was married in Lee Township, Fulton County, on June 23, 1887, to Miss Eva L. Terhune, and they have a family of four children, viz.: Jennie N., Josephine, Hugh Schuyler and Dorothy.

ROGERS, JOHN F.; Grocer and Meat Merchant; was born in Hardin County, Ohio, November 10, 1856, a son of William H. and Hannah (Caseman) Rogers, natives of that State. Mr. Rogers' paternal grandfather was William Rogers and his maternal grandfather Joshua Caseman. Only a common-school education was afforded him, but he was so studious and so industrious that he prepared himself for teaching, a work upon which he entered at the age of nineteen, and which he followed for five years until impairment of his health obliged him to seek other employment. After trading in stock for two years he was for ten years a farmer and stock raiser in Logan County, Ohio, and was awarded several premiums for meritorious exhibits at Ohio State Fairs. He located in Peoria in 1893, and in June, 1895, opened a meat market at 1716 North Jefferson Street, which he still owns. In 1896 he established a branch market on Adams Street, and in 1897 the firm of Rogers & Tawzer was formed and opened a grocery at 1903 Adams Street. Mr. Rogers has been successful in all his business ventures and his stores are well patronized. He is a Protestant Methodist and a Republican, a member of the Order of Foresters and of the Fraternal Tribune. He married Ida M. Miller in Logan County, Ohio, October 12, 1882, and they have a son and a daughter, named Clyde M. and Lena L.

ROSKOTEN, ROBERT, M. D. (deceased); Peoria; was born of wealthy parents at Metman, near Dusseldorf, Germany, February 5, 1816. The repudiation by the Austrian Government of a debt of $80,000 due to the elder Roskoten, who was a cloth manufacturer, for military uniforms, left the family financially crippled, and, on the death of his father the son, being thrown upon his own resources, was compelled to work his way through the higher schools of Erfurt by giving private lessons. He then saw three years of military service, first in the Prussian uniform, then in that of France, and finally as a Lieutenant in the service of Portugal, during which time he acquired means to begin a four years' course in medicine at the University of Halle, taking his degree at Jena in 1848. Meanwhile, without neglecting the cultivation of his literary taste, he gained a working knowledge of pharmacy, which he hoped to utilize on his contemplated removal to America. A passionate lover of liberty and endowed with a fiery temperament, he soon became involved in the revolutionary movement then sweeping over Europe, and, on its collapse found himself agitating the cause in Paris, where he escaped arrest and imprisonment by immediate flight. Then coming to America, he was one of that large colony of educated and polished Germans scattered over the United States who did so much to pave the way for those who were to follow them from the Fatherland,—founding churches, schools and societies, many of which still exist. After a year's practice in New York City and a brief stay in Pekin, Illinois, in 1850, Dr. Roskoten came to Peoria, where he continued in practice until his death on May 8, 1897. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was one of the first to be appointed by President Lincoln member of the Board for the examination of Army Surgeons, next rose to the rank of Brigade Surgeon, but was compelled to ask for a discharge on account of injuries received at the battle of Shiloh. Few men could thus look back upon active service in the armies of four nations; pride would not permit him to apply for a pension, though fully entitled to one. For many years he served as Secretary upon the local Board of Pension Examiners. Among the numerous civil and social organizations with which Dr. Roskoten was associated in his later years may be named the City Board of Education (one term); the Board of Directors of the Peoria German Free School; the local, State and National Medical Societies, and of the Association of Army and Navy Surgeons. He was also a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was one of the founders of the Cottage Hospital. His wide acquaintance and reputation for diagnostic acumen caused him to be much sought after as a consultant in general practice, giving freely, on all occasions, the fruits of his ripe experience. Even in his later years he manifested a remarkable ability in keeping abreast of the times, and was as popular among the young as with those of his own age. An accomplished linguist, he had a thorough knowledge of Latin and Greek, and besides writing with vigor and precision in English and German, also spoke fluently in the French, Spanish and Portuguese languages. With all he was a deep student of history and possessed marked literary ability, as shown by his drama entitled "Carlotta," founded upon the romantic career of the Emperor Maximilian and Empress Carlotta of Mexico, and another based on the siege of Granada—both works containing evidence of strong individuality and dramatic power. An enthusiastic student of nature, a scientist, an ardent admirer of all that is good and pure, he was ever ready to tear the mask from the hypocrite and the charlatan. Dr. Roskoten was twice married—first to Miss Charlotte Haas, who died in 1862, and of whose four children only one (Dr. O. J. Roskoten, of Peoria) still survives; his second marriage was in 1865 to Miss Emma De Vries, who, with her two children, Charles Oscar and Miss Matilda, is still living.

ROWCLIFF, JOHN WESLEY; Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue; born in Lynn Township, Huron County, Ohio, June 17, 1844, the son of William and Mary (Ford) Rowcliff. Both parents were natives of England, his father—late of Jubilee Township, Peoria County—born March 12, 1818, and his mother in January, 1819. His paternal grandfather was John Rowcliff and his maternal grandparents, James and Mary Fordall, of English nativity. Mr. Rowcliff first saw Peoria at eight years of age, his parents coming to Peoria County early in 1853, and for the next fourteen years lived on a farm; in 1867 he removed to Princeville and engaged in the drug business until 1873, when he came to Peoria, and for eleven years traveled for Singer & Wheeler, wholesale druggists. December 25, 1879, he was married to Caroline M. Gilbert, of Peoria, and they have one son, Gilbert J. Rowcliff, who graduated with credit from the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. During the last year of Cadet Rowcliff's term at the Naval Academy, he was a member of the editorial staff of the "Lucky Bag," an annual published by the graduating class of each year. Mr. Rowcliff has been twice elected Alderman for the Second Ward of the city of Peoria; is a Republican in politics and a Deputy in the office of Internal Revenue Collector for the Fifth District of Illinois; a member of the Masonic order, and a Presbyterian in religious opinion.

RUCH, ADOLPH J.; Butcher; was born in Peoria April 19, 1874, and is a lineal descendant of Christian Ruch, of Bleienbach, Switzerland, a wealthy tanner, who for more than twenty years was stadtholder or mayor of his village. Christian Ruch was killed accidentally while hauling a load of bark to his tannery, when he was sixty years old. His wife, Elizabeth, was also a native of Bleienbach. Their only son, Jacob, married Elizabeth Sollberger, a woman of wealth who lived to be eighty-six years old. He was killed while hauling stone for the foundations of a barn, and left thirteen children, of whom Jacob, the eldest, born at Wiedenbach, September 1, 1834, married Maria Josephia Diemer, born at Ardsheim, Bavaria, September 29, 1850. The latter was a daughter of Johann Peter and Elizabeth (Baum) Diemer, and granddaughter of Michael and Catharine Diemer, all of whom were natives of Ardsheim, Rheinpfalz, Bavaria. Michael, who was a soldier under the first Napoleon, died at the age of seventy-five years.

Wm. F. Hooper

Johann Peter and Elizabeth (Baum) Diemer died at the ages of forty-four and thirty-nine years, respectively. Their daughter Josephia came to Peoria with her brothers and in 1873 married Jacob Ruch, already mentioned. Adolph J. Ruch, their eldest son, remained here until thirteen years of age, when he moved with his father's family to a farm in Akron Township, where he was brought up to farm work, and teamed one summer in connection with the construction of the roadbed of the Santa Fe Railway. He received his early education in the public schools of Peoria, and afterwards attended four winter terms at the Princeville Academy, and one winter term at Brown's Business College, Peoria, after which he was for nine years (1890-99) a clerk in the grocery store of J. L. Schmitt, when he opened a meat market at 2907 South Adams Street, where he has built up a good trade. He is a Mason and a Modern Woodman.

Later he was employed near Bloomington as superintendent of a pile-driving gang for the Lake Erie & Western Railway Company. Then for five years he was conductor on the "Big Four" line, running between Peoria and Indianapolis, and after that for a short time was in the service of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railroad Company until he entered the service of the Jacksonville, Springfield & Eastern (now the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis) Railroad Company, in which he has continued as conductor for fourteen years. His experience includes several accidents and injuries. In 1890 an accident to a driving rod and a driving wheel of the engine drawing his train threw him twelve feet over a fence. September 12, 1891, his train went through a bridge into the Sangamon River, killing one person and injuring Mr. Rutter and two others. He is a mem-

He participated with nine other ministers in the historic founding of Yale College. A monument on the "Town Green" at Branford, Connecticut, erected in 1900, by the Colonial Dames of America, bears the following inscription: "In the house of Rev. Samuel Russell, once standing near this spot, was held, in 1700, the meeting of ministers of the Colony of Connecticut, when they gave books for the founding of the College school which now bears the name of Yale University." Col. John Russell, the son of Rev. Samuel, was born January 24, 1686, and graduated from Yale College in 1704; in 1707 he was married, and died in 1757. John Russell, the son of Colonel John, was born September 13, 1710, married Mary Barker in 1732, and their second son, John Russell, was born October 11, 1736. He married Mary Lindsley in 1762. Their eldest son, Buel Russell, was born in 1762, and married Miss Barker. He died in Monticello, New York, in 1815. His son, William Russell, of the eighth generation, was born at Branford, Connecticut, September 15, 1797. He came to Peoria in 1835, buying a farm on the West Bluff, a mile and a quarter west of the Court House. He returned to Connecticut to spend two years, and then returned to Peoria, and spent the rest of his life. He married Susan Black, September 15, 1840, by whom he had two children: John W. and M. Jennett. William Russell died March 18, 1864, leaving a large and valuable estate. John W. Russell has been twice married, by his second marriage he had four children. George Major Russell, the only living son, is the Cashier of the National Bank of Garden Grove, Iowa.

SMITH, PHILIP; Insurance and Real Estate Agent; born in Prussia, May 5, 1841, is the son of Paul and Anna M. (Diedrich) Schmitz, natives of Prussia, and emigrants to America, arriving in New York August 24, 1842. After they had tried several other localities they settled in Peoria in the summer of 1844. Here the mother died May 2, 1852, and the father, February 28, 1864. Subsequently the death of two sisters and a brother left Philip Smith the only survivor of the family. Mr. Smith has always made Peoria his home. At the outbreak of the Civil War, in company with several others, he went to St. Louis and enlisted in the Eighth Missouri Volunteer Infantry. He served in this regiment for three years, participating in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, the Siege of Corinth, General Sherman's attack on Corinth by way of the Yazoo Bayou, the battles of Mission Ridge, Resaca and Dallas. After leaving the service he was engaged in various pursuits until the fall of 1873, when he was appointed letter-carrier, by Postmaster General D. W. McGee, serving until Mr. Dowdall was appointed Postmaster under President Cleveland, when he was discharged. In August, 1892, he was appointed Surveyor of Customs, and served in this position until President Cleveland's second term, when he was again "invited to take a rest from public duties," as Mr. Smith puts it. At the town election in Peoria, in April, 1895, Mr. Smith was elected Supervisor and Overseer of the Poor for two years, and at the expiration of that time received the compliment of a re-election. When his second term had expired, Mr. Smith started a real-estate and insurance business which has assumed very satisfactory proportions. Mr. Smith was married in Chicago, Illinois, October 1, 1864, to Miss Mary C. Vanscoyk, a native of Peoria County, to whom on December 21, 1865, was born a son, Howard F. Smith, who has for years been employed in railroad business. On July 19, 1876, they adopted a little girl, aged five years, by the name of Edna M. Lewis, who on April 21, 1888, married Frederick A. Walker. Mr. Smith's wife died on September 17, 1899, and on June 19, 1901, he was again married to Mrs. Cynthia A. Lewis, mother of Edna, the little girl above mentioned. Mr. Smith is a member of the Congregational Church, in politics a Republican, and belongs to the following fraternal societies: G. A. R., I. O. O. F., and the A. O. U. W.

SPITZNAGEL, EDWIN C.; Manufacturer; son of Daniel C. and Caroline (Haungs) Spitznagel, was born in Peoria, September 14, 1871. His father was a native of Hesse, who settled in Ontario, Canada, in 1855, and was there employed as a tinner. A few years later he came to Peoria, and was the first Chief of the City Fire Department. Near the close of the Civil War he recruited a military company which, however, was not called into the service, as the war ended soon after. His wife, who was the daughter of Florian and Albina (Streibich) Haungs, was born in Illinois Town (now East St. Louis), Illinois, and died in 1875. She bore her husband three children. Mr. and Mrs. Haungs were born in Moos, Baden. Mr. Haungs came to Peoria about fifty years ago and, for a time, was in the coopering business, but later built and conducted a hotel at Bridge and Water Streets and kept the Sherman House, on Water Street. He owned twenty-eight acres of land on both sides of Adams Street at Averyville, where he had a vineyard and a summer-garden. His garden was a popular resort and contained a musical clock valued at $5,000, and other interesting attractions, which were burned with the building which contained them, in what was believed to be an incendiary fire set by soldiers. He went to Germany and bought another clock, but returning with it was wrecked on the English coast, barely escaping with his life. Returning to Peoria he died January 12, 1882. His wife died five years later. After the death of their mother, Edwin C. Spitznagel and his brothers lived with their grandfather Haungs. They became the heirs of their grandparents and, after the death of the latter, conducted the vineyard and summer-garden and grew considerable fruit. Alexander J. Spitznagel was Trustee of the village of Averyville for some time. He married Mary A. Fagot, daughter of Peter Fagot, an early settler in Woodford County, who bore him a son named Elmer Florian. Peter Fagot was a native of France, and his wife of Illinois. The Haungs estate was platted in 1892 and much of it has been sold. Edwin C. Spitznagel was in the real-estate business, 1894-99, and then built a planing mill at 2700 North Adams Street, which he has since conducted successfully. He has a handsome residence at 2607 North Adams Street and is the largest tax-payer in Averyville, where he owns sixty pieces of land. Politically he is a Democrat; has twice filled the office of Trustee of Averyville and, in 1898, was elected President of the Village Board. He married Mary A. Spitznagel and they have a daughter named Henrietta Amabel. The family are communicants of the Catholic Church.

SPRENGER, JOSEPH; Cigar Manufacturer; is descended from a family who moved from the Austrian Tyrol to Bavaria during the Thirty Years War. Michael and Margaret Sprenger, his grandparents, were natives of Steinweiler, Rhenish Bavaria, and their son Adam, born December 4, 1829, married Mary Winkelmeyer, of Dresden, Saxony, daughter of Gustaf Winkelmeyer. He came to America in 1845, landing at New Orleans and coming up the rivers to Cincinnati, where he learned the cooper's trade. In 1848 he came to Peoria. Gustav Winkelmeyer was a patriot of "Forty-eight," who escaped to America and was long proprietor of the Waldschloeschen Tavern, in the suburbs of Sheboygan, Wisconsin, where he died. At fourteen Joseph began to learn the trade of cigar-making, at nineteen was the junior member of the firm of Griesser & Sprenger, cigar manufacturers, and, in 1885, joined his brother, William H., in the organization of the firm of Sprenger Brothers, who are now conducting a large and growing business, affording employment to thirty-five persons. Their "Gate Post" and "Porto Rico" cigars are two popular brands which are sold extensively East and West. The output of their factory, in 1900, was 225,000 in excess of that of any previous year. Mr. Sprenger married Elizabeth Krieger at Peoria, September 2, 1880, and they have six children: Joseph Henry, George William, Arthur Lewis, Fred, Myrtle Marie and Elizabeth.

STEELE, HARRISON; Physician and Surgeon; born at Johnsville, Montgomery County, Ohio, October 10, 1836, is a son of John and Mary (Schnaegelberger) Steele. His father was a native of Virginia, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and was a tailor and later a merchant in occupation. He settled at Germantown, Montgomery County, Ohio, about 1825, and later moved to Eaton, where he died of Asiatic cholera in 1849. Dr. Steele's ancestors in the maternal line were Pennsylvanians. He was educated in the public schools, learned the trade of a druggist and read medicine with that accomplished and successful physician, Dr. Hiram Hall, of Altona, Knox County, Illinois, and graduated from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in the class of 1867-68. He practiced his profession at Elmwood till 1874, when he established himself in Peoria, where he acquired a large patronage. He is a splendid type of the old fashioned family doctor who, by devoting the best years of his life to the conscientious practice of his profession, made his patients his permanent friends, and, while accumulating a comfortable sufficiency of this world's goods, always put the humanitarian phase of his calling before the mercenary side. He was an acting assistant surgeon in the Government service during the Civil War, and after the battle of Shiloh was stationed at Mound City Hospital, near Cairo, Illinois. He has been local surgeon for the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad for many years and chief surgeon since the historic terrible Chatsworth disaster. His work and experiences as a railroad surgeon have been most creditable and he ranks with the foremost surgeons of the State. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the Illinois State Medical Association and the Peoria City Medical Society, and has been President of the latter. He has been one of the most active and hardest working physicians and surgeons Peoria has had, and only within the last few years did he begin to protect himself so far as possible from overwork; but he is still bright, active and an earnest student of his chosen profession, and has kept pace with all the remarkable advancement in medicine and surgery which the last half of the past century witnessed. He has almost entirely recovered from a serious illness which came upon him three years ago, the only one in his long career, and appears to have many years of usefulness before him. He was at one time editor of the "Pharmaceutical News," afterward merged in the "Peoria Medical Journal," of which Drs. Murphy, Hamilton and Steele were editors, with Dr. McIlvaine as managing editor. Drs. Hamilton, Steele, Will, McIlvaine and Stout were the first staff physicians of Cottage Hospital, with Dr. Steele as chairman, and they were the originators of that institution. Later Dr. Stout left the city and was succeeded by Dr. Miller. More recently other physicians have been added to the staff until it has twelve or more members. Politically Dr. Steele is a Republican, in religious faith a Congregationalist, and has traveled extensively throughout America. He married, June 17, 1857, Lucinda Jane Rose, daughter of a Christian minister who lived on a farm near Uniontown, Knox County, Illinois.

This became a popular resort and speedily proved to be a very profitable enterprise. Mr. Streibich was married to Sarah Bowers, in Peoria, June 10, 1851. TAYLOR, COL. ISAAC; Real Estate and Loans; was born in Saratoga, New York, April 22, 1836, the son of Isaac P. and Martha G. (Scidmore) Taylor, who were natives of the same place. When he was about one year of age his parents removed to Illinois, first settling at Canton, Fulton County, but two years later located in Trivoli Township, Peoria County, which became their permanent home. Here the son grew up on his father's farm, receiving his education in the common schools until twenty-one years of age, when he spent a year at the Jonesville Academy in his native county in New York. Returning to Illinois he read law for two years with Elbridge G. Johnson, of Peoria, but was not admitted to the bar on account of impaired health, which compelled his removal to Minnesota in the spring of 1861. Having recovered his health, on October 8, 1861, he enlisted at Fort Snelling in Company H, Third Regiment Minnesota Infantry, of which he became Second Lieutenant, being successively promoted to First Lieutenant and Captain, and serving by re-enlistment in the fall of 1864, with the same regiment until April 27, 1865, when he resigned. At the battle of Murfreesboro, Tennessee, in July, 1862, the Third Minnesota was captured by the forces of the Rebel Colonel Forrest, but Lieutenant Taylor, with a comrade, escaped, and he was afterwards in command of the Convalescent Camp at Nashville during the siege of that place. His regiment having been paroled, was transferred to Minnesota, where it was engaged for a time fighting Indians. Lieutenant Taylor, however remained on duty in Tennessee, and the exchange of his regiment having been effected, he rejoined it at Columbus, Kentucky, in time to take part in the advance on Vicksburg of 1863, as a member of the Sixteenth Army Corps under command of Gen. C. C. Washburn. After participating in the siege and capture of Vicksburg, the Third Minnesota took part in various operations in Arkansas, including the capture of Little Rock, and the affairs at Pine Bluff, Jackson and Duvall's Bluff. The regiment having, meanwhile, become a part of the Seventh Army Corps, Lieutenant Taylor, who had been promoted to the rank of Captain on April 15, 1864, was detailed by General Shaler, commanding the Division, to serve as Judge Advocate in the General Court Martial at Pine Bluff, in which he had charge of many important cases during the remainder of his term of service. In April, 1865, he rejoined his family at Trivoli, Peoria County, and soon after went to Minnesota, but remained only a short time, as his health, which had been injuriously affected during the latter months of his service in the army, did not improve. He then returned to Trivoli, but in 1871 became a resident of Peoria, which has been his home ever since. In 1869, Colonel Taylor received the appointment of Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue for Pe-

Joseph Wright

Peoria County, but in 1870 was elected County Treasurer, retaining this position by successive re-elections for eleven years (1870-1881). Other civil positions held by him include those of Canal Commissioner (1885-89) by appointment of Governor Oglesby; Commissioner of Public Works for the City of Peoria (1893-94) by appointment of Mayor Miles and President of the Special Commission to inspect the Chicago Drainage Canal, to which he was appointed by Governor Tanner, in May, 1899, serving until July, 1900. His associates upon this commission were Col. John Lambert, of Joliet, and Col. Al. F. Schoch, of Ottawa their labors concluding with an elaborate and comprehensive report describing the condition of that important work and its ultimate effect upon the navigation of the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers. His fitness for the position and his knowledge on this subject are indicated by the fact that, for fifteen years, he has been chairman of the Illinois Valley Association organized in 1887, which has for its object the securing of legislation by the General Government for the creation of a deep water-way between Lake Michigan and the Gulf of Mexico. Its prospects of ultimate success are foreshadowed by the appropriation of $200,000 passed by the present Congress (1902), for a survey and investigation of the water-ways on the line of the proposed improvement. In 1878 Colonel Taylor was commissioned by Governor Cullom, Colonel of the Seventh Regiment Illinois National Guards, and, in 1898, was chosen Colonel of the "Provisional Regiment," organized in Peoria for service in the Spanish-American War. Although not called into actual service in consequence of the early triumph of the American arms and the conclusion of peace, the regiment remained in camp and in training for several weeks, holding itself in readiness to respond to the call of the Government. On October 15, 1860, Colonel Taylor was married at Trivoli, Peoria County, to Mary Bartlett Bourne, daughter of Melatiah T. and Mary L. Bourne, and they have three children: Alice Lee, now the wife of Charles E. Bunn, of Peoria; Laura B., wife of Herbert Walker, of Chicago; and Isa Dean. Col. Taylor is a Republican in politics, and in religious faith and affiliation a Congregationalist.

TAYLOR, LOGAN HUNTON; Osteopathist; born in St. Louis, August 3, 1864; is the only child of Barry and Elizabeth Ashley (Hunton) Taylor. The father was born in Newport, Kentucky, and the mother in St. Louis, Missouri. Genealogists have traced the ancestry of both families back through generations of prominent people to royalty in Europe. The Taylors were settled in Virginia before the Revolution, and General James Taylor, known as James (6) in the family history, and a cousin of President Zachary Taylor, was a native of Caroline County, Virginia, removing to Kentucky in 1791. He was a gentleman of great fortune, and was highly esteemed in Kentucky. Said Henry Clay: "During the War of 1812, and for many years previous, General James Taylor possessed perhaps more influence than any other man in this part of the country. The zeal and activity of General Taylor during that War, and particularly at its commencement, cannot be estimated." In the spring of 1812 the Government found it necessary to reinforce Detroit. Through the influence of General Meigs and other prominent people General Taylor was induced to act as Quartermaster General of the expedition consisting of some fifteen hundred troops, and all the expenses of the expedition, except the arming of the troops, were paid by General Taylor. This magnificent and patriotic liberality was afterward reimbursed by the Government; but it gave General Taylor great popularity in the West. The mansion at Newport built by General Taylor, which was burnt in 1839 but immediately rebuilt, is the oldest landmark of the kind in that section of the country. "Here he entertained Presidents, heroes, statesmen, orators, great divines and famous actors," says the historian. He married Keturah Moss, who became the mother of James Taylor (7). The General died at the age of ninety-eight, and left a fortune, mostly in real estate, valued at $4,000,000. His death occurred on election day, 1848, and out of respect to the services he had rendered to his country, the poll books were taken to his sick room that he might cast his vote. Slowly and distinctly he uttered these words: "I cast my vote for my kinsman, Zachary Taylor, for President of the United States." Twenty minutes later he drew his last breath. His son, James, born at Newport, Kentucky, married Susan Barry, daughter of the Postmaster General Barry who served under President Jackson. They were the parents of Barry Taylor. Colonel James Taylor, son of the General, took control of the mansion at his father's death. He was an old-time Whig, and a staunch supporter of the Union. Barry Taylor received his education at home, but travelled abroad for information and culture, and visited various countries in Europe. He was a gentleman of leisure, literary and æsthetic. He married Elizabeth A. Hunton, a native of St. Louis, who was born July 24, 1841, a daughter of Logan and Mary (Moss) Hunton. The father was born in Albermarle County, Virginia, in 1806, and the mother at Maysville, Kentucky, in 1818. The maternal great-grandparents of Dr. Taylor were Thomas and Ann (Bell) Hunton, natives of Virginia. His grandmother, Mary Moss, was a great-granddaughter of Dorothea Randolph, the sister of Jane Randolph, who was the mother of Thomas Jefferson. The history of Osteopathy in Peoria begins with the coming of Dr. Logan H. Taylor, who reached the city June 23, 1897. Previous to that date, William M. Lyons, City Collector of Peoria, went to Kirksville, Missouri, for treatment for paralysis. Kirksville, then as now, was the chief seat of the osteopathic science. Mr. Lyons was so greatly benefited that he requested an osteopathic physician should be located in Peoria. In compliance with his request Dr. Taylor came to the city and began the practice of his profession here. His patients from the beginning came from the enlightened and well-informed residents of Peoria, and his business has grown to large proportions. Dr. Taylor attended private schools in Columbia, Missouri, the Pennsylvania Military Academy at West Chester, and graduated from the American School of Osteopathy, after having spent two years at the Missouri State University, and two years at the Missouri State Medical College. Dr. Taylor married Rose Fox McGovock, at Columbia, Missouri, June 24, 1885. They have three children, Robert M., Logan H. and Elizabeth A. The Doctor is a Democrat. In his religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

TEMPLIN, ERNST F. H.; Dyer; is the son of Ludwig Templin, a native of Landeck, East Prussia, and Augusta (Marg) Templin, who died when her son was only nine months old. Ernst Templin was born at Rummelsburg, Prussia, July 5, 1867, and his father was one of four sons of a large manufacturer who carried on extensive dye-works there. Ernst attended school until he was fourteen years of age, and in that time studied Latin and French five years. After leaving school he served three years at the dyers' trade with his father, and then went to Berlin, where he spent two and a half years in the largest dye-house in the world. For three and a half years he traveled as a journeyman very extensively through Germany, being employed in that time in sixteen dye-houses. When he was twenty years old, he entered the army and was in the Grenadier Guards three years, a regiment which had for its honorary Colonel the Czar of Russia. When he was released from the army he took a course of a year and a half in a dyers' school in Berlin. After that until his coming to America in 1893, he worked in the aniline works at Berlin. On arriving in the United States he joined his brother in Chicago, and, for a short time, was associated in business with him, but came to Peoria the same year. Here he worked as a journeyman until 1894, when he became the proprietor of the Star Dye Works, of Peoria, which he has since successfully operated. Mr. Templin belongs to the Turners' Society and the Thalia Theater Club.

THOMAS, MATTHIAS H.; Locomotive Engineer; born in Germany, March 7, 1855, is the son of Matthias J. and Barbara (Roemmer) Thomas, and grandson of Jacob Roemmer all natives of Germany. Matthias J. One of the sons died in infancy; and the names of the children reaching adult age are as follows: John, Matthias H., Casper, Lena, Katharine, Mary Margaret, and Christina. Mr. Thomas was injured while in the service of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, in February, 1872, and died from his injuries March 13, following. His widow is still living. Matthias H. Thomas was married in Peoria, April 20, 1880, to Mary E. Proemeke, and they have nine children: Anna M., Clara M., Joseph M., Frederick B., Carl W., George M., Edmund F., Matthias and Frank—the last two being twins, and both dying in infancy. Mr. Thomas has been in the railway service since 1868, and since 1884 has been in the continuous employment of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway as an engineer. He is a charter member of Division No. 417, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, where he is serving as a member of the auditing board. Politically, he is a Democrat, and he and all his family are communicants of the Catholic Church.

WELLS, HENRY WARD; Attorney-at-Law, was the eldest in a family of five children, four boys and one girl. His father, Colonel John H. Wells, was born in England and came to America when he was five years of age. Colonel Wells married Julia Tracey, of Middletown, Connecticut, a daughter of Dr. E. Tracey and granddaughter of General Ward, who was commander-in-chief of the American forces before the appointment of General Washington. At the time of Henry's birth, 1834, Colonel Wells was a merchant and ship-owner in Pulaski, New York. He became involved in the financial reverses of 1836, and in 1837 removed to Weathersfield, now Ke-waunee, Henry County, Illinois, where his family joined him the following year. He died in 1844, and his widow removed her family to Galesburg to take advantage of the excellent schools of that city. At the age of sixteen, Henry W. Wells came to Peoria and found employment in the store of Pettengill & Babcock, where he remained one year, receiving one hundred dollars for his services. In 1850 he attended the National Law School at Balston Spa, New York, an institution which was removed to Poughkeepsie, where Mr. Wells was graduated in 1853. Returning to Illinois he taught school at Trivoli one term, and in the spring of 1854 entered the law office of Johnson & Blakeley, as a student. In 1855 he opened a law office in Cambridge, Henry County, and soon acquired an excellent practice. At the beginning of the Civil War, Mr. Wells was unable to serve on account of a sprained ankle, but, with the second call for troops, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Twelfth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Upon the organization of the regiment he was made Adjutant, and a few months later was promoted to the rank of Major, being assigned to the Artillery Service on the staff of Brigadier General Manson, which position he held during the siege of Knoxville, Tennessee. He was afterwards made Chief of Engineers and Artillery on the staff of General Tillson, who commanded the defense at Knoxville. Later he was Chief of Artillery on the staff of General J. D. Cox, of Ohio, serving in all the battles from Buzzard Roost to the capture of Atlanta and the brief campaign after General Hood, which took place a month later. In the "March to the Sea," General Schofield, with the 23d Army Corps, which included the command of Major Wells, was ordered to report to General Thomas at Nashville, to assist in the defense of that place. On the way they passed through Franklin, where it was learned that Illinois was organizing a number of new regiments, and Major Wells was encouraged by General Schofield to try and obtain the command of one of them, and gave him leave of absence to return to Illinois and interview the Governor. Governor Yates was at that time a candidate for the United States Senate, and, on account of political reasons, Major Wells was not successful and returned to his command in the army. As it was near the end of the War, he soon resigned his command and returned to his home at Cambridge, and in 1865 removed to Peoria, where he continued the practice of his profession. The following year he formed a partnership with W. W. O'Brien, at that time one of the most successful criminal lawyers in Central Illinois,—Major Wells taking charge of the civil business. The firm were employed in some of the most important cases and soon built up an extensive practice. In 1867 Mr. O'Brien removed to Chicago, and Major Wells formed a partnership with George Kettelle, which continued for a short time, when he became a partner of Arthur Keithley. Since the dissolution of this firm, Major Wells has continued alone in his legal work. Mr. Wells is a Republican, and was a member of the Constitutional Convention which framed the Constitution of 1870, in which body he took a prominent and influential part, his vote rarely missing record on any question that came before that body. He has been a candidate for the Circuit and Supreme Judgeship, but failed of election. Mr. Wells is an author of considerable ability, and his work on "Replevin" is a standard publication, has been cited in the Supreme Courts of the various States as authority, and is now passing into a second edition. His history of the "Schools and Teachers of Early Peoria," though local in scope, is a work of much interest. He is the author of a work on "Mechanic Liens," all but a few copies of which were destroyed in the Chicago fire; and his work on "Patent Law" shows much research and has had an extensive circulation.

Dr. Welsh has practiced the healing art at Spring Hill Sanitarium for twenty years.

WHITE, JOSEPH R.; Manager Standard Oil Company; Peoria; born in Lancaster, Fairfield County, Ohio, September 8, 1835, is the son of Levi and Sarah (Ross) White. The father was born at White's Station, Ohio, where Carthage now stands, May 21, 1798, and died August 21, 1866. He was a Methodist minister and preached forty-four years in Ohio and Indiana. The mother was born at what is now Bound Brook, Middlesex County, New Jersey, March 28, 1805, and died May 4, 1885. The paternal grandparents were Amos and Mary (Wells) White—the former a native of New Jersey and the latter of Baltimore, Maryland. The great-grandfather, Amos White, was of New England stock and descended from English ancestors. The family tradition is that the immigrant ancestor settled in Massachusetts sometime before the Revolution. The maternal grandparents were Joseph and Jane (Harris) Ross, natives of Middlesex County, New Jersey. Both the first and the second Amos Whites were farmers. The second Amos, with his older brother, Jacob, settled in Redstone, Pennsylvania, from which they moved to Ohio, where the brothers were associated in business. Captain Jacob White is repeatedly mentioned in Henry B. Teetor's "Past and Present of Mill Creek Valley." Captain White was born in New Jersey May 2, 1759, was married in 1780, came to Cincinnati (then Fort Washington), in 1789, and settled at White's Station, now Carthage, Ohio, in 1790, where he built a saw and grist-mill that was widely known for many years. He is spoken of as a sturdy, resolute and remarkable man—the foremost pioneer in the settlement of Mill Creek Valley, north of the Ludlow settlement. He built a block house which was attacked, October 19, 1795, by the Indians, who suffered severely in the action. The chief, a man of gigantic stature, was killed by Captain White and buried on his farm. Joseph R. White left the district school at thirteen and attended a select school two years. At sixteen years of age he taught school, and thereafter combined teaching and attending school for seven years, closing his literary studies after attending Belmont College and the National Normal College (now Holbrook's School) at Lebanon, Ohio. Following this he took a course at Grundy's Commercial College at Cincinnati. The following nine years he was engaged in keeping books for wholesale houses in that city. He then became junior partner in the firm of Peoples, White & Company, General Commission and Produce merchants. Four years later he became proprietor of the business, which, as Joseph R. White & Company, he conducted several years. He then spent three years on the road as a commercial traveler. January 1, 1876, he accepted a position with the Standard Oil Company at Cincinnati, and, four years later, took charge of the company's business at Peoria, which he has managed for over twenty-one years. Mr. White was married to Jeannette Epply, in Cincinnati, Ohio, October 6, 1870. She is the daughter of Adams and Elizabeth (Mickum) Epply. Her father was born near Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, and was a wholesale dry-goods merchant in Cincinnati. Her mother was born in the State of Pennsylvania, and was of a commercial family. Mr. and Mrs. White have one child, Alice, wife of Charles H. Downing. She has two children, Willard Ross and Jeannette. In politics Mr. White is a staunch Republican. He was Alderman from the old Third Ward from 1890 to 1892.

Boulware became a member of the firm, and its style was changed to Whitmore, Barnes & Boulware. Mr. Whitmore was Superintendent of Special Assessments and Secretary of the Board of Local Improvements for Peoria from June, 1898, to December, 1900; was appointed City Attorney by Mayor Lynch to fill out the unexpired term of W. V. Tefft, who had been elected State's Attorney, and was the Republican nominee for City Attorney for the ensuing term, but suffered defeat with his ticket. He is a member of the Methodist Church.

WHITTEMORE, CALEB; Whitesmith; born in Thompson, Windham County, Connecticut, August 24, 1817. His great-grandfather was a native of Scotland, and emigrated to New England, where he died at the age of one hundred and fifteen years. His son, Caleb, was born at Thompson, Connecticut, and was the father of Daniel, whose son is the subject of this sketch. All of the above were born at Thompson, where Daniel first saw the light, March 3, 1793. He married Sarah Corbin, of Oxford, Massachusetts, who was born December 7, 1787, and died in his eightieth year. Caleb Whittemore was educated in the public school, and learned gunsmithing at Grafton, Massachusetts. At the age of twenty-three he came to the West by way of New York, Philadelphia and Wheeling, and by the Ohio, Mississippi and Illinois Rivers, to Peoria, where he arrived May 17, 1840. He spent that day and Sunday seeking a relative whom he hoped to find, and informing himself about the country. He arrived on Saturday, and on Monday opened a gun shop, with one exception the only one between Chicago and St. Louis at that time. To this business he has given his entire attention, with the exception of the period between 1866 and 1871, when he was engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements. He is now doing work for the children and grandchildren of his early patrons. Nine persons and considerable machinery are employed in his shops, where all sorts of small articles are made and repaired, making it one of the busiest places in the city. In 1899 Mr. Whittemore was absent from his bench four days, three of which he spent in visiting and one on account of sickness. The shop which he now occupies was built at No. 306 Fulton Street forty years ago. He has been a member of the School Board one term, and was Alderman one term, while Doctor Hamilton was Mayor. Mr. Whittemore married Maria Russell, of Peoria, April 7, 1841, who died April 4, 1901. She was the daughter of Smith B. Russell, who came to Peoria in October, 1835. Mrs. Wilber, who is still living, is the daughter of Zadoc and Polly (Kendall) Benton. Her father was born February 9, 1790; his wife was born March 10, 1794, and died February 15, 1815. After attending grammar school, Henry P. Wilber came to Peoria in 1853, and secured his first employment as a clerk in the establishment of Amos P. Bartlett. For eleven years he remained in the employ of that gentleman. In 1864 Mr. Wilber associated himself in the merchant tailoring business with Thomas B. Cooke, under the firm name of Wilber & Cooke. In 1870 he sold out his interest to his partner, and entered the office of Andrew J. Hodges & Company, at that time engaged in the manufacture of harvesters at Pekin, Illinois, all the office work being under his care. Until 1890 Mr. Wilber continued at this work. That year he took charge of Mr. Hodges' business interests in Peoria, in which he continues to the present time. Taking it all together, Mr. Wilber has been thirty years in the employ of Mr. Hodges. In October, 1867, Mr. Wilber was married to Anna E. Hodges, and they have had four children: Belle, who is now Mrs. C. H. Thorn, of Chicago; Nellie G.; Mittie H., who died at the age of ten years; and Florence B. John Edward Wiley was a farmer in early life, was married August 19, 1851, and at once started west by the Erie Canal to Buffalo, where he took a steamer for Detroit, and from that city by stage to Peru, Illinois, thence down the Illinois River to Peoria, finishing his trip to Brimfield by stage. He engaged in sheep-raising and farming, and owned three hundred and twenty acres of land in Brimfield Township, where he had at one time over five thousand head of sheep, which business proved profitable while under his personal management. In 1856 he removed to the village of Brimfield, where he built a home and engaged in the hard-

They had four children: Solon W., who was a banker in Woodhull, Illinois, and died April 21, 1876; Clinton M., who is a resident of Peoria; Marion E. (deceased); and Walter L. After Walter L. Wiley returned from college he assumed the management of the home farm for two years. In December, 1882, he was employed by David Heryer in the Exchange Bank of Brimfield. Peters, of Indiana, who had purchased the institution from Mr. Heryer. A general store was opened in connection with the bank and, after two years' residence in Brimfield, Mr. Peters sold his banking interests to Mr. Wiley. Mr. Wiley had the confidence of his friends and neighbors, and continued the business along conservative and systematic lines. He erected a modern building, equipped with all the appointments of a first-class bank, which is a credit to the village and county. He was married July 2, 1900, to Rachel K. Read, daughter of Frank W. Read, of San Francisco, California. They have one son, Edwin Read, born January 14, 1902.

From Paterson he moved to Indiana, where he was engaged in agriculture with his brother-in-law. During the last year of the Civil War he was in the Government service guarding prisoners in Indianapolis, and in 1865 came to Illinois, settling in Jacksonville, where he found employment in the engine-room at the Deaf and Dumb Asylum. His last active years were spent in farming. He had one son and three daughters. His first wife died, and he married again. His second wife still survives. William J. He was in the employ of a street-car company seven years, after which he entered into the employment of the Chicago & Alton Railroad. Beginning as a brakeman on the Jacksonville & Southeastern Railroad, now a part of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis. He has gradually been advanced, after three years' service as a brakeman, becoming a local freight conductor, and four years later a passenger conductor. Since 1886 he has had charge of a passenger train on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad, making a daily run from Peoria to St. Louis. Mr. Winchester lost two fingers of his right hand in 1879, while engaged in the line of his duty, and in the spring of 1880 lost the thumb of the same hand in a similar accident. While in the service of the Jacksonville Southeastern Railroad, August 3, 1886, he lost his right foot by an accident that kept him off the road until the following May. In 1893 he settled in Peoria and, in 1895, built his present residence at No. 123 Fredonia Avenue. WOLF, LOUIS PHILIP; Newspaper Editor and Publisher; born in Nassau, Germany, December 16, 1851, the son of Carl and Katherina (Lorsbach) Wolf; was educated in his native country, and, in 1868, at the age of seventeen, came to America. He first found employment in rafting on the Mississippi River, but afterward adopted the vocation of a long line of ancestors, for which he had been qualified by a thorough education in his native land, by accepting a position as interpreter and teacher of modern languages in the German-American Institute at Chicago, and, later, in the Academie-Francaise in the same city. The latter position he subsequently exchanged for that of teacher in a private school established by himself, for the instruction of German emigrants in the English language and republican form of government. Mr. Wolf next drifted into journalism, first as a correspondent of German and American papers, and next as editor of the "Volksfreund," a German Republican paper which he established at Lincoln, Illinois, in 1875—this being, at the time, the only German Republican paper in the State. Two years later (1877) he came to Peoria to assume the editorship of the "Deutsche Zeitung," but after the absorption of the latter by the "Demokrat," in conjunction with Joseph Wolfram and William Brus, in the spring of 1879, he established the German Republican daily, "Die Sonne," of which he has since continued to be the editor and is at present sole proprietor. A Sunday issue from the office of "Die Sonne" bears the name of "Die Glocke." Mr. Wolf held the position of President of the Board of Trustees of the Eastern Illinois Normal School at Charleston, Illinois, during the erection of the buildings for that institution, under the administration of Governor Tanner, and did much to secure the construction of one of the most satisfactory group of buildings—both as to internal arrangement and architectural design—for the purposes for which they are intended, in the State. The service which he rendered in this connection has been highly appreciated by the people in that section of the State, and met the earnest commendation of leading educators. Mr. Wolf's standing in the ranks of the Republican party, with which he has been associated during his journalistic career, is indicated by the fact that he was a prominent candidate for the nomination of State Treasurer in the Republican State Convention of 1900. January 25, 1879, Mr. Wolf was married in Lincoln, Ill., to Miss Augusta Klifus, a native of Germany, who has spent considerable time in St. Petersburg, Russia. An accomplished writer and a capable woman of affairs, she has proved an efficient aid and helpmate in the management of his journalistic enterprises.

By his first wife he had six children: Eve, Lizzie, Joseph, Andrew (who died at the age of twenty-one years), John and Ferdinand. Mrs. Wombacher died when Ferdinand was about five years old. Mr. Wombacher married for his second wife Mrs. Dolwitz, who was born Clara Ellker, and by whom he had three sons. Ferdinand Wombacher began life for himself when he was only eleven years old, and for five years was employed as a farm laborer, when he came to Peoria, to take a po-

Returning to Tazewell County, he worked for a year on a farm, then became a bridge carpenter, and had charge of a Springfield & Peoria bridge gang for two years. His work was especially to build the small bridges and look after the piling between Peoria and Pekin. He was manager of the piling work of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, between Peoria and Bushnell; was foreman of bridge carpenters on the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Line, and held a similar position for four and a half years on the Sante Fe Railroad, as also upon the Gilman, Clinton & Springfield, for the latter building the bridges across Salt Creek, where he put in a mile of trestle-work. He was also employed on the railroad bridge at Dubuque a year. After working as a house carpenter for a time he was appointed superintendent of the lower wagon bridge at Peoria, retaining this position for four years, during which he had charge of extensive repairs. His son, William, Jr., was born in Portland, Maine, and for many years engaged in the foreign export trade. At twelve years old he entered the employ of the Black Ball line of packet-ships plying between New York and Liverpool, remaining until he was thirty-eight, and for some years being a mate on one of the ships of that line. He was also engaged in the Oriental trade, and visited many Eastern ports. For some years he had his home in Bangor, Maine, and in 1852, removed to Racine, Wisconsin, going very soon after to Henry, Illinois. He married Mary Kraber, a native of Germany, and lived to be eighty-two years of age, his widow living to be eighty-three. Solomon York began life as a steamboatman at the age of seventeen, and at twenty was Captain of the "Sam Vail" on the Forky Deer River in Tennessee. For many years he was engaged in the Canal and Illinois River trade between Chicago and St. Louis. In 1882 he bought the "Gray Eagle," making daily round trips between Peoria and Henry until 1887.

From 1883 to 1885 he was controlling owner of the steamer "C. W. Anderson," running between Peoria and St. Louis. In 1887 he bought the "Rescue," which he used in the Peoria and Henry trade until September, 1891. The following year he had built the steamer "City of Peoria," then the finest boat on the Illinois, capable of making fourteen miles an hour. This boat he used between Peoria and Henry until the close of 1898. In the fall of that year he exchanged this boat for "The Alps," a popular resort of four acres densely covered with shade trees, and fitted up for picnics and festivals, contiguous to Glen Oak Park, which he now manages. Captain York has been engaged as a boatman from his fifth to his fifty-second year, and now holds his twenty-fourth license as master and pilot, which was issued in 1897 for the Mississippi River and its tributaries. Captain York was married to Martha Lewis in Peoria on August 2, 1870, by whom he has had three children: William Thomas, Edith (who is the widow of Edward Stewart), and Ora (now the wife of Frank D. Fox).

YORK, WILLIAM F.; Steamboat Captain; born in New York City, July 16, 1839; is the son of William and Mary (Kraber) York, of whom a sketch appears in connection with that of Captain Solomon York. William York came west with his parents when about ten years of age, and attended school at Henry, Illinois, where they first settled. After a few years there he began boating on the Illinois and Michigan Canal, which he followed until he became employed in various capacities on the Illinois River. Since the age of twenty-one he has held a license as master and pilot. He has sailed the "Tom Stevens," the "Albatross," the "City of Henry," the "Gray Eagle," the "C. A. Anderson," the "James Wilson," the "Lotos," and the "Rescue." In several of these he was financially interested, and of some the sole owner. Success has attended his efforts in this line, and he has never met a serious accident. Leaving the Illinois River, he took a position as a master of a tug-boat at Chicago, which he held four years. Of late he has owned the steamboat "Lola," which, with a barge, he used in the excursion business about Peoria. A large number of row-boats and other river craft were owned by him, and held for rent. They were sold in the summer of 1900. Captain York has been a navigator on western waters for fifty years. In addition to his boat property he owns four residences in Peoria, which he rents. At the present time he holds the position of Harbor Master in Peoria, to which he was appointed in 1899, for two years. He married Miss Jennie Jones, of Cambridge, Illinois, in 1888.

In 1879 he went West, and visited different States and Territories. From 1881 to 1891 he was a locomotive engineer on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, with headquarters, most of the time, at Stuart, Iowa. In April, 1891, he returned to Peoria, and opened a meat market. This venture proved very successful, and he has continued in it to the present time, being now located at No. 940 Garden Street. Mr. Zerwekh was married to Maggie Buckholz in Peoria, November 24, 1881, where she was born September 19, 1858, a daughter of Louis and Mary (Neue) Buckholz. Her father was a Prussian, and her mother a Bavarian. They were married in Chicago in 1854, and are now living in Peoria. Louis Buckholz is a harnessmaker. Mr. and Mrs. Zerwekh have had five children: Louis W., Elsie M., Freddie C., Edward H. and Grace A., of whom, three are still living—Elsie M. having died September 29, 1889, in the sixth year of her age, and Freddie C. January 28, 1890, in his third year—both deaths occurring at Stuart, Iowa. Mr. Zerwekh is a Republican, and was elected Township Supervisor in 1899, and re-elected for two years in 1900. A strip of country between Peoria and South Peoria was known as No Man's Land, because it was within the jurisdiction of neither of those municipalities. In order to have it properly governed, it was incorporated as the Village of West Peoria, February 19, 1900. Mr. Zerwekh was made President of the Village Board, and occupied that position until the village was annexed to Peoria, April 17, 1900. Mr. Zerwekh is a Master Mason, a member of Temple Lodge, No. 46, of the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Royal Neighbors.

ZIMMERMAN, ANDREW; Saloon Proprietor and Bottler for the Pabst Brewing Company; was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, November 5, 1838, the son of Charles Philip and Anna K. (Ditwig) Zimmerman, who were natives of the same city. Left an orphan at a very early age, he came to the United States when only fourteen years old, descending the Rhine and crossing the ocean to New York, and locating for about a year in Buffalo. Then coming to Peoria he learned the shoemaker's trade, which he later followed for about two years at Memphis, Tennessee. When the Rebellion broke out he returned to Peoria, and in 1862 enlisted in Company E, Eighty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry. For three years he was at the front, and participated in the battles of Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Mission Ridge, Resaca, as well as many other fierce and memorable engagements. Near Dallas, Texas, he was wounded so severely as to be confined to the hospital for eleven months, and rendered unfit for further service. Returning to Peoria, he opened a saloon, and, since 1881, has been the sole bottler in Peoria for the Pabst Brewing Company. He is also agent for the Sheboygan Mineral Water Company. Mr. Zimmerman was married in Peoria, in June, 1869, to Bertha Seibold, and they have six children: Ida (now Mrs. Otto Boyer), Anna (who is Mrs. William Goebels), Andrew J., Minnie, Julia and Freda. Mr. Zimmerman is an Independent Republican in politics.

ZWEIFEL, WOLFGANG; Merchant and Contractor; born May 2, 1849, at Grabs, Werdenberg, Canton St. Gall, Switzerland. His grandfathers were Wolfgang Zweifel and John Forer. Frederick Zweifel, his father, was born at Grabs, August 18, 1819, and died May 15, 1899. Anna Forer, the wife of the latter, was born in Grabs, August 13, 1823, and died December 26, 1885. Frederick Zweifel and his family came to America via Amsterdam, Hull and Liverpool, arriving at New York December 28, 1863. Wolfgang Zweifel learned the carpenter's trade, and worked at it during the greater part of twenty years, being in the employ of F. Zeitz. In 1888 he began a contracting business, in which line he has since been very successful. In 1882 he built a one-story store at No. 217 Butler Street. This he afterward enlarged to a handsome two-story building, 20x70 feet, with residence, having his workshop and barn in the rear, making a tidy and commodious place. At the time of its building this was one of only two stores on the street, and was nearest the city limits. Wolfgang Zweifel and Henrietta Jacobs were married in Peoria, November 3, 1872. They have seven children: Anna S., Henrietta, John, Fred, Clara, Emelia and Florence. Mrs. Zweifel is the daughter of Henry and Salome (Arnhoeld) Jacobs, natives of Alsace, who came to America in 1849, and were married in Peoria in 1852. Mr. Jacobs was killed in the War of the Rebellion, and died in the service, March 27, 1862, while serving as a member of Company K, Seventy-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

PART THIRD

CHAPTER I.

AKRON TOWNSHIP.

BY HENRY C. HOUSTON.

Geographically, Akron Township occupies the middle ground in the north tier of townships in Peoria County. Its surface ranges from high rolling land to the level, flat, corn-producing soil. Originally it was covered with prairie grass, excepting a narrow strip of timber along the western border. Two small streams, one in the eastern, the other in the western part of the township, constitute the principal watercourses.

At present no town, village or city stands wholly within Akron. On the west side of the township the corporate limits of Princeville include a strip one-fourth mile wide, and one mile long. Within this territory are found two grain elevators, two lumber yards, the Rock Island & Peoria Railway Company stock-yards, and a number of good residences. The public highway on our east line serves as the principal street through the village of West Hallock. On the Akron side stand the church (Seventh Day Baptist), parsonage, village store kept by E. Wheeler, and Post Office, the cheese factory and a number of residences. The original settlers of West Hallock were largely from the State of New York and were remarkable for their industry, intelligence, sobriety and thrift. Their descendants are maintaining the reputation of the fathers. The new station named "Akron," on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, will be wholly within the township, unless its growth greatly exceeds the expectations of its founders.

HISTORICAL AND POLITICAL.

The first permanent settlement made was on Section 7, in the year 1831, by Hugh Montgomery.

During the same year Daniel Prince and James Morrow settled on Section 31, and Thomas Morrow built a cabin on Section 18. For some years following, the growth in population was not rapid. The new homes were confined to the western part of the township, near the belt of timber. Gradually the pioneers ventured on to the open prairie and opened up farms, where clearing off forests was not the first step in farming. Others seeing the advantage of fields without stumps, and that the prairie farmer survived the winters, there was a more rapid advance in settlement, but it was not until well toward 1860 that all the land was occupied and improved. In fact the census of 1860 gave a larger population than has ever been reported since. The war of 1861-65 called many of our young men from their homes, and when their term of service closed they went west to make homes for themselves. The activity in railroad extension westward at the close of the war opened up thousands of acres of rich farming lands, and many of our farmers who had settled on forty or eighty-acre farms, saw a splendid chance for selling their small farms to their prosperous neighbors, and going on to cheaper land west of the Mississippi. This disposition to sell the small farm at a high price and move on to western land that could be bought at much less per acre, is responsible for the gradual decrease in our population from that time to the present.

During the earlier years of our history, but little interest was taken, or activity manifested, in political matters. Up to the time of the adoption of Township Organization, the doings of this people were a part of the county records and are not available for this article. The first town meeting under Township Organization was held at the house of Ebenezer Russell on April 2, 1850.

Simon P. Chase served as the first Moderator, and Richard Kidd as Clerk. At this election 16 votes were cast, and all but three of the voters were elected to fill some township office. Benjamin Slane was elected Supervisor, and to him belongs the honor of being Akron's first representative on the Board of Supervisors. The following year there were two tickets in the field, both having the name of Benjamin Slane for Supervisor, the remainder of the tickets being political. In the town meeting of April, 1854, a move was made for building a town house of the following dimensions: "26x18, 11 ft. high, said building to be located near the center of the township." The same year the house was built, and, until 1866, served the double purpose of school house for District No. 5, and for town meetings. In 1865 the voters of the town, feeling the need of a larger house, voted to join with District No. 5 in the erection of a two-story building, the lower part to be used for school purposes, and the hall above for public gatherings. This arrangement continued until June, 1900, when the town bought the interest of School District No. 5, and moved the building on to another part of the lot.

In politics, Akron has been nearly evenly divided between the two parties, the tenant population ever holding the balance of power. The annual changes in this class of inhabitants account for the victory and defeat of first one and then the other party, as shown by the election returns. Akron is one of the townships where political forecasts are uncertain. During these forty-five years of political history, the general elections have always been quiet affairs, but many of the town meetings have been veritable political battlegrounds. In the early part of the year 1868, unusual interest was taken in elections, when, between January 25 and April 5, seven elections were held to vote upon many different propositions to aid in building certain proposed lines of railroad. The first six met with a negative vote, but, on the latter date, the result stood, For subscription, 124 votes; Against, 122 votes. As soon as the vote was announced a company of the property holders organized to contest the election. This action threw the case into the courts, and, from the latter part of 1868 to February, 1873, this case, in some form, was to be found in the Circuit or Supreme Court. During this time the "Akron Railroad Case" was entered on the docket of the Circuit Court of Peoria, McLean, Woodford and Schuyler Counties, and in the Supreme Court at Ottawa. After more than four years of waiting, the Supreme Court handed down a decision that the election was illegal, and that the Supervisor could not be compelled to issue the $30,000 in bonds voted at that election. In the progress of this trial many distinguished men appeared as counsel. Among these were Judge John Burns and George C. Barnes, of Lacon, Judge Hezekiah M. Wead, Henry B. Hopkins and Robert G. Ingersoll, of Peoria, and Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, of Bloomington.

While this case was pending, political lines were wholly disregarded. The issue was "Bond" and "Anti-Bond,"—the latter being always victorious by large and increasing majorities at each town meeting. In a short time after this decision was rendered, peace was restored, and party tickets and practices were resumed.

The present officials of the township (1902-03) are as follows: H. C. Stewart, Supervisor; Charles A. Timmons, Town Clerk; Alex. Gray, Assessor; James P. Byrnes, Collector; William Pullen, Frank Kraus and George W. Gruner, Road Commissioners; George Rowcliff and Charles A. Timmons, Justices of the Peace; Peter Currey, Constable; George Rowcliff, M. D. Potter and G. L. Runner, School Trustees; Henry C. Houston, School Treasurer.

EDUCATIONAL AND RELIGIOUS.

At an early period in our township history the sturdy pioneers set about to provide such educational facilities as their means and situation would permit. The first building for this purpose was built a short distance southeast of the Rock Island & Peoria depot at Princeville. This was used on Sunday as a place of worship, and the remainder of the week as a school room. A few years later this building was burned, and the next school house to be built was near where the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway crosses the public road, one mile east of the west line of the township.

Soon after, the township was divided into three school districts. District No. 1 commenced on the west side, two miles from the north line, thence east in a zig-zag line to the southeast corner of the township. The school house referred to above was in this district. District No. 2 and District No. 3 were six miles long and from one to three miles wide. In some of these districts school was kept, for a few months of each year, in some farmer's home. As soon as the township was fairly settled, it was redistricted into nine districts, each two miles square, in which condition they remain at present, excepting where a small amount of territory adjacent to some village has been taken to form a Union District. We now have nine frame school houses, in good condition, with seating accommodations for at least thirty scholars each. Two of these buildings have been erected within the past three years. The bonded indebtedness of these districts amounts to $1,020. Wages of teachers increased steadily from $10 to $12 a month, with board among the patrons in early days, to $65 per month in 1876. Since then the wages have declined to the present time, when the highest monthly wages reported are $45. The largest enrollment and attendance was between 1870 and 1880, when there were 345 pupils enrolled out of 409 persons of school age, or 87 per cent of the total. In the report of 1901, 344 pupils are returned between the ages of six and twenty-one, and a total enrollment of 216, or 60 per cent. This falling off is largely due to the superior advantages offered by schools in the city or large towns.

Only two church buildings stand upon Akron soil. One, the property of the Seventh Day Baptists, is located on the east line of Section 24. The other is owned by the Apostolic Christian Church (commonly known as "Amish") and is situated on the southwest corner of Section 3. The Seventh Day Baptist Society was organized September 3, 1852, through the efforts of the late Anthony Hakes and a few others of like faith and zeal. In 1870, under the leadership of Rev. Wardner, the Society, having become strong in membership and means, decided to build a suitable house of worship. The move met with universal favor, and ere the close of the year they had completed and paid for their present church building, which cost between $5,000 and $6,000. Rev. R. B. Tolbert is at present serving this church as pastor. This society has a Christian Endeavor Society and a Sabbath School in connection with its church work.

The Amish church was organized about 1870, and, for a number of years, their services were held at the homes of the members in geographical rotation. In 1880 they erected the building now used as their place of worship. This house is provided with vestibule, audience room and a large and commodious kitchen fully equipped with range, dishes, tables and chairs. Two services are held each Sabbath and between these a simple meal is served in the kitchen. One thing worthy of mention and imitation is the splendid provision made for the comfort of teams driven to church. They have more expensive and a greater number of horse-sheds than are to be found around any other public building in the county. Christian Streitmatter served as pastor from the organization to 1895. Since then the pulpit has been filled by Ludwig Herbold and Frank Wortz, the latter filling that office at present.

The scarcity of church buildings in the township is not a true index of the religious character of our people. Many of our citizens are regular attendants and supporters of churches near the border line in adjoining townships. With two churches at Lawn Ridge, two at Edelstein, three at Dunlap, three at Princeville and one at Stark, our people are well supplied with church privileges, and as large a percentage of our inhabitants are church-going as those of any other country township.

IMPROVEMENTS AND INDUSTRIES.

The last half century has witnessed a wonderful transformation in public and private improvements. The sod house and log cabin of the pioneer have given place to comfortable and commodious residences. Around these are to be found large, well-built and well-kept buildings for the protection of farm animals and storage of products. All of the ponds and swamp land that formerly produced nothing but bull-frogs and ague, now annually yield large crops of grain. The mud-road and log-bridges have been, in a great measure, replaced with gravel roads and steel bridges or culverts. At present all the principal water courses are spanned with iron bridges or supplied with steel or cement culverts. We now have fifteen miles of gravel road, and the mileage is annually increasing. Our township expends about $2,000 annually for road repair and improvement.

Our mail facilities have kept pace in the march of improvement. Up to 1859 our people were dependent upon Princeville and Southampton for post office accommodations. These offices were first supplied with a weekly mail, then with a tri-weekly. About 1860 a post-office, named "Akron" was established four miles east of Princeville, and T. P. Burdick was the Postmaster. Three years later the office was moved one-fourth mile farther west, and William Saunders was appointed Postmaster, which office he held until 1866, when the office was discontinued. In 1870 this office was re-established near the center of the Township, with Mrs. Deming serving as Postmistress. About one year later she resigned and William Houston was appointed her successor. This position he held until the office was discontinued. Mail for the Akron office came by stage, which made three trips a week between Peoria and Toulon. After re-establishment the mail was carried daily over the Princeville and Southampton star-route. We now have a rural delivery route from Princeville, covering eighteen miles of road and supplying a large number of our people with daily mail at their doors.

In 1871 the first railroad, the Peoria and Rock Island, entered the township. Since then the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway has been built through the township from east to west near the center. Last year the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad ran a line across our town a half mile west of the eastern border. This road has located a station named Akron near the southeast corner of the township. There are now seventeen miles of railroad in the town, and all but one school district has the benefit of railroad property to help pay school expenses.

Nearly all our inhabitants are engaged in agricultural pursuits, many of them owning the land which they till. These people are industrious, intelligent and enterprising. Very few, indeed, are the persons who call upon the county for aid. Although our voters are loyal to party, they are in no way office-seekers, for, during the past thirty years, not one of our citizens has held any County, State or Federal office. In rich, fertile soil and tillable acreage, in substantial and convenient farm buildings, in intelligent, industrious and peaceable people, in good roads and bridges, in railroad mileage, in Sabbath observance and church attendance, in freedom from litigation and paupers, Akron Township stands second to none in the county.

ALFRED R. ALLEN.

In all his walks of life, whether as a farmer, Government employe or typical American citizen, Mr. Allen observed those principles of correct living and business integrity which inspire esteem and affectionate regard in friends and associates. The descendant of a family for many years connected with agricultural and commercial interests in the more conservative Eastern States, he was born in Connecticut, October 21, 1829, and died in Peoria June 24, 1901. His parents, Hollis and Catherine (Searles) Allen, were natives, respectively, of Connecticut and Rhode Island—the paternal grandfather, Simeon Allen, having been born in Connecticut, and the maternal grandfather, Benjamin Searles, being a native of Rhode Island. Hollis and Catherine Allen were the parents of eight children, three of whom are living: William H., Catherine and Simeon H.

Alfred R. Allen was educated in the early subscription schools of Illinois, to which State his parents removed in 1837, settling first in Princeton, Bureau County. In 1839 the family located in Medina Township, Peoria County, and here Alfred R. was, for several years, engaged in farming. Subsequently he entered Government employ as keeper of the store at Peoria, and, during the years that he faithfully discharged his responsibilities, he formed many friendships with the leading politicians and public men of the day, by all of whom he was held in high esteem. The last years of his well-rounded life were somewhat freed from the ceaseless activity which characterized his youth and middle age, and were spent at his home at Lawn Ridge, Illinois.

June 29, 1897, Mr. Allen married Isabella Anderson, a native of Illinois, and daughter of William and Jane (Hall) Anderson, who came to America in 1844, and located in Medina Township in 1851.

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

Among the many large hearted Englishmen to whom the fertile prairies of Illinois proved not only a pleasant home but a source of merited reward, was William Anderson, whose death, April 22, 1896, served to recall to his friends and associates his numerous admirable traits of character and untiring devotion to the general public welfare. His youth and early manhood were associated with the place of his birth in Northumberland County, England, his natal day having been April 3, 1815. After availing himself of the advantages of the public schools, he learned and followed the trade of a miller with considerable success, and was thus employed until the emigration of himself and family to the United States in 1844. In 1836 he married Jane Hall, also a native of Northumberland County, and of this union there were seven children: Edward, who is deceased; Joseph; Jane; Mary; William; Isabella, and John H. Edward, who was a farmer by occupation, died at his home in Akron Township, June 4, 1900. The family were represented in the Civil War by the gallant services of Joseph Anderson, who served from 1861 until the close of the conflict.

In America, William Anderson located first in Peoria, and, in 1851, began a five years' farming experience in Medina Township, after which he settled in Akron Township, where occurred the death of Mrs. Anderson, June 2, 1874. In 1887 Mr. Anderson, then seventy-two years of age, retired from active life, and with his daughter, Isabella, settled in Lawn Ridge, where his latter days were spent in peace and tranquillity. He was a financier of more than ordinary ability, and possessed the fine faculty of being able to grasp the opportunities within reach of his industry.

JEROME C. HAWLEY.

Chief among the factors of success in his life, Mr. Hawley attributes a willingness to work, a fixity of purpose and unflinching honesty in dealing with his fellow men. As a farmer in Akron township since 1866, he has continually demonstrated his principles of high living and scientific farming, and his property, with its modern improvements, its fine buildings and labor-saving machinery, is a credit to the county and to the excellent management of the owner. Of English descent, Mr. Hawley was born in New York State, June 9, 1832, and was reared and educated in Vermont, whither his parents, Nathan and Chloe A. (Whiteside) Hawley, had removed. The parents were also natives of New York, the mother having been born in Oswego County, and the father lived until 1836, being survived by his wife until 1879. The paternal grandparents, Elisha and Betriah (Buck) Hawley, were born in Vermont.

Jerome C. Hawley was one of two sons in his father's family, his brother, Omar C., being now deceased. In the broadest sense of the word he has risen upon his own unaided efforts, no partial fortune having turned his steps into easy channels. June 11, 1863, in Peoria, he married Sarah Wilkinson, daughter of John and Sophia (Bradley) Wilkinson, natives, respectively, of England and Maryland, the former having been born in 1803. Mrs. Hawley is fourth in a family of eight children, the others being: William, Richard, Catherine, George, Martin, Anna and Joseph. Mrs. Wilkinson died in 1850, and her husband lived until 1861. To Mr. and Mrs. Hawley have been born four children: Alvin J., who married Rose Stillman, of Marshall County, Illinois, has two children, Leroy S. and Robert A., and is a farmer in Akron Township; Clarence E.; Charles N.; and Nettie, who married Harry L. Ingram, of Wyoming, and died February 24, 1891, leaving one son, H. Jerome. Mr. Hawley has been an important element in the general development of Akron Township, and his public-spirit may be relied upon in any emergency. Politically he is a Democrat, but has never desired or worked to obtain official recognition.

JAMES RICE.

There are few men in Illinois, or elsewhere, whose immediate and remote intimate connections are so closely related to events of unfading national interest, as are those of James Rice; or who, like him, are permitted, through the medium of those near and dear to them, to be reminded of a medley of happenings, ranging in breadth from the landing of the Pilgrims—through the stately coming and going of model matrons and patriot sires dwelling for centuries in a conservative little town of Massachusetts—to a personal sympathy for, and an appreciation of, the unspeakable woes of that homeless nation, Poland. Tradition saith that the far-off Rice forefathers lived among the sheltering hills of Wales, and that their wills and marriage certificates were signed Ap Rice. At any rate, they were men of expanding propensities, and not without ambition, for they are later heard of in Herefordshire, England, where the founder of the family in America was born. As a guarantee of their right to be on the passenger list of that historic craft, the Mayflower, Mr. Rice has in his possession a trunk which brought to the land of liberty the belongings of this special voyager, and which has since been retained as a precious heirloom. In the quaint and very old town of Marlboro, Massachusetts, the legendary family lore and justifiable pride of birth have never been allowed to slumber, but have been discussed and fostered by succeeding generations since 1682. In this same town of Marlboro the paternal grandfather, Martin L. Rice, was born on the day of the surrender of Cornwallis, in 1781, and his son, Jonathan W., the father of James, was born there in 1811. Jonathan W. Rice married Sarah M. Dennis, who was born January 11, 1822, a daughter of Joseph and Rachel (McClelland) Dennis, the former born in Kentucky in 1800, and the latter a native of Cincinnati, Ohio. Of the two sons born to Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Rice, Elisha, the brother of James, married Elizabeth Stewart, and they have seven children: J. Willis, Benjamin, Burton, Fred E., Florence E., Sarah E. and Henry T.

James Rice, who upholds the honor and maintains the prestige of his family as one of the foremost farmers, and liberal, progressive and enlightened citizens of Akron Township, was born in Medina Township, Peoria County, Illinois, June 16, 1845, and was educated in the public schools of his neighborhood. Through his marriage in Belvidere, Boone County, Illinois, with Pauline Soboleski, he became allied to that famous Polish family, the most distinguished representative of which was John (III.) Sobieski, King of Poland. Paul Soboleski, the father of Mrs. Rice, imbued with the high courage, the exalted patriotism, augmented by the splendid culture which has ever characterized the noble-born of Poland, was the incarnation of love for his native land, proving himself one of the truest appreciators of her manifold gifts, and one of the proudest, most unrelenting mourners at the bier of her inevitable and mournful destiny. He was born near Kieff, Russia, June 29, 1818, and through his veins flowed a seething hatred for the oppressive Russians, whose greedy tyranny trampled the Polish flag in the dust, while the world wept in unison at the hideous spectacle of a nation steeped in poetry, romance and ideality, victimized by a brutal barbaric power, whose law is possession and whose means is force. Through complicity in the Polish Rebellion, Paul Soboleski was forced, as a political exile, to seek an asylum in America, his departure from his native land being contemporary with the flight of the Hungarian patriot, Louis Kossuth, which was a time of great political commotion throughout Europe. As was the case with all political exiles, his property and that of the family was confiscated, but his parents remained in Russia, and his mother died while nursing the sick in various over-crowded prisons. Arriving on American soil, he applied himself in New York to learning the language of this protecting country, which, when accomplished, made the seventh tongue that he spoke with fluency, and the seventh literature with which he had become familiar. After leaving New York he lived for a time in Philadelphia, and later in Wisconsin, and his death occurred May 30, 1884. Thrice married, his first wife was Mary L. VanZandt, his second, Elizabeth Udall, of Wisconsin, and his third, Julia M. Beckwith, of Cazenovia, Madison County, New York. Four children were born into the family, Pauline M., Ada B., Elizabeth H. and James B. The unusual attainments of Paul Soboleski drew to him many distinguished friendships, and among those who best knew of his gifts and enjoyed the advantages of his diversified intellect, was Madam Modjeska, the actress, herself a woman of rare culture, and William Cullen Bryant, the poet. He was a writer of brilliant conception and descriptive power, and was the author of "Poets and Poetry of Poland," and an exhaustive study of his illustrious kinsman, called "John (III.) Sobieski, King of Poland."

While Mr. Rice has been one of the chief promoters of all worthy enterprises in Akron Township, his most emphatic efforts have been directed towards the improvement of the school system of his locality. For fifteen years he was a member of the Board of School Directors, and the School Manual, now in use in the State of Illinois, corresponds closely to that drawn up by Mr. Rice and Professor Bede, of Chillicothe, about twenty years ago, for use in District No. 3 of Akron Township. Since the adoption of the Manual a very high grade of scholarship has been maintained, which no doubt accounts for the lasting quality of its underlying principles. Politically Mr. Rice is a Republican, and for eighteen years has been a member of the Peoria County Central Committee. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Rice have been born six children: Luther J., Calvin E., Inez M., Maude S., Edwin F. and Paul S. Luther J. was elected town clerk in the spring of 1895, and after serving two years was re-elected in 1898, and again in 1899. Mrs. Rice died November 1, 1901.

BACKES, JOHN; Farmer; born in Berne, Germany, June 24, 1842; received a common-school education. His parents, Jacob and Catherine (Glue) Backes, were born in Germany; his father died within nine months after his arrival in the United States. They had two children, Jacob and John. Mrs. Backes' second marriage was with John Schaub. They had five children. Mr. John Backes married Theresa Ernest in Peoria, October 24, 1871. They had seven daughters: Annie M., Kate, Matilda A., M. Elizabeth, Mary J. and Amelia, and Christina R., who died at the age of two years. Annie M. is the wife of Frederick Hessling of Richwoods Township. They have two sons, Charles J. and John A. Mrs. Backes' father, Albert Ernst, was born in Hesse, Germany, November 20, 1818, where he was educated. He was a soldier in the Mexican War and in the War of the Rebellion. He married Theresa Miller, of Peoria. They had thirteen children: A. Marie, Theresa, Albert, Kate, Joseph (who died at the age of twenty-four), Matilda, Josephine, Molly (who died at twenty-five), John, Robert, Bertha, Annie and Julia. Mrs. Ernst died September 11, 1897. The family are members of St. Rose's Roman Catholic Church of Dunlap. Mr. Backes is an Independent Democrat.

BLISS, ABNER; Farmer; born in Chautauqua County, New York, May 23, 1828; educated in Peoria County. Zenas G., father of Abner, was born May 12, 1793, in Shaftsbury, Vermont; Mabel (Gillett), the mother, in New Hartford, Connecticut, July 3, 1798. They had twelve children: Almon, Fiducia, Laura, Amanda, Abner, Alfred, Loretta, Rozetta, Cyrus, Amos, Edward and Phineas. Mr. Bliss was a soldier in the War of 1812. The first known of his family was Thomas, who was born about the year 1550, in Devonshire, England. He died in 1635. Zenas G. died December 25, 1868; his widow, June 1, 1882. Abner married Lydia M. Miller, in Princeville, March 31, 1850. They had eight children: Fiducia M., Melinda J., Albert L., Alvin Z., Emma M., Lucy A., Clarissa E. and Annie L. Fiducia M. married Henry Affaulter, of Akron Township. They have five children: Maud, Bertha, Beulah, Edith and Mabel—the last two are twins. Melinda J. was married four times; first, to Frank Wells, who died some years ago. They had one daughter—Lorena, now Mrs. Cook, who is the mother of three children: Mabel, Ernst H. and Alvin T. She married, for her fourth husband, Joseph Wilson. Albert L. is a farmer in Virginia. He married Effie King, of Knox County, Illinois. CHAPTER II.

BRIMFIELD TOWNSHIP.

BY L. L. GUYER.

Brimfield Township (10 N., R. 5 E.) is one of the richest agricultural sections of Peoria County. It doubtless has more good arable land than any other Township, there being not over forty acres that cannot be plowed and cultivated. There is an abundance of bituminous coal underlying the surface of the whole township in five or six veins, some of which are being successfully worked. Two groves are found in the township, one of which, situated in the southwesterly part, is called Atkinson's Grove, from the first settler, the other French Grove, west of the Town of Brimfield; besides which, there is a point of timber one-half mile northeast of the village. There are quarries of lime and sandstone, and an abundance of living water.

Philip Atkinson is considered to have been the first settler, he having arrived in the township in 1834. He was a Protestant Irishman and well educated, as were his whole family. He settled in the small grove which goes by his name. Two of his sons became Methodist ministers, Philip, the youngest, became a college professor and afterwards wrote a work consisting of four volumes on the subject of electricity.

In the year 1837 a number of new-comers settled in the township or in its immediate vicinity. Among these may be mentioned L. S. Booth and family who settled in the west end of Atkinson's Grove; Levi Jennings, a Quaker, who settled on the section on which Zion's Church now stands; John Tucker and family, Isaac Cutter and family, Daniel Simons and family,—all of whom settled in French Grove; and John Sutherland, who settled on the northwest of French Grove near the present Presbyterian Church. Northeast of Brimfield there was another group of settlers, among whom were William Compher, who represented the District in the Legislature in 1838-40. Others were Jacob Willis, who was the first blacksmith and the man who opened the first coal bank; a Mr. Martin, whose son, still living, was the first child born here; Thomas Johnson and family; a Mr. Schenck and family; David Shane; Hiram and William, sons of William Shane, Sr., with their families, and Isaac Harrison and family.

As the village of Brimfield, which early became the center of population, is on the extreme eastern edge of the township, it has been thought not out of place to mention some who were not within the township, but who were within the old precinct of Brimfield. East of the village, along the State road, was the following group of settlers: Thomas Martin, Wm. Lambert and family, Clark D. Powell, who was one of the County Commissioners and a Justice of the Peace, a man of liberal education and a very pleasing speaker. He also had a brother, Thornton T. Powell, who with his family settled in the same vicinity. About two miles southeast of the village was a small colony from Pennsylvania consisting of Roswell, Asahel and Isaac Walker, with their families; Isaac Harkness, a prominent citizen who afterwards removed to Harkness Grove in Elmwood Township; Edson Harkness, a brother of Isaac, with his son, Wright, and family, and Ichabod Rowley and his family.

In 1836 Jacob Snyder, with a large family, H. N. Wiley, John F. and Hiram Wiley, with their sisters, Elvira and Marcia, William Lynch, William Berry, Daniel Stansberry and family, and Mr. Hoyt, Noah Alden, a very old man with two sons, Hiram and Noah, all arrived.

In 1837 the following came: James Berrian, Thomas N. Wells and family, and, in 1838, Bradford Hall and his family, David Sanborn, John W. Perran, Samuel and George Pulsipher, Mr. Marvin, Captain Fisher, S. H. Judson, John Shores, Edward Hayward and M. D. Villings.

On May 6, 1836, a town was laid out on Section 25 called Cambridge, but the stage-route from Peoria to Burlington having been located one-half mile north of it, another town was laid out by Abner Clark (June 9, 1836) on Section 24, called Charleston, and the former was abandoned. The first settlers in Charleston were Woeniger and Jacob Van Houten,—the latter being the first Postmaster. The mail was then carried from Peoria on horseback.

When Mr. Guyer came to Charleston in December, 1836, he found two families living here,—Van Houten and Woeniger—the former on lot 10, block 16; the latter, on lot 6, block 16. The proprietor of the town had an empty log-cabin which had been moved from Charleston, into which Mr. Guyer moved with his stock of goods, which was the first general stock of merchandise in the town. He boarded with Van Houten until he moved away, leaving Mr. Guyer, for company, a dog and a cat. About the same time Woeniger also took his departure, leaving Mr. Guyer alone to "keep bach" with only the dog and cat for his companions. Two or three months later, Dr. Prouty, a young man from New Hampshire, came and took up his abode with Mr. Guyer. About that time James Wolcott came to look at the country, bought Van Houten out and returned to New York for his family, who, upon their arrival, took their first meal with the two bachelors. Early the next spring Mr. Guyer built a two-story log-house, into which he moved his goods and "kept bach" above stairs.

Mr. Wolcott's coming here brought quite a number of enterprising and intelligent families. Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott were both very intelligent and refined people, and their house was the center of all the social gatherings of the village. They had a son, James P. Wolcott, and a daughter, Miss Lucretia, both very accomplished young people, who made the social circle of the house very attractive. Amongst others who had the pleasure of enjoying these social gatherings at the Wolcott home may be mentioned the following well-known citizens of the county: Mr. and Mrs. Thomas N. Wells, Mr. and Mrs. Washington Cockle, Mr. Charles Wells, Mr. and Mrs. William Fessenden, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Belcher, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Judson, Mr. and Mrs. William Tobey, Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell, Hon. and Mrs. W. W. Thompson and two daughters, Mr. and Mrs. David Sanborn, Hon. S. S. Guyer of Rock Island; Mr. L. L. Guyer, Drs. Prouty and Kellogg, Mr. John M. Wiley and H. N. Wiley and their two sisters, and Mr. Edward Hayward.

Mr. Wolcott was a man of more than ordinary talents, at one time a manufacturer in Wolcottsville, Massachusetts, from which place he moved to New York City, where he was in partnership, for a time, with Mr. A. S. W. Goodwin, as brokers in merchandise. He was a good public speaker, and it is said that his speeches would compare very favorably with some of the best made in Congress. He was a Whig in politics, and quite a strong politician. He was a brother-in-law of the Hon. W. W. Thompson, who was a Democrat, and their discussions of the political questions were often quite animated and interesting. Mr. Wolcott died in 1853, and Mrs. Wolcott in 1862.

Daniel Belcher arrived in the winter of 1838 and, in the following spring, erected the first frame house, which was kept as a hotel by him and the members of his family, who survived him, for a period of about fifty years.

In 1838 Charleston received quite a stream of immigrants, among whom were A. S. W. Goodwin, with his family, one of whom, his aged mother, was the first person who died and was buried in Charleston; William Tobey, the far-famed manufacturer of the steel plow; Daniel Caldwell, L. A. Jones and his brother Darius, the first carpenters, with their respective families. In 1839 came Charles H. Freeman, William H. Fessenden, Curtis Cady, James M. Wiley and others.

From 1840 to 1850 the surrounding country filled up very rapidly, and new farms were laid out and improved in every direction. During the session of the Legislature, to which Hon. W. W. Thompson had been elected, the name of Charleston was changed to Brimfield, the name of his native place in Massachusetts.

About this time a lyceum was formed at Charleston, which was the leading one in this part of the State. Its officers were W. W. Thompson, President, and L. L. Guyer, Secretary. The meetings and debates were very spirited and attractive, the most prominent members of the Peoria bar often attending them. Its prominent members were James Wolcott, W. W. Thompson, James P. Wolcott, A. S. W. Goodwin, William Compher, Clark D. Powell, Thomas N. Wells, William H. Fessenden, David Sanborn and Samuel Pulsipher. Of these, W. W. Thompson, William Compher and David Sanborn—as also, Washington Cockle, another resident of the vicinity—became members of the Legislature; Clark D. Powell was County Commissioner; William H. Fessenden removed to Peoria and there became Postmaster; James L. Riggs, another resident, became Sheriff of the County (1850-2), removed to Peoria and there laid out two additions which bear his name.

The first election was held in 1837, at the home of Mr. Cutter in French Grove. This was a precinct election, which, at that time, included Brimfield and part of Jubilee Townships. John F. Wiley and Clark D. Powell were elected Justices of the Peace, and Samuel Johnson, Constable.

In 1838 the Frink & Walker stage line was started, carrying the mails from Peoria westward. Postage was paid at the end of the route—that on letters, carried 300 miles or over, being 25 cents; under this distance, 18¾ cents or less, according to distance. During the rush of immigration the coaches were of the finest construction, drawn by finely matched and richly caparisoned teams of four horses each. Charleston was the first station from Peoria where horses were changed, and, as the sound of the stage horn was heard, the inhabitants turned out to witness the grand equipage round up in magnificent style in front of Belcher's tavern. Mr. Belcher was a dignified and affable landlord, who was always ready to welcome passengers to the best table a prairie country could set—a table that would put to blush many in the more pretentious hostleries of the present day.

As other means of travel—such as steam-boat lines, canals and railroads—began to open up, the stage lines were deserted of all through travel, the splendid coaches were withdrawn, and those of inferior grade, drawn by two horses, were substituted.

The first school house was built in 1839. The first teacher was Miss Ellen Bartlett, of Peoria.

Among the arrivals this year were Charles H. Freeman and Captain Fisher.

The first marriage in town was that of Mr. L. L. Guyer and Miss Elvira M. Wiley, Rev. George Wilkinson performing the ceremony.

According to the census of 1900 Brimfield has a population numbering 667.

CHURCHES.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH OF BRIMFIELD was organized on Saturday, May 4, 1850, pursuant to the recommendation of a council of ministers and members of the neighboring Baptist Churches, which convened here on the same day. The constituent members were nine in number, named as follows: Eli Bailey and Elizabeth Bailey, Dorothy Getty, Deborah Alden, Elizabeth J. Aiken ("Aunt Lizzie") of war fame, and Elizabeth Layman (by letter), and A. E. Martin, A. Taylor and Matilda Taylor (by profession). On Sunday, the day following, five persons were received by baptism, the ceremony being performed by Elder Simeon G. Miner, of Canton. They were: Lewis Atkinson, Eddy Baker, Eliza Baker, Mrs. Margaret Martin and Miss Jane Layman. The above fourteen composed the whole membership of the church when it was received into the Illinois River Association, which met in Peoria, June, 1850. Lewis Atkinson, who had formerly been a Methodist preacher, was the first pastor of the church; Elder Bailey, its first Deacon, and Adonijah Taylor, its first Clerk, all of whom were elected at the organization of the church. Mr. Atkinson served at first as licentiate, and was regularly ordained in July, 1850. The number of members in 1851, as reported, was eighteen.

Early in the year 1852, the church resolved to erect a house of worship. Five trustees were elected, a building committee chosen and most of the timber delivered on the ground that spring. During that conference year ten members were added to the society. The frame of the building was raised in August, 38x60 feet in size, and the church was finished in 1854, at a cost of $3,000. The church increased in 1853 to thirty-five members. In February, 1854, Rev. E. N. Jencks was called, and entered upon pastoral duties April 1, following.

THE FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH was organized on the 29th of March, 1847. Rev. J. Blanchard, then President of Knox College, being Moderator, and Rev. Milo N. Mills, of Newberg, assisting. The following persons entered into church covenant upon that occasion: Bradford Hall and wife, Catherine Hall, Margaret Cummings, Julia Ann Jones, James Delano and wife, Elizabeth Delano. On April 10th following, seven other persons were added to their number. They held their services either in the school house, or at the Methodist Church for some time.

Some time late in 1852 this society resolved to build a church. The heavy timbers were cut, hewed and squared in the woods near by. The work progressed slowly. In May, 1854, the new church was dedicated, under the pastorate of Rev. J. E. Roy, D. D., now Field Secretary of the American Missionary Association of the Congregational Church, and located at Chicago. The building was 50 feet by 36 feet, well built, and was a handsome structure for those times. Its first pastor was Milo N. Mills, followed in order by George Sill, John Somers, L. H. Parker, J. E. Roy, H. W. Cobb, M. W. Fairfield, J. Vincent, L. Benedict, I. W. Atherton, C. E. Leach, A. J. Drake, W. Wakefield, A. J. Marshall, H. P. Chase, L. P. Norcross, J. E. Storm, E. W. Jenney, Wm. Parker, J. S. Onion, I. L. Rozelle, and the present pastor, W. H. Jordan, who began work here in August, 1894. Some of the pastors here named remained but a short time, three of them only a few months.

In February, 1899, after much preliminary discussion, the society resolved to build a new church; the passage of time had done its work on the old building, and a violent wind storm, in May, 1896, had injured it considerably. The building was sold and removed one block away, to a lot near the present hotel. The new structure was started on the site of the old one, made ready for use and was dedicated on November 26, 1899, free of debt, having cost close upon $5,000. It is a gem of beauty; forty-two feet square, with basement rooms, in modern style of architecture and well equipped in every respect with furnishings and furniture. The membership never was, nor is it now, very large; but it is a loyal, faithful organization of intelligent and a generous people.

This society has an excellent and commodious parsonage close by the church, and the entire property is in good condition, of great service to the church, and a credit to Brimfield.

THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Right Reverend Philander Chase, Bishop of Illinois, began to preach in Guyer's Hall in the year 1838, and continued to preach there frequently until the year 1845, when the parish erected a new stone church. In the year 1844, Rev. Mildoller came to this place from Brooklyn, New York. He was a very able preacher and preached here several times. Contrary to the customs of the country, he was the owner of several valuable tracts of land lying to the south of the village, on one of which he formed the design of erecting a parish church. To this end he had worked amongst the people outside the village, had obtained a subscription of about $600 and had had a board of trustees appointed. Mr. Guyer having learned of this project, promised the minister some assistance if he would build in the village. This he declined to do, saying he could get all the money he needed in Brooklyn. Mr. Guyer communicated his information to Mrs. Belcher, who was a member of Bishop Chase's church, to whom she, in turn, told what she had heard. The Bishop, having been promised assistance if he would order the church to be built in Brimfield, did so. The church was erected in 1845. It is a stone building and still stands. It was the first church built in the village, or nearer than Jubilee College. Rev. Mildoller never returned, but died soon after leaving here.

CATHOLIC CHURCH, BRIMFIELD.—Previous to 1840, but few Catholics lived in the vicinity of Brimfield, and those few lived in sod houses. Others soon followed the pioneers, bringing some means with them, and erected better dwellings. They were first visited by Rev. Rauh and Rev. Rosetti, in succession, from Peru, Illinois; then by Father Brady, Father Doyle, and Father Drew, stationed at Peoria. Until 1852, divine services were held in several private houses. In 1852 the Catholics had increased to thirty-five. They concluded to erect an edifice for divine worship at Alec McDonald's place in Scotland Prairie, but by the advice of Rev. Father Brady, changed their purpose and built a little church at Brimfield, 22x36 feet, Rev. Father Brady being the first priest to officiate. In 1864 Rev. Theodore Vanderpoel attending, an addition 22x36 feet was built. January 13, 1867, he was succeeded by Rev. M. Lyon. Services have been regularly kept up ever since.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The Rev. Zadoc Hall organized the first class in this village, November 1, 1836. He was the first Methodist preacher who held meetings in the place. The class was formed at the house of Jacob Snider, and consisted of the following members: Jacob Snider, Catherine Snider, Samuel Snider, L. L. Guyer, Martha Johnston, Margaret Johnston, Catharine Johnston, David Stansberry, Susannah Stansberry, Susan Stansberry, Ephraim Hoyt, Francis J. Hoyt, Isaac Harrison, Sarah Harrison, Eliza Martin, Susannah Wills, Benjamin F. Berry and Polly W. Berry. Samuel Snider was chosen leader of the class. Brother Hall, who preached every four weeks, had twenty-eight appointments on his circuit, traveling about 300 miles. This was called the Kickapoo Mission, the district embracing the entire north part of the State.

In the fall of 1837 the Illinois Conference held its annual session, and John St. Clair was returned as Presiding Elder of this District. The name of the mission was changed from Kickapoo to Wyoming; and John Johnston was sent as "circuit rider." The pulpit was supplied by local preachers a part of the time. In the fall of 1838, the conference sent S. W. D. Chase as Presiding Elder to this District, and this work was changed from Wyoming Mission to Peoria Circuit. The Rev. John Brown supplied the pulpit with the aid of the local preachers. The preachers had to travel over more territory than the Presiding Elders do now, and their pay was from $60 to $100 per year. The spring of the same year Mr. Guyer organized the first Sunday-school that was established here, and probably the only one between Peoria and Burlington, Iowa.

In the fall of 1839, the name of the District was again changed to Knoxville District, and two preachers were sent to the Peoria Circuit. According to the custom of the Methodist Episcopal Church, each year, or every two years, witnessed a change in the ministers. In the winter of 1846-47 a religious revival was experienced, resulting in a large addition to the church. The corner-stone of a new church edifice was laid by Rev. A. E. Phelps in August, 1848, and the following year the structure was finished and paid for. It was of brick, 28x44 feet, and well finished and seated, forming a pleasant contrast with the log houses and barns in which the society had previously worshipped. The same year the name of the circuit was changed from Peoria to Brimfield, and became a two weeks' circuit with two preachers, thus giving this church preaching every Sabbath. From this time the membership increased rapidly, insomuch that the new church became too small, but the congregation did not feel able to build a larger one until after the Civil War. In 1876 a brick addition was erected, new pews and new pulpit were procured and the entire church carpeted, the whole costing $2,200. This church served the purposes of the congregation until the year 1900, when it was torn down and a new church, modern in style, was erected, heated by a furnace, lighted with gas manufactured on the premises and carpeted throughout. The whole cost (over $7,000) has been paid with a surplus on hand.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH was organized on May 3, 1854, by Rev. John Turbett and Ruling Elders, James Yates and W. H. Wilson, as a committee from Presbytery. David Lucas, George L. Lucas and Ira Blanchard were chosen Ruling Elders. This organization continued only until 1865, when it was dissolved by action of the Presbytery. A reorganization was effected May 15, 1870, by Rev. J. H. Smith, Rev. J. R. Reasoner, and Ruling Elder John Cameron as a committee of Presbytery. There were fifteen members, William Johnson being chosen Ruling Elder. In 1871 a house of worship was erected at a cost of about $4,000. Rev. James H. Smith, Rev. J. L. Martin, Rev. S. C. Scott, Rev. Mr. Carson, and Rev. McLeur have been pastors. The church had not been prosperous as a Presbyterian Church, and, having united with the Congregationalists, was dissolved in the year 1900.

MORROW PATTERSON REED.

The splendidly improved farm belonging to Morrow Patterson Reed in Brimfield Township, represents the successful accomplishment of a man who has known how to utilize the opportunities by which he was surrounded, and to turn to proper account every advantage awaiting the farmer in one of the garden places of the State. A commodious and well planned residence enhances the value of the property, as do also the convenient barns and general buildings, and the most modern and scientific agricultural implements to be found on the market. The general atmosphere of thrift, neatness and system, so apparent to every observer, bespeaks the character of him whose well-directed energy and progressiveness have placed him among the foremost citizens of the County, and made him one of the most influential and substantial of its promoters and counsellors.

M. P. Reed

Authentic records of the lives and deeds of the Reed ancestry terminate in the haze of Irish history, but of the descendants, of whom there is any recollection, it is known that they were successful tillers of the soil in a country bowed down with oppression and taxation, and that they were loyal to Erin, to their families and to their occupations. The great-grandfather, James Reed, was born in Ireland, as was the grandfather, Clement Reed, the latter being the first to represent his family in America, to which he emigrated in the early part of the last century. He located near Wheeling, West Virginia, and eventually died upon the farm which his industry had made a paying investment, and where his five sons were born, one of whom was George W. Reed, the father of Morrow Patterson. George W. Reed was a carpenter and builder by trade, and, with an appreciation of the greater promise of Illinois, removed to Peoria in 1834, where he worked at his trade until his death in August, 1849, at the age of thirty-nine years. He married Johanna Patterson, who was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, and died in August, 1857. Of this union there were six children: Mary, Elizabeth, Morrow P., Thomas R., Louisa and Johanna.

When eleven years of age Morrow P. Reed removed to the farm, where he carried water to the workmen in the field. The following year his services commanded six dollars a month, and so industrious was he that his wages were increased each season, shifting from twelve to thirteen, and finally fifteen dollars a month, the highest price he was ever paid for farm labor. In 1861 he removed to Missouri, and, in partnership with an uncle, managed a farm with indifferent success, the experiment terminating with the breaking out of the war, at which time they lost all that they possessed. In September, 1861, Mr. Reed came to Brimfield Township, and after suffering from an intermittent illness, traveled in Warren and Mercer Counties, selling nursery stock in 1861 and 1862. In the spring of 1862 he became more ambitious, and, going to French Grove, purchased two horses with which he commenced to farm on Section 2, Brimfield Township. By dint of hard work and economy he made considerable headway, his chief source of revenue being corn, which he was discerning enough to hold until the price went up. With the money thus gained he purchased, in 1864, eighty acres of land on section 3, Brimfield Township, to which he has added from time to time, until accumulating his present large property.

February 11, 1865, Mr. Reed enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served until September of the same year. With the return of peace he resumed the management of his farm, and February 22, 1866, in Peoria County, married Jane A. Whittaker. From then until the present time he has been prominently before the public, his career as a broad-minded and incorruptible politician being especially worthy of emulation. A Republican all his life, he voted first for Abraham Lincoln, and has since endeavored to maintain and dignify the principles and issues of his party. As a leader in county affairs he has held many positions of trust and responsibility, and has on many occasions, refused to be a candidate. In 1882 he was appointed Supervisor, and has been re-elected ever since, the greater part of the time without opposition. His administrations have been well received throughout, his service being emphasized by many needed and wise reforms and improvements in the county. In 1887 he was elected chairman of the Board of Supervisors, and was twice reelected. By Governor John R. Tanner he was appointed Commissioner of the State Asylum for the incurable Insane at Bartonville, and his services were retained after the organization of the Board, and for many years he was chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and is fraternally associated with the Modern Woodmen of America, the Knights of Pythias, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Peoria.

Mrs. Reed, who is a daughter of John C. Whittaker, who came to Brimfield Township in 1846 and died in Millbrook Township, is the mother of twelve children, nine of whom are living: George W., Susan A., Johanna L., Nettie J., Lottie B., Ella O., Henry A., Clara E. and Margaretta P.

Solomon Brooks, the grandfather on the maternal side, was born near Walpole, Connecticut, and married Amelia Fisher, who was a native of Grafton, Vermont. William A. Arnold's parents were William G. and Mary F. (Brooks) Arnold, both born in Chester, Vermont. They had a family of four sons and three daughters who attained maturity. On February 1, 1844, they arrived in Illinois, after an arduous overland trip from the East. They were three months on the way, spending some time visiting relatives en route. There was snow on the ground and they suffered considerably from the rigorous weather. The father was killed, April 22, 1844, by lightning, while standing in the doorway of his home. William Augustus Arnold was but seventeen years old when his father died, and the work of the farm depended mainly upon him. With a determination which characterized his after life, he struggled along, and soon proved his ability by carrying on the business successfully, and remained on the farm until his mother was comfortably situated in her home. At the age of twenty, he worked one year at $11 per month. He saved $100, with which he bought eighty acres of school land at $2 an acre, going in debt for the remaining amount. He married Louisa N. Fisher, June 6, 1850. They have three children: Augustus W.; Lydia L., wife of Ernest G. Edson, and Mrs. Mary C. Robinson. Mrs. Arnold was the daughter of Amos and Lydia (Stoddard) Fisher, of Woodford County, Illinois, where they were among the first settlers coming from Vermont in 1842. After he was married, Mr. Arnold erected a home and improved his farm, now containing one hundred and twelve acres, and is regarded as one of the most successful farmers in the township. He is a Republican. He belongs to the Baptist Church, of which he is deacon.

For four months he worked on a farm for his brother Hiram at fifteen dollars a month. He then rented a farm for three years, and afterwards purchased eighty acres of prairie land for three dollars and twenty-five cents per acre, upon which he made a payment of fifty dollars. Mr. Baker has been very successful. He had a farm of 360 acres in Brimfield Township, and owned property in the Village of Brimfield. He was married, December 28, 1837, in Massachusetts, to Eliza Worcester. There were four children: Stephen, who resides in Iowa; Martha A., deceased; Helen, deceased, married John McLaughlin and removed to Nebraska, and Eddy, deceased. Dr. O'Hara had two sisters, Susan and Elizabeth; both married Scotchmen of distinguished family. The parents of Mrs. O'Hara were John and Sarah (Campbell) O'Hara, who were born in Ireland and came to America when about thirteen years of age. BARNHILL, JOHN; Farmer; born at West Jersey, Stark County, Illinois, February 22, 1850;

The paternal grandfather was Philip Barnhill and the maternal grandfather, William Hann. Philip Barnhill moved his family from Pennsylvania early in the nineteenth century to Knox County, Ohio, where they engaged in farming. Later John Barnhill and his family moved to Missouri, but the slavery agitation and unsettled condition of business caused them to remove to Stark County, Illinois, whence they came to Peoria County and settled in Elmwood, and later in Brimfield, where the older members of the family died. John Barnhill started in life without money. He rented farms and saved his earnings, with which he bought a farm in Stark County. He sold that and with the proceeds bought a farm in Elmwood, which he improved and, eleven years later, sold it at an advance of four thousand dollars. He then purchased a farm of three hundred and twenty acres in Brimfield Township for twenty-eight thousand dollars, upon which there was a brick residence found to have been built at a cost of over thirteen thousand dollars. The issue of Mr. Blundy's first marriage was one child, Sarah Jane, now Mrs. McQuoin (or McCowen) to whom he presented a farm in Kansas, where she now lives. Mrs. Jane Blundy died many years ago. For his second wife Mr. Blundy married Caroline Prior, a native of Kent, England, born in 1843. They had two children; Edward Bixby and Charles Lannes. Mrs. McClellan was the daughter of George and Ann Edwards. With the assistance of his wife, Mr. McClellan began to improve the home place, and, in course of a few years, had a splendid homestead. He died January 7, 1880. He was a Republican, and could always be depended upon for active service in the interest of his party. He was well known to the old settlers of this township as a man upright and fair in all his business undertakings, and would not countenance, in any way, any transaction that was not straightforward and honest. He was social and companionable and had many friends. He often told of his experience in walking from Illinois to Cincinnati, Ohio. It was in midwinter, and, despite the extreme cold, he managed to keep ahead of the stage, the principal means of travel in those days.

MOORE, JOHN D. (deceased); Farmer; born in Belmont County, Ohio, November 29, 1854; educated in Peoria County. His father, Samuel Moore, was born in Belmont County, and his mother, Isabella R. (Rusk), in Morgan County, Ohio. They were married in Mansfield, Ohio, where they resided until 1861, when they removed to Peoria County, Illinois, and settled on a farm in Logan Township. They came to Brimfield Township in 1870, and took up their residence on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres. There are three children: Lois I., Seba E. and Frances K. Mrs. Moore was one of a family of ten children of Jeremiah and Maud (Kinder) Harker, all still living. Mr. Harker came to Illinois in boyhood when Peoria was a trading post for the Indians, the family first settling ten miles southwest of Peoria at what is now known as Harker's Corner; he is now deceased. Mrs. Harker resides at 212 Lincoln Avenue, Peoria. Mr. John D. Moore was a Presbyterian, and in politics, a Prohibitionist. He served as School Director from the time he was twenty-one years of age. He died December 6, 1893. Jane (Rusk) Clements, a sister of Mr. Moore's maternal grandfather, lived to be 104 years old, and well remembered sitting on the knee of George Washington when she was a child.

PACEY, ADDISON; Editor; Brimfield; born in Waterloo, Iowa, March 21, 1864; educated in Brimfield. His paternal grandfather, Brown Pacey, and his maternal grandfather, James Hayes, were natives of England. His parents, Thomas and Elizabeth (Hayes) Pacey, came from England, the former born in Lincolnshire, and the latter a native of Salisbury. Thomas Pacey was a minister in the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and was ordained in Iowa, where he preached several years. He came to Brimfield in 1866, and died June 23, 1892, at the age of sixty-three years; his wife died January 11, 1888. Addison Pacey's first occupation was farming. He taught school four years, from 1885 to 1889. In the latter year he and J. E. Pope bought the "Brimfield News," Mr. Pacey finally becoming the sole proprietor of the paper, which he has conducted successfully, the paper having a large circulation. It is ably edited and its moral and intellectual character recommends its columns to all. Mr. Pacey married Frona Herriott in Brimfield, November 21, 1890. They had four children: Mildred E.; Harold, deceased; Leland, and Walter. Mr. Pacey is a Republican, and for several years has been and is a member of the Republican County Central Committee. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and Royal Neighbors of America. He is one of the enterprising citizens of the community, advocating anything beneficial to the people at large.

RADLEY, GEORGE (deceased); Farmer; was born in Devonshire, England, in December, 1811; received his education in his native country. His parents, George and Elizabeth Radley, were born in England, where the father died. He was a farmer. He married Miriam I. Clussman in Princeville, August 11, 1845. They had six children: George, now of Dunlap, Illinois; Mrs. Isabella M. Cone (deceased), Jane E. (deceased), William H. (deceased), Mrs. Miriam Congrain (deceased), and Charles C. Mrs. Radley's parents were George and Jane (Millward) Clussman, natives of Nova Scotia. They came to Princeville in 1812. They had a large family. Mrs. Radley (now deceased) being the last surviving child. Her grandfather, George Clussman, was a Surgeon in the War of 1812. Her mother came from an old English family whose ancestors belonged to the nobility of England. Charles C. Radley resides on the home farm in Elmwood, to which he has added eighty acres. He is the father of four children: William, Laura, Bertha and Thurlow. Mr. Radley (senior) purchased a farm of one hundred and twenty acres in Radnor Township, on which his son George now lives. George has two daughters, Cora M. and Bell. Mrs. Isabella M. Cone left three sons: Everett, Wilber and Ray. Mr. Radley was a very prosperous farmer. He belonged to the Episcopal Church, was a Republican, and held a number of local offices.

REED, JOSEPH (deceased); Farmer; was born in Marshall County, West Virginia, in 1825, and died, April 15, 1899. His parents were John and Louisa (Caldwell) Reed. The father, a native of Ireland, was for some years a Judge in West Virginia. The mother was born near Wheeling, West Virginia. Joseph Reed came to Brimfield Township in 1850. After his marriage he lived on a rented farm four years, and then bought a farm in Sections 5 and 6. At the time of his death he owned about two hundred and fourteen acres of land. He married Elizabeth R. Henderson, at West Point, Iowa, February 24, 1852. She is the daughter of William and Sarah (Cox) Henderson, and was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, March 16, 1829. The paternal grandparents were George and Rachel (Dempsey) Henderson, the former a native of Ireland and the latter of the United States. The maternal grandparents were William and Jane (Stewart) Cox, natives of Ireland. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Reed are: John H., William C., James E., Lester H., Alexander T., Loretta J. (now the wife of Albert McCoy), Emma Virginia (wife of Robert Carter), and two deceased—Alice, wife of Robert Pierce, and Sarah Louise. Mr. Reed was, and Mrs. Reed is, a member of the Presbyterian Church at French Grove.

SILLOWAY, I. W.; Carpenter and Farmer; born in Berlin, Washington County, Vermont, November 5, 1832; son of Charles C. P. and Clarissa (House) Silloway, natives of Vermont. Charles C. P. Silloway was a carpenter all his life, but owned and resided on a small farm. I. W. Silloway came to Peoria County in 1855, and purchased a farm on Section 6, Jubilee Township, which he later sold and removed to Iowa, settling on a farm in Warren County in that State. Soon after the beginning of the Rebellion he enlisted in Company A, Sixteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, serving until the close of the war. He then settled at Yates City, where he worked at the carpenter trade four years, afterwards returning to Peoria County, where he bought land on Section 8, Jubilee Township, and engaged in farming and carpentry. He afterwards settled in Brimfield, where he purchased a house and lot and lives retired from active business. Mr. Silloway is a Republican, and has served several terms as a member of the Town Council, of which he has been President. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. April 22, 1837, he married Lydia Huey, in Peoria, who was born in Ohio County, Virginia, December 14, 1837, daughter of Virgil and Ruth (Gilmore) Huey, natives of Pennsylvania and of Scotch-Irish descent. They moved from Virginia to Illinois in 1849 and settled at Brimfield. Mr. Huey was a wagon-maker and farmer and owned a farm on Section 1. Mr. and Mrs. Silloway have four children: Clara E., born April 5, 1861, wife of Thaddeus Chamberlain; Ruth E., born April 11, 1864, wife of Charles Radley; Arden H., born December 1, 1879, married Nellie Farnum; and Edna Faye, born August 16, 1880.

The family are members of the Presbyterian Church.

TUCKER, HOMER CLINTON; Farmer; Brimfield Township; born in Madison, Madison County, New York, March 16, 1833; educated in that State and in Illinois. Robert, the paternal great-grandfather, with his family and two brothers, emigrated from England to the United States, and took up their residence in Norton, Massachusetts. His son Robert married a Miss Chaffer, and they had one daughter and two sons who did not live to maturity. He next married Patty Willis, who had crossed the ocean with them. They moved to Brookfield, then to Worcester County, and located in Hardwick, where they reared a family of five sons and one daughter: Seth, Robert, Alfred, Hetty, Joshua and Laban. Alfred married Polly Hilliard in Hartland, Windsor County, Vermont, in 1795. They had five sons and two girls: Owen, Ezra, Hosea, Homer and Horace (twins). Martha and Mary. Ezra, the father of Homer Clinton, was born in Vermont June 12, 1802. He was a carpenter in Madison. He had a desire to become a farmer. He married Sally Furness January 21, 1830. They had eight children, all of whom were born in New York State: William (died at 15), Mary, Homer C., Ezra, Eliza, Sarah, Sophronia and Marian. In 1836 Mr. Tucker came to Illinois. He bought a horse and rode over Peoria County, accompanied by J. F. Wiley. He selected three-quarter-sections of land in Sections 15 and 22, and, having left the money for its purchase with Mr. Wiley, returned to New York. The purchase was completed as contemplated, but it was not until 1843 that Mr. Tucker was ready to take possession. In that year he started with his family overland, conveying his goods in wagons and arriving in Brimfield on December 3, the journey occupying seven and a half weeks. He selected a spot on Section 15 for his homestead, and having secured the object of his life's desire, settled down to improve his farm. He was a skilled mechanic but abandoned his trade for farming. He finally accumulated 640 acres of land. He died December 31, 1853. His wife died July 1, 1860, in the fifty-eighth year of her age. Mr. Tucker did much to promote the moral welfare of Brimfield Township. He was a public-spirited citizen. It was a great delight for him to attend the County and State Conventions of the Democratic party. His son Ezra occupies the old homestead. Homer Clinton came to Brimfield Township with his parents in 1843 and has resided here ever since. He has one of the best improved farms in this part of Illinois, all of which is the result of his own efforts. His home and other buildings were burned some years ago, after which he had erected a better class of buildings than he had before. He began with 160 acres, a part of the old homestead, which he has increased to 200. He can boast of having put all the improvements on his land, even to the planting of the trees about his place. He was a grain merchant in Brimfield for five years. He married Emily M. Ellis, of Peoria County. They had four children: Clemmie M., the wife of H. E. Chichester; Carrie M., the wife of C. L. Dungan; Allie M., the wife of O. E. Root; and Duane H., who is of an inventive turn of mind. Mr. Tucker is a Republican, and has been Township Supervisor besides holding other minor offices. He has been Road Commissioner for seventeen years.

WEATHERWAX, ANDREW; Farmer; born in Holmes County, Ohio, April 27, 1826; received a common-school education. John Weatherwax, his paternal grandfather, was born in Germany; William Craig was his maternal grandfather. George, the father of Andrew, came from New York. Susan (Craig), the mother, was born in Virginia. The grandfather, John, left a fortune to some members of the family in the United States but it never reached the heirs. George, the father, lived nine miles from Albany, New York, and was a farmer.

He lived a part of the time in Holmes County, Ohio. He was a skillful mechanic and did the important carpentering work in that section. He erected the aqueduct over Whitewoman Creek for a canal in Ohio. He was a representative man. He died in 1850 at the age of fifty-one years. His wife died several years later. They had nine children who reached maturity: William, John, Andrew, Ann, Catherine, Jacob, Abraham, Mary and George. Mary (deceased), was the wife of A. C. Conklin, of LaSalle County, Illinois. To Andrew and his wife two children were born: Susan Elizabeth (deceased) and George, of Brimfield Township. Mrs. Weatherwax was, before her marriage, Sarah Ann McGlothlin, a native of Virginia. Mr. Weatherwax is independent in politics. He received his political ideas of civil government from four old Revolutionary War heroes, who resided near him in his boyhood days. Therefore he has the courage of his moral convictions.

CHAPTER III.

CHILLICOTHE TOWNSHIP.

Chillicothe Township is the only one in Peoria County that lies in range Nine East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. It is composed of two fractional congressional townships, 10 N., 9 E. and 11 N., 9 E., the first named being a very small fraction. The northeast corner of this township is the northeast corner of the county, its northern boundary being the south line of Marshall County, and its eastern and southeastern boundary being the Illinois River, which separates it from Woodford County.

Could the early history of this township be written, it would doubtless prove little less interesting than that of Peoria. It was here the eyes of Joliet and Marquette last rested upon the soil of Peoria County, and here LaSalle and his companions first entered Lake Pimiteoui. We can well imagine all the celebrated voyageurs and missionaries to have camped here in their voyages up and down the river, and to have established mission stations or trading posts within its borders. Here, also, dwelt Gomo and Senachewine, two Chiefs of the Pottawatomies. It was in this township that Captain Samuel Levering visited Gomo in the year 1811, and slept in his cabin just before the great council at Peoria. It was doubtless at the Indian village between Rome and Chillicothe he halted and was obliged to engage a new crew to complete his journey. Into this township the Indians of Black Partridge's village fled when the village was attacked and destroyed by Governor Edwards in 1812. It was here that General Howard halted his army of nearly 1,000 men in his march against the Indians of Gomo's tribe in 1813, and it was from this point they returned to Peoria to assist in the building of Fort Clark. All these events, however, occurred long before the modern history of the township began.

LaSalle Prairie, a portion of which lies in this township, is about ten miles long and from three to four miles wide, and is one of the most fertile spots in the county. This fact, coupled with its nearness to the river, as well as to the timber land surrounding it, early attracted an enterprising and industrious community of farmers.

In fact, it was regarded as one of the centers of population, so that, in the assessment of property, those living there were designated as residents of LaSalle Prairie, the same as were those of Farm Creek, Ten Mile Creek, Mackinaw and other places. In 1837 it had obtained a place and name in the Gazetteers of the day, and the settlement is said to have contained one hundred families. It also gave its name to election precincts and school districts. This community furnished a goodly number of public officers and other public-spirited men, who did much towards the organization and development of the county. It was here the "Farmers' Exporting Company" was formed, which is elsewhere mentioned. At an early day, also, a State road was laid out from a point on the Galena road, near Mossville, then along the river through Rome and the village of Chillicothe to points farther north, which became part of the stage-route from Peoria to Chicago. The northern part of the Township, which was originally timber land, has been cleared and now contains many fine farms.

The Senachewine Creek is the largest stream in the northern part of the county flowing into the Illinois River. It divides the township into two nearly equal portions. It derived its name from Senachewine, the last Chief of the Pottawatomies in this section, whose village was located on its banks. In an early day the flow of water was much greater than at present; affording, as it did, water power for the driving of both grist and saw-mills. Although it is said that William Moffatt had a mill in this township as early as 1834, yet it appears that, on March 7, 1836, William and Jeremiah Moffatt petitioned the County Commissioners' Court for a writ for the assessment of such damages as might be occasioned by the erection of a mill-dam on the northwest quarter of Section 18. On the same day Ashbel Merrill obtained a similar writ for the erection of a mill-dam on the northwest quarter of Section 17. At the April term 1836, the writ in favor of Ashbel Merrill was returned allowing Henry Pepper $50 damages, caused to his land by the erection of the dam. The return to Moffatts' writ found the dam to be upon their own land and that no injury would be caused to the neighborhood. The Moffatt mill was a grist-mill much resorted to by the people for many miles around. It had probably no competitor nearer than Rochester, on Spoon River, and the mills on the Kickapoo near Peoria. Merrill's mill is said to have been a saw-mill located about one-half mile lower down the stream than Moffatts'.

About this time, or a little later, there were three rival villages in what is now Chillicothe Township; Rome, Allentown and the Village of Chillicothe—the first having 25 houses, the second 3, and the third 30 houses. There is no plat of Allentown on record, but the ferry licenses granted to George Allen, in the year 1832, located it on the southeast quarter of Section 20, T. 11 N., R. 9 E.

The first attempt to locate a village upon the present site of the city of Chillicothe was made by Samuel T. McKean, who, on November 28, 1834, caused a plat to be surveyed by Charles Ballance, County Surveyor, on the southwest quarter of Section 21, and the northwest quarter of Section 28. It consisted of four entire blocks and four extra lots, which were doubtless intended to be included in a subsequent plat. It was acknowledged, December 18, 1834, before Andrew M. Hunt, Justice of the Peace.

On June 6, 1836, Harrison H. Jamison and Joseph Hart platted a village on the southwest quarter of Section 21, and the southeast quarter of Section 20, covering a much larger territory, which they named Chillicothe, apparently ignoring the former plat, and possibly including it in theirs. The streets were 66 feet wide; alleys 18; lots 66x165 feet.

On October 21, 1836, James H. Temple and Harrison H. Jamison laid out an addition to Chillicothe which they named Temple & Jamison's Addition. It was located on the northwest quarter of Section 28 on the river. It was of an irregular shape, consisting of three fractional blocks on the river, three full blocks and two other fractions. Several other additions have since then been annexed, but these were the original plats of the city.

On December 24, 1832, Jefferson Taliafero placed upon the record of deeds in the Recorder's office of Peoria County, a plat of the village of Rome. It consisted of twenty-three blocks and a public square, but not being accompanied with any survey or description, its location cannot be definitely fixed. That it was the original plat of the village of Rome cannot be doubted. It is one of the very earliest village plats recorded in Peoria County, being contemporaneous with the first plat of what is now Mill's Addition to the city of Peoria. The streets running parallel with the river were named Front, Second, Third and Fourth Streets, while those running at right angles to those mentioned bore the distinguished names of Caesar, Pompey, Anthony, Octavius, Cato, Cicero and Brutus.

On October 10, 1835, Isaac Underhill laid out a village which he also named Rome, which may have covered the territory occupied by the former one; but, inasmuch as the land is not specifically described, this must rest upon conjecture. It consisted of 44 blocks and a public square, 10 lots of 82½ by 132 feet to a block. As already seen Rome was a dangerous rival of Chillicothe, and is said to have been, at one time, an aspirant for the location of the county-seat.

June 20, 1837, Samuel Bell laid out a village plat named La Salle on the northeast quarter of Section 32, surveyed by John McFadden, Deputy of Thomas Phillips, County Surveyor. The tract is a fractional one containing about seventy-five acres, of which about sixty-four acres were embraced in the plat. Little is known of this village, if it ever had any existence in fact. It was vacated, March 6, 1849, by Hiram Cleveland, who was then owner of all the lots.

In 1840 Mr. Underhill began the cultivation of his farm at Rome by the breaking up of 200 acres, to which were added 500 acres more in the following year. It subsequently grew to 2,000 acres, which was doubtless the largest farm in the county. In the fall of 1841 he sowed 300 acres in winter wheat, from which he had an excellent crop, harvested with the old-fashioned cradle, and sold at 32 cents per bushel, the highest market-price of that year. The next year he put 1,000 acres into winter wheat, which was so badly winter-killed that he did not harvest one bushel. In 1846 he set out on his land at Rome ten thousand grafted apple trees and six thousand peach trees, which he cultivated for seven years. On April 1, 1853, he sold his farm to Dr. Ela H. Clapp and Butler for $40,000.

While extending his farm at Rome Mr. Underhill had a house built to run on wheels, somewhat similar in construction to a sleeping-car. It was drawn by oxen to different parts of the farm, which consisted wholly of smooth prairie. He had about twenty yoke of oxen used in breaking the sod. He had thirty-five families of renters, among whom was a preacher, who got free of rent all the land he could till in consideration of his preaching to the tenants on Sunday. Another was a fiddler, who furnished the music for the balls that were of frequent occurrence at the Rome Hotel during the winter season, on which occasions Mr. Underhill would be a frequent guest.

After the completion of the Peoria & Bureau Valley Railroad, of which Mr. Underhill was President, a controversy sprang up between it and the city of Peoria in regard to the use of the streets or some other terminal privileges, to connect with the steamboat landing, in consequence of which Rome was, for a time, made the head of navigation as to all freights going by rail and river. A spur-track was built to connect the main track with the river, and a large ware-house was erected on the river bank (there being a good landing at that point), through which all freight to and from the boats and the rail-road were passed, thus avoiding the complications at Peoria. Rome has, however, not grown much in population, it being at the present day but little larger than it was sixty years ago. The Rome fraction constitutes a school district by itself, having a good schoolhouse in which a good school is maintained.

Prior to township organization that portion of territory known as Township 11 North, Range 9 East, constituted an election precinct by the name of Senachewine. When the re-organization took place the fraction known as Township 10 North, Range 9 East, was attached and the name of Chillicothe was given to the newly formed township.

CITY OF CHILLICOTHE.

Prior to 1830 there were a few settlers in what is now Chillicothe Township. Mahlon Lupton and John Hammett, with his family, had settled north of the creek on Section 9 as early as 1830. The first cabin erected on the site of Chillicothe was that of Jefferson Hickson, a blacksmith, on the bank of the river, near which he also erected his shop. The second was that of Edwin L. Jones who was the pioneer merchant of the place. His store occupied one room of the cabin in which he lives. He was the first Justice of the Peace and was a man of prominence in the county, he having also served for some years as a member of the County Commissioners' Court. In 1838, a Mr. Lehart erected a small frame house of one room, which his family occupied while he kept store in a cabin on Water Street.

The first tavern was opened in 1835 by James M. Brown, which was called the "Dunlap House." It was a one-and-a-half-story house situated on First Street, but the name was subsequently changed to the "American House." It was kept by William Dunlap for about five years, during which time it was the stopping place for stages to and from Chicago. The next is said to have been "The Illinois," subsequently changed to the "Buckeye."

"The Chillicothe House" was a frame building containing ten to fifteen rooms, erected and kept for some years by John Hayes. It was destroyed by fire in 1873.

"The Transit Hotel" was erected about 1850. Thomas Kitts was the first proprietor. It is at present operated by J. H. Humes. The "Union Hotel" was erected about 1865 by O. G. Wood, and was at first called Wood's Hotel. It was subsequently changed to the "Commercial" and later to "Union Hotel." D. McKeel is the present proprietor.

From its position on the river, and its proximity to the fertile lands in the northern part of Peoria and the southern part of Marshall Counties, Chillicothe has, from an early day, been a prominent market for grain, pork and other products of the farm. This trade was also enhanced by the running of a ferry to the opposite shore, which enabled it to command the custom from a large portion of Woodford County, as well as from that portion of Marshall County lying east of the river. Of such importance was this trade considered that, on March 4, 1867, a charter was obtained from the Legislature for the "Chillicothe Ferry Road and Bridge Company," with power to establish and run a ferry, to build a bridge, to make roads approaching the same on both sides of the river and to purchase or condemn lands for that purpose; these rights to be exclusive for a distance of three miles along the river. The company had a capital of $30,000. It established the ferry, constructed the road across the bottom lands on the easterly side of the river and has been operating the same ever since.

John A. Moffitt built the first grain warehouse on the river bank in the year 1847, the trade at that time being confined to the river. Henry Truitt erected a grain warehouse about the year 1853, and in company with Samuel C. Jack started the first extensive business in grain. The firm and its successors have done a very large and flourishing business for many years. Soon after the completion of the Peoria & Bureau Valley Railroad, its lessee, the Chicago & Rock Island Company, erected an elevator at the depot which was consumed by fire in 1864. It was re-built and an elevator has ever since been maintained at that point for the shipment of grain. It is at present operated by R. Truitt and L. Carter under the firm name of the "Chillicothe Grain Company." An extensive business in milling was formerly carried on, but unfortunately one of the finest mills, that of Wood & Hosmer, was destroyed by fire in 1869. The year before that event "The Farmers' Mill," with a capacity of grinding fifty barrels of flour per day, had been erected by Adam Petry and A. C. Thomas. The River Elevator, or Old Star Elevator, which had been lying idle for many years, is now operated by the Turner, Hudnet Company, of Pekin, Illinois, who do their shipping entirely by the river, as there are no railroad tracks reaching it.

From February 22, 1861, to February 11, 1873, Chillicothe had been governed as a village by a board of trustees. In April of that year it adopted a city government and elected Henry Hosmer Mayor, William McLean, Levi Booth, Joseph Bailey, William H. Barbour and Richard Hughes Aldermen. According to the census of 1900 it had a population of 1699, and contains the number and variety of business houses usually found in cities of its size; among which may be mentioned several dry-goods, grocery, drug and hardware stores; establishments for the sale of farm machinery and furniture, grain elevators, lumber yards, etc.

There are two banks; the first (Truitt, Matthews & Co.) was organized in 1868 by Henry Truitt and Samuel C. Jack. Later the firm was composed of Henry Truitt, P. T. Matthews, Harvey Holman and A. D. Sawyer. The present proprietors are Mrs. Eliza A. Truitt, P. T. Matthews, William M. Mead and Rollin H. Truitt. It has a capital stock of $40,000, surplus $30,000. Frank L. Wilmot is cashier.

The "First National Bank" was organized

December 10, 1900, with a capital of $25,000, B. F. Zinser being President, Ira D. Buck, Vice-President, and Eugenie Moffitt, Cashier. The present Cashier is L. R. Phillips. Its stockholders are among the most prosperous business men of Peoria, Pekin, Washington and Chillicothe. On February 10, 1902, its resources were $111,778, and its deposits $79,557.

There are two weekly newspapers, the "Chillicothe Bulletin" and the "Chillicothe Enquirer," the first started July 4, 1883, by the present proprietor, Frank W. Bailey, the second, in 1891 by Messrs. Day & Bates. The present proprietor of the latter is Mr. H. A. Bates, one of the founders of the paper.

The city is supplied with telephone service by "The People's Telephone Company," of which B. F. Zinser is President, and E. Moffitt Secretary and Treasurer. The company was organized in 1891. It now has 150 'phones in operation. It furnishes country service in Peoria County and cable service across the river, connecting with lines in Woodford, McLean, Marshall and Tazewell Counties.

North Chillicothe, situated about one mile north of the present city, was organized as a village May 2, 1890. It now has a population of 417.

CHURCHES.

The Baptists were the first to hold religious meetings in Chillicothe, probably under direction of Elder Gershom Silliman as early as 1837. In the spring of 1838, they organized a Baptist Church with the following members: Peter Temple and wife, James H. Temple and wife, James Hammett and his wife and mother. Elder Silliman ministered to the people for a short time, when Alexander Rider, a Scotch clergyman, became pastor and remained for two years. In the same year James H. Temple started a Sunday-school, which was held at the residences of the members. The church was then without a pastor for several years, there being occasional preaching from time to time. In 1850 Elder C. D. Merritt began preaching semi-monthly and a re-organization took place with fifteen members. Elder Thomas Bodley became the first pastor in 1850 and was succeeded in 1851 by Rev. C. D. Merritt. Through a revival of that year the congregation increased its membership to 92, and in 1851 and 1852 it erected a comfortable brick house of worship with a seating capacity of 400. By 1857 the congregation had increased in membership to 102. The church then suffered a great decline for some years and its church building was sold for debt, but, through the exertions of its members aided by the citizens, it was redeemed and from that time the church took on new life. In 1866 the building was repaired at an expense of $900, and, on December 2d of that year, was rededicated. From that time until now it has been one of the permanent churches of the city. It is located on the corner of South Second and Elm Streets. It maintains a Sunday-school of about fifty in average attendance, George H. Sanders being Superintendent.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—On account of the loss of the records it is impossible to ascertain the date of the planting of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Chillicothe. As early as 1851 there was a flourishing circuit of which Chillicothe was the preaching point. It is related that the church became organized in 1850 with about twenty members. In 1852, the congregation had procured a lot on the corner of Beech and Fourth Streets, upon which, in that year, it erected a parsonage, and in the following year commenced the erection of a house of worship, which was finished in 1856 at a cost of about $2,500. The parsonage continued to be used in its original form until the year 1892, when it was remodeled and still continues to be used as the pastor's residence.

In the year 1808 a new church edifice was erected on the corner of Chestnut and Sixth Streets, at a cost of about $8,000. It is the largest and finest church in the city.

Although there may have been pastors prior to the year 1852, their names are unknown. In that year Rev. William Atchison and Rev. I. B. Craig preached to the people, since which time the church has been served by nearly forty ministers, only a few having remained more than a year. The longest pastorate was that of Rev. D. B. Johnson, who served from 1896 to 1899 inclusive. It was during his pastorate the present church building was erected. He was succeeded, in the year 1900 by the present pastor, Rev. T. A. Beall. This church has always maintained a Sabbath-school, of which the now venerable G. W. Clapp was the first Superintendent. The present Superintendent is Mr. O. A. Proctor. The average attendance is about 125. The church is in a flourishing condition.

THE REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—This church is, in one sense, the successor of St. John's Parish of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which was organized about the year 1865. The first rector was Rev. Dr. Chamberlain, under whose pastorate a church building was erected, which was used for several years. He was succeeded for a short time by the Rev. Mr. Russell and he by a Rev. Mr. Johnson.

On October 25, 1874, Rev. J. P. Davis, as missionary of the Reformed Episcopal Church, commenced holding services in the church, it having been for some time vacant. On September 12, 1875, by vote of its members, the parish severed its ecclesiastical connection with the Protestant Episcopal Church and united with the Reformed Episcopal denomination, but still retaining its name of St. John's Parish. About 1880 the church building was sold and a new one was erected at a cost of about $2,000. This was also sold to the Roman Catholics and, in the year 1890, the present building was erected at the cost of $4,000. The first official board under the new organization were Solomon Stowell, Stephen Martin, and Elias Entz.

Harvey Holman

Rev. Jesse P. Davis was rector from 1874 to 1884; Rev. Frederick Walton from 1885 to 1888; Rev. H. L. Gregg from 1888 to 1889; Rev. Joseph Lewis for six months in 1889; Rev. B. T. Lampblugh, 1889-90; Rev. G. Stroud Vail, 1890-93; Rev. E. H. Huston, 1894-98, and Rev. Frank V. C. Cloak, the present rector, from March, 1899 to the present time. There is a Sunday-school maintained numbering about fifty-six, of which the rector is Superintendent.

PLYMOUTH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH was organized August 12, 1891, with nineteen members. The original Board of Trustees were Henry Will, G. W. Harbaugh and Mrs. Henry Truitt. The first pastor was Rev. Elbert G. Collins, who served in that capacity from March 7, 1892, to April 30, 1900. He was succeeded on June 1, 1900, by the present pastor, Rev. J. Charles Evans. The present Board of Trustees are L. A. Wood, Benjamin Warren and Harrison Reed. This church building, situated at the southeast corner of Fourth and Pine Streets, was erected in the year 1892, and was dedicated February 19, 1893. Its original cost was $4,500. The congregation has also a parsonage which cost the sum of $1,500. A Sunday-school having an average attendance of eighty is maintained, Mr. E. F. Hunter being Superintendent.

SCHOOLS.

Chillicothe has always occupied an advanced position in regard to her public schools. The first school taught in the village was in the winter of 1838-39. It was kept in a vacated log cabin.

In 1845 a frame school house of one room was built on the public square. This served its purpose until the adoption of the free-school system in 1855. As soon as public funds could be raised by taxation a commodious brick school house, 30 by 56 feet, two stories high and containing four rooms, was erected and supplied with all up-to-date furniture and equipments. It was erected in 1856.

The authorities were greatly encouraged and stimulated into activity by the holding of the Peoria County Teachers' Institute in their new school house, in the month of October, 1856. During its session night meetings with public lectures were held in one of the churches.

In 1870 it became necessary to enlarge the building, which was done by adding two school-rooms, two recitation rooms and a hall. The exterior of the building was also greatly improved and beautified. It was located on the corner of Elm and Fourth Streets, and, when first erected, cost about $4,000. The additions and improvements cost about $6,000 more. This building was destroyed by fire in 1890, and, in the following year, a new one containing thirteen rooms was erected on North Sixth Street, between Cedar and Chestnut. It accommodates about 500 pupils, and at present has twelve teachers.

JOSEPH BRADLEY.

During the many years of his residence in Chillicothe, Joseph Bradley represented the most advanced commercial element in the town, and realized a success commensurate with shrewd financial acumen, and unswerving allegiance to honest dealing. Though at the time of his death, October 27, 1900, he was practically retired from active participation in business life, he yet retained a vital interest in general public affairs, and in the many friends which his genial and kindly nature had brought his way. In Yorkshire, England, where he was born April 27, 1830, Mr. Bradley received a substantial education in the public schools, and his home training was conducted along lines calculated to inspire confidence in himself and the future. The more thoroughly to prepare for the necessity of self-support, he was apprenticed to a wagon-maker, and eventually embarked upon an independent trade venture. Accompanied by his wife, formerly Mary A. Story, whom he married in 1850, he emigrated to the United States in 1851, and upon locating in Wyoming County, New York, engaged in wagon-making for two years. Failing to realize in their entirety his expectations in the East, he removed to Chillicothe, and, in 1853, established the wagon factory which, under his able management, developed from small to large proportions, and became one of the important manufacturing concerns of the city. Having amassed a competence during his years of toil, Mr. Bradley availed himself of the opportunity of leisure in 1887, and from then until the time of his death, his home circle was the gainer by his additional presence among them, and by his unceasing devotion to the welfare of those near to him. The domestic life of this honored pioneer was noticeably a happy one, and March 10, 1899, his numerous friends and relatives made merry at his golden wedding. To mourn his loss there remained a wife, and daughter, Jane A., who, April 11, 1877, became Mrs. Edgar Heath and has three children; Pearl, Joseph, and Horace Heath. The Heath family live at Henry, Illinois.

A Democrat in politics, Mr. Bradley was prominently identified with the local undertakings of his party, and held numerous positions of trust within the gift of his fellow townsmen. For two years he acceptably filled the office of Mayor of Chillicothe, and for eight years was Supervisor. He was a member of, and liberal contributor to the support of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HARVEY HOLMAN.

Harvey Holman (deceased), merchant and banker, for many years one of the most prominent business men of the city of Chillicothe, was born at Winchester, Cheshire County, New Hampshire, September 10, 1806, and died in Chillicothe, April 20, 1884. When he was about ten years of age, Mr. Holman's parents moved to Warwick, Franklin County, Massachusetts, whence, ten years later, he went to Grafton, Worcester County, remaining there until 1835, when he came West, locating first at St. Louis, Missouri. Here he remained until 1846, when he came to Chillicothe, then one of the most promising business points on the Illinois River. During his stay in St. Louis, Mr. Holman was employed, for some six years, in the Collector's Office of that city. In 1849, the California gold fever having set in, he made the trip across the Plains of the Pacific Coast with an ox-team, spending there the following year. Having returned from California, he entered into partnership, in the fall of 1888, with Mr. Philip T. Matthews, who is still a resident of Chillicothe, in a general mercantile business. Ten years later (1868) they formed a partnership with Henry Truitt and Samuel C. Jack in a private banking business, which Messrs. Truitt and Jack had established a short time previous. About 1880 Mr. Holman sold his interest in the store of Matthews & Holman to his partner, Mr. Matthews, but retained his interest in the banking business, which Mrs. Holman afterwards sold to William M. Mead, a son-in-law of Mr. Matthews. Having retired from business with a handsome competency, estimated at seventy-five to one hundred thousand dollars, Mr. Holman devoted the latter years of his life to looking after his real estate interests and in travel.

Mr. Holman was married in the summer of 1859 to Mrs. Sarah A. Stevens, a resident of Chillicothe, but born in Pennsylvania and reared in part in Cincinnati, Ohio. By her previous marriage, Mrs. Holman had one daughter, Fannie, who became the wife of Elias Entz, of Chillicothe, but died September 25, 1899, leaving three children, two sons and one daughter.

About 1888 Mrs. Holman removed to Peoria, where she built a handsome stone residence at No. 111 Roanoke Avenue, costing some twenty-five thousand dollars, and being one of the most delightful homes in that part of the city. Mr. Holman was a man of rare business capacity, of the strictest integrity, absolutely reliable and honest—in the language of one of his business associates, "one of the best men I ever knew"—and left his impress for good upon the history of the city with which his name was so long and so honorably associated. His widow and a large circle of surviving friends hold his memory in faithful and honored remembrance.

CHARLES JOHNS.

Among professional men in Chillicothe, Dr. Charles Johns was regarded as a most capable and progressive exponent of medical science. His skill in diagnosis and treatment won the confidence and patronage of a large following, and his years of arduous effort to ameliorate the physical condition of human kind were happily tempered with the good-will and appreciation of the hundreds who availed themselves of the benefit of his counsel. His profession was but another name for a vast humanitarian field in which he exercised his faith in the tenets of the eclectic school, the broad principles of which appealed both to his intelligence and reason. A native of Clinton County, Ohio, he was born December 1, 1841, and came to Illinois in 1862. For some time he engaged in educational work in different parts of the State, in the meantime, however, having decided to enter the ranks of medical and surgical practitioners. At the Bennett Eclectic College in Chicago, he took the regular course, and graduated with honors in the class of 1872.

The preliminary practice of Dr. Johns was conducted in Streator, Illinois, where he remained for eight years, an important factor in the growth of that town. For the following four years he lived on a farm in Northampton, Hallock Township, where he combined agricultural and professional pursuits. Upon locating in Chillicothe he found it both profitable and convenient to open a drug-store in connection with his practice, and his various plans for life work remained unchanged up to the time of his death, February 10, 1898. A Democrat in political affiliation, he never sought or desired official recognition or political advancement, but chose rather to devote his entire time to keeping in touch with the advance along professional lines.

The marriage of Dr. Johns and Juliaetta Trimble occurred January 7, 1869, Mrs. Johns being a daughter of Dr. Silas and Lydia (Getzen-dauer) Trimble. Dr. Trimble was one of the most prominent and widely known of the early Illinois practitioners, having been born in Tennessee in 1811. His professional education was obtained at the Cincinnati College of Medicine, and he came to Clinton County, Ohio, in 1852, where for many years he successfully ministered to the physical infirmities of the residents of that vicinity. His latter years were devoted to the peaceful occupation of farming, and his death occurred July 10, 1873. No children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Johns but, in 1891, they adopted as a son George Saint Clair, who is gifted as a student and musician, and who now writes his name, George Saint Clair Johns.

ALVA MERRILL.

Hon. Alva Merrill, farmer and legislator, is perhaps, as widely known for the spirit of enterprise and expansion which he manifested in connection with affairs beyond the fences enclosing his abundant harvests—especially those relating to the problems to be solved by the just and far-seeing legislator—as he is for his success in the more limited domain of his private business. Possessing a conservatism of thought broadened by keen observation of men and events, and in touch with the drawbacks which retard the greater usefulness of the American agriculturist, he has at all times utilized the public honors for the best good of his fellow-townsmen, rather than as an opportunity for self-honor or personal aggrandizement. An uncompromising Republican,

Chas. Johnson

the confidence of the people has placed him in many positions of credit and responsibility, including his five years' service as a member of the Poor Farm Inspectors. His most conspicuous undertakings, however, have been in the halls of the State Legislature, to which he was elected in 1804, his re-election following in 1806, 1808 and 1800. During his four terms in the House Mr. Merrill served on many important committees, and, during the session of the Fortieth General Assembly, was Chairman of the committee on Public Charities, a position of great importance and responsibility. As a politician his reputation is unsullied, and his independence of thought and action has gained the admiration and confidence of those who elected him to office. His influence has extended into many channels of activity, and he is popular fraternally, being a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World.

A native son of Illinois, Mr. Merrill was born in Medina Township, Peoria County, October 9, 1854, a son of Samuel and Mary J. (Lake) Merrill, natives respectively of Ohio and Indiana. His paternal grandfather was also named Samuel. Mr. Merrill was reared on his father's farm, and educated in the district schools, and in youth struggled with the vicissitudes the overcoming of which constitute the self-made man. After leaving his home surroundings he settled first in Marshall County, removing in 1860 to the farm in Hallock Township, upon which he lived until locating in Chillicothe. February 10, 1881, he married Henrietta Saxton, daughter of Frederick and Sarah Saxton, early settlers of Hallock Township. Mrs. Merrill, who died May 13, 1892, was the mother of two children: Mabel and Clifford. The second marriage of Mr. Merrill occurred October 16, 1900, with Mrs. Florence A. West (nee Humphrey), a native of Lima, Livingston County, New York.

WILLIAM H. MILLER.

Democracy, as understood by its most intelligent and broad-minded adherents, has no more enthusiastic advocate of its principles and issues than William H. Miller, who has been closely identified with the political undertakings of Chillicothe since he came here in 1857. As an officeholder his services have covered many years, and he has received continued evidences of the popular confidence and regard. It has never been charged that this confidence has been misplaced, or that the honor conferred has been utilized for mere private gain to the detriment of the public welfare. His career as a public servant began with his election to the office of Justice of the Peace in 1866, and his re-election has followed continuously, and he is now serving his thirty-fifth year in this capacity. His responsibilities also include those connected with the office of Pension Agent and City Attorney. At all elections held in this district Mr. Miller is foremost in promoting the cause of the candidates whom he thinks most competent to serve the public, whether the offices at stake be State, County or National. He is the friend of education, and has been a School Director for six years. To further the cause of the Union he served during the Civil War as a soldier in the Fifty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, enlisting in 1862 and receiving an honorable discharge in 1863. Though not of long duration, his service embraced some of the important battles of the war, including Pittsburg Landing and several skirmishes.

The early life of Mr. Miller was associated with Wilmington, Dearborn County, Indiana, where he was born March 22, 1835. His father, Colonel Henry Miller, is enrolled among the gallant heroes of the War of 1812, and he is also remembered because of his pioneer services at Wilmington, Indiana, whither he removed from Pennsylvania when the Hoosier State was yet a Territory. A successful farmer in the East, he continued his chosen occupation in Indiana, upon a farm two miles from the Ohio River, near Aurora. In connection with the management of his farm he transported produce in keel-boats from Cincinnati to New Orleans, and, with the advent of steamboats, became a pilot, and in this capacity continued to navigate the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers for the remainder of his life. His death at Wilmington, when but fifty-two years of age, removed a man yet in his prime and of great use to the community. He was a Democrat in politics, and in religion affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church. His wife, formerly May Spiknall, born at Harper's Ferry, lived to be ninety-two years old.

August 23, 1850, William H. Miller married Emily Hammett, daughter of John Hammett, who came to Peoria County when Peoria was known as Fort Clark. To Mr. and Mrs. Miller have been born six children, of whom the following survive: Elizabeth A., who is the wife of C. A. Townsend, of Indian Territory; Fred C., who is a resident of Chicago, and H. A., who is living at Chillicothe.

SILAS TRIMBLE.

With the passing of Silas Trimble, Illinois lost one of the strong and rugged personalities which dominated professional and other affairs in the early days, and left behind their years of self-sacrifice and well-doing a trail of memories charged with large ideals and unswerving devotion to truth and justice. Somewhat remote from the levity which characterizes more recent endeavor, he came and went among his compatriots with a dignity worthy of a serious and steadfast nature, content to abide by the decision of time when aught arose to disturb the atmosphere of calm deliberation in which he moved. The quiet determination which we are wont to associate with less fretful times was his to an unusual extent, and this, added to a magnetic temperament and commanding stature, unusual conversational powers, and keen insight into the characters of men, constituted a man in whose memory his State may feel a just pride.

The extreme youth of Dr. Trimble was spent near Knoxville, Tennessee, where he was born February 28, 1811. While yet a boy his parents removed to Ohio, and he lived and worked on his father's farm until attaining his majority. His father, James, and his mother, Margaret Trimble, were born in Ireland, and shortly after their marriage emigrated to America and located in Tennessee, some years later settling in Clinton County, Ohio, where they devoted their attention to farming until their death. Considering the time in which he lived, James Trimble was a well educated man, and, appreciating the benefits of mental training, saw to it that his children were equally favored. Silas Trimble availed himself of his educational opportunities, and professionally qualified at the Cincinnati Medical College, and for a time studied at the St. Louis Medical College. In 1845 he removed to Northampton, Peoria County, Illinois, but in the early part of the following year returned to his former home in Clinton County, Ohio, where he practiced his profession for about six years. In 1852 he again came to Illinois, and purchased a farm at Northampton, Hallock Township, where he turned his attention exclusively to farming and stock-raising. This farm became one of the finely developed properties in the county, widely known as the Trimble farm, and is now owned by his daughter, Mrs. Johns, of Chillicothe. In the midst of the surroundings to the improvement of which his later years were devoted, Dr. Trimble died July 7, 1873, at the age of sixty-two years.

Through his marriage with Miss Stickel, there was born to Dr. and Mrs. Trimble two daughters: Sarah Jane and Margaret. After the death of his wife, the Doctor contracted an alliance with Lydia Getzendauer, in 1843, and of this union there were two children: Juliaetta, widow of Dr. Charles Johns, and John, a medical student who died in 1890. Mrs. Trimble survived her husband until May 28, 1897. Dr. Trimble was a member of the Unniversalist church, and fraternally was associated with the George Washington Lodge, No. 222, A. F. & A. M., of which he was a charter member.

HENRY TRUITT.

Henry Truitt, an early business man and, in his later years, banker of Chillicothe, Peoria County, was born at Vevay, Switzerland County, Indiana, January 1, 1819, the son of William and Elizabeth (Remley) Truitt, his family being of mixed Irish and German descent. His early life was spent upon a farm with such opportunities for securing an education as were afforded by the district schools of that period and locality. He was the oldest of a family of four children and his father having died when he was in his ninth year, he was early called upon to face the problem of providing for his own support, and thus acquired those habits of industry, economy and business sagacity and enterprise, which rendered him a leading factor in the business development of the region which became his home in later life. At thirteen years of age, he entered into the employment of Tobias S. Bradley, afterwards of Peoria, at a salary of ten dollars per month, and was engaged for five years chiefly in the flat-boat trade, collecting produce along the Ohio and its tributaries, which was sold to planters and dealers along the lower Mississippi and in Southern markets. During the last two years of this period, he was allowed a compensation of fifteen dollars per month for his services. While thus employed, he developed such business capacity, and rendered such complete satisfaction to his employer, that, at the age of about eighteen years, he was offered a partnership in the business, which he accepted. This arrangement continued for ten years, Mr. Truitt going South each fall with flat-boat cargoes of produce which were sold during the winter months, and returning early in the following spring.

Mr. Truitt was married in March, 1843, to Miss Frances Goddard, and in 1850, made his first visit to Peoria County, when he purchased two hundred acres of land adjoining the village of Chillicothe, to which place he removed his family the following year. The next two years were spent in building upon, and otherwise improving, his property; but in 1853, he engaged in purchasing and shipping grain to the Chicago and St. Louis markets, a business which developed rapidly within the next four years, laying a foundation for a substantial fortune. In 1854 he built a canal-boat at Peoria for the prosecution of his grain-trade, which more than paid for its cost during the first year. In 1855 Mr. Truitt entered into partnership in the grain business with Samuel C. Jack, which was continued for ten years, when Mr. Jack withdrew, being succeeded by J. W. Fuller. In 1868, in partnership with S. C. Jack, Mr. Truitt established a bank in Chillicothe, under the firm name of Truitt, Matthews & Company. This bank is still in successful operation, the present owners being Mrs. Eliza A. Truitt, P. T. Matthews, Rollin H. Truitt, and William M. Mead. About 1872, Mr. Truitt transferred his interest in the grain business to J. W. Fuller, and still later, the lumber business in which he had become interested, to N. S. Cutright, thereafter giving his attention to his banking business and his large landed estate.

Mr. Truitt's first wife—to whom, as already stated, he was married in his native State, in 1843—died in 1863, leaving two daughters, Sarah P., now Mrs. J. W. Fuller, and Frances E., now Mrs. N. S. Cutright, both of Peoria. In 1865 he was married to Mrs. Eliza A. Moffitt, who still survives, and has one son, Rollin H. Truitt, born March 13, 1866, who was married January 27, 1886, to Miss Effie L. Johnston, daughter of Robert and America A. (Chambers) Johnston. Mr. Rollin H. Truitt and wife have one son, Henry, born August 11, 1887.

Wm H Miller

SILAS TRIMBLE.

Politically, Mr. Truitt was an earnest but conservative Democrat, and, in 1872, was a candidate of his party for a seat in the State Legislature. Of strong religious convictions, he was an earnest worker in the cause of temperance, of which he was a consistent representative through life, and took an active part in local organizations for the promotion of total abstinence. At the age of forty years, he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; but after his second marriage, transferred his membership to the Baptist Church, of which his wife had been a life-long member,—a change of association dictated by his regard for domestic happiness, but which did not imply any change in the essential principles of religious faith.

Tall and rather spare in person, high-minded and affable in manner, he commanded universal respect and had friends among all classes. He was liberal and large-hearted in his attitude towards all deserving charities. His death occurred at his home in Chillicothe, September 17, 1884, and was profoundly deplored by all who knew him best.

BAILEY, FRANK W.; Editor and Publisher; was born at Iola, Wisconsin, April 1, 1860. His father, Melvin H. Bailey, was a native of New England, born near Augusta, Maine, December 28, 1827, and, after spending fourteen years (1852-66) in California, located in Kansas, remaining there until 1879, when he removed to Chillicothe, where he engaged in the furniture business. The mother, Violette Ingalls, born near Cleveland, Ohio, March 16, 1830, accompanied her parents to Chicago, Illinois, in childhood, and, after being educated there and at Waukegan, engaged in teaching at the latter place, being married to Mr. Bailey, October 22, 1857. Her mother was a daughter of Ira Miltimore, an early business man of Chicago, and her father, A. W. Ingalls, one of the first teachers in the Dearborn School in that city, which Mr. Miltimore was instrumental in establishing. Frank W. Bailey was educated in the public schools, and early developed a taste for the printer's art, which he practiced for a time as an amateur, printing cards on a small press while assisting his father upon the farm. He finally realized his ambition by establishing "The Bulletin," at Chillicothe, in 1883, at first a small folio sheet issued once a month, which has since developed into a prosperous six-column 12-page weekly, with presses operated by steam-power and a well equipped job-office attached. The Bulletin office is the most complete in Peoria County outside of the city of Peoria, while the paper has a handsome circulation and exercises a large influence. Mr. Bailey was married in Chillicothe, to Miss Lizzie McMurray, who was born at St. Louis, Missouri, November 12, 1854, the daughter of George and Annie (Menzies) McMurray, and they have two children, Harry M., born March 5, 1884, and W. Randolph, born February 28, 1889.

BLAND, LYDIA (HAKES); daughter of Alanson Hakes, who was born in Hanover, Cortland County, New York, April 21, 1819. Alanson Hakes, the son of Rensselaer Hakes, who was a native of the same State, and was a soldier of the War of 1812, came to Hallock Township, Peoria County, Illinois, in 1845, and died in 1892, leaving seven children: Lewis; Elmer; Emerson; William, who lives on the homestead property in Hallock Township; Marian, now Mrs. Thomas Keath; Louisa, and Lydia, now Mrs. Bland. Mrs. Bland has three sons and two daughters: John A., Bertie, Harry, Emma and Lulu. Mrs. Bland's father married Lucy Hendrick, who was born in Jefferson County, New York, December 15, 1824, and immediately after their marriage came to Hallock Township, where he spent the remainder of his life. Mr. Hakes was appointed Postmaster at South Hampton, then on the old State road between Peoria and Galena, and also served as Supervisor for Hallock Township and Justice of the Peace for a number of years.

BROMILOW, JAMES; Postmaster, Chillicothe; son of Samuel J. and Mary (Rigney) Bromilow, natives of England, was born in that country, September 27, 1848, and came to the United States while yet a mere lad. His parents settled at Chillicothe, Illinois, and he was educated there and, after leaving school, became a clerk in a local dry-goods house of importance. Some years later he connected himself with the dry-goods house of P. T. Matthews & Company, the largest concern of its kind in Chillicothe, and remained with it fifteen years, prospering satisfactorily and achieving an enviable reputation as a business man. Since 1898 he has ably filled the office of Postmaster. In politics he is Republican, and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Emma Blue, of Chillicothe, in 1871, and has three children: Mary, wife of Charles Vogelsang, of Henry; James and Nellie.

COLWELL, WILLIAM; Machinist, Inventor and Contractor; was born in Ross County, Ohio, June 18, 1832, a son of Washington and Rebecca (De Valt) Colwell, natives of Ohio. Washington Colwell came to Illinois with his family, in 1837, and engaged in farming. He died in 1880, aged eighty-two years, his wife in 1855, aged forty-four. William Colwell tilled the soil until he was twenty-seven years old, then took up the sale of agricultural implements. He constructed the first traction engine ever operated in this country, and invented several steam-power corn-shellers and a steam threshing machine. In 1864 he patented a device for measuring grain as it falls from the thresher. During recent years he has devoted himself to railway contract work, principally in erecting trestles and driving piles. He is a Democrat, is a public-spirited citizen, and a member of the Board of Education of Chillicothe. He married Harrah Albertson, at Peoria, in 1857, and they had two children who died in infancy, and have three sons living; Frank and William, practical railway bridge-builders, who are associated with their father in business, and Edward, who is a leading merchant at Monmouth.

HERSHEY, CHARLES; Railroad Conductor; born in Ohio, January 19, 1856. When quite young he went to Streator, Illinois, where he lived for many years. At the age of seventeen he began work on the railroad, being employed in various capacities. He came to Chillicothe in 1887, and for one year was yard-master for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad. He was married to Katie Doyle, in Streator, November 13, 1882, and they had two children; James and Nellie. Mr. Hershey was made conductor in 1888, which position he held until he was killed in an accident, August 25, 1897. He was a Republican, and had taken an active interest in politics; was also a member of the Knights of Pythias, of the Modern Woodmen of America and of the Order of Railway Conductors. He was esteemed for his manly qualities, fidelity to friends and integrity of purpose.

The family had taken passage on the steamer Moselle, which, having engaged in a race with the Ben Franklin, blew up near Cincinnati. Among the lives sacrificed were those of Jacob Weber and his wife, and two daughters—their entire property being destroyed. Some three months later the remnant of the family came on to Woodford County in an impoverished condition. The son, Andrew, remained with his mother until fourteen years of age, enduring much hardship and privation, when he learned the trade of a carpenter, in which he spent four years, after which he worked some years in St. Louis and in Iowa, finally coming to Peoria about 1850, and in 1852 established himself in the cabinet-making and undertaking business in Chillicothe. Mr. Weber enlisted as a soldier in the Eleventh Illinois Volunteer Cavalry in the fall of 1861, but was discharged for disability after two years of service. His son, Peter J. Weber, learned the cabinet-maker's trade in his father's shop and in 1879 went to Leadville, Colorado, where he became a miner. Three years later he went to Albuquerque, New Mexico, where, for four years, he was employed in a furniture and undertaking establishment; and, after that, for six years he was connected with one of the largest furniture concerns in San Francisco. In 1892 he returned to Chillicothe and became his father's partner and, in 1896, by the purchase of his father's interest, succeeded to the sole proprietorship of the business. He is an expert embalmer, and his business methods are up-to-date. In addition to a fine line of furniture, he handles pianos. CHAPTER IV.

ELMWOOD TOWNSHIP.

Material Furnished By

WILLIAM J. PHELPS AND EDWIN L. BROWN.

The geographical designation of Elmwood is Township Nine North of the Base Line, Range Five East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. It is somewhat broken by the branches of the Kickapoo Creek and was originally about one-half prairie and one-half timber. The prairie soil is rich and well adapted to agriculture, while abundance of coal is found in the bluffs along the creek.

The first settler was John Ewalt, a Pennsylvanian, who had lived some time in Ohio and Indiana, after which he came to Illinois and resided two years in Edgar County, arriving in Elmwood, May 1, 1831. He settled on the edge of the grove in the southeast quarter of Section 29. Isaac Harkness having settled on the east side, in what is now Trivoli Township, in the year preceding. Ewalt and his four sons spent the summer breaking prairie, fencing his land and building a house, living meanwhile in their wagon and in a tent. In the autumn he brought the rest of his family from Edgar County.

One year later, May, 1832, Isaac Doyle located in the southwest quarter of Section 20. In June, 1834, Henry Cone settled on the northwest quarter of Section 18, having laid his claim on the same in 1833.

On September 30, 1834, William J. Phelps landed at Peoria from Connecticut. He had been married on the 10th of the same month and had consumed about three weeks in making the trip. Leaving his wife at Peoria he followed an Indian

Joseph Cone, Sr., with whom he was acquainted, had preceded him. A day or two later he got Isaac Harkness to go with him for his wife and their baggage. In the spring of 1835, they located on the southeast quarter of Section 18, which for many years continued to be their homestead, noted for its hospitality and good cheer. Fountain Watkins came from Fulton County and settled on the northwest quarter of Section 29, in the winter of 1835, and, in the same year, Joseph Cone, Jr., settled on the southeast quarter of Section 7, and Andrew M. Wiley near the same place. Justus Gibbs and Roldon Pierce came in 1836, and Avery Dalton, Ichabod Smith, Thomas and George Hurff, Samuel McCann, Stanley Butler and Mr. Hunkerford in 1837. Joseph Miles built the mill that long bore his name in 1837 or 1838, and Henry and Joseph Cone built a saw-mill on the northwest quarter of Section 18 in the year 1843. Joseph Miles was joined by his son Freeman and his family about 1838, and by his brother Eli a year later. James Jackson, Ichabod Rowley, Isaac West and John Jordan were also among the earliest settlers. Although the township was intersected by a State road, yet it never became a stage-route nor a thoroughfare of travel. Two incipient hamlets sprang up on the route called Newburgh and Southport, but, being left to one side when the rail-road was built, they never became of any considerable importance. The situation prior to the building of the railroad was thus described by William J. Phelps in a public address, delivered some years ago:

"It is still within the recollection of a few of our number, when this village site and the surrounding country was a wild and unbroken waste. When standing on that eminence [the Mound—Ed.], still so inviting on our western border, 300 feet above the level of Peoria Lake and looking abroad over the thousands and thousands of rich acres, stretching away as far as the eye could reach, we could nowhere find a trace or a sign of civilization, where, in musing reverie, we would forecast the future of this tenantless domain which a prince might envy. A century would not, in our imagination, accomplish so much as our short lives have already done, nor one-half the taste, the culture, the refinement, the religious tone or the wealth, the commercial strength, the civil and political force, or the moral power which is exhibited today.

"And, although our numbers grew by the influx of emigrants, and our industry was rewarded with a sufficiency for the support of physical life, still our condition was that of poverty and destitution. Our cabins were poor, and our implements and utensils were few and imperfect. Our and bridges a luxury beyond our means. There was no thoroughfare of travel, and no focalized point of trade or social life, no post-office, no newspapers or books. But we were young, bold, energetic, hopeful, courageous. Our location was isolated and seemed unfortunate, but we could not help it. On the south, the great stage line from Peoria to Fort Madison swept by us, throwing off its daily mails at Farmington, which was already assuming considerable commercial importance. On the north was another great line of travel from Peoria to Burlington, giving a daily mail to Brimfield, which was already a little arrogant, with its stage-house, stores and shops. And the churches and schools, in both places, were rising in importance and usefulness. We traded to the right and left, but Farmington, being the larger town, received the greatest share. There, too, we formed religious associations and fed on the crumbs which fell from their well spread tables."

A few of the antiquities of the township are the following: Section 29 seems to have been the historic center. There the first pioneer, John Ewalt, located in 1831. There the first house was built and there the first white child, Harriet Rebecca Ewalt, was born April 1, 1833. There the first blacksmith shop and the first wagon-shop were located, the former by Jacob Wills in 1840, the latter by William George about the same time. On the same land George Ewalt made the record in splitting rails, he having split 800 in one day.

The first marriage in the township was that of Abner H. Smith and Eliza Ann Doyle, solemnized by James P. Harkness, J. P., on March 10, 1835. The first school seems to have been taught by Justus Gibbs in the winter of 1836-37, in a log building afterwards used for a wagon shop near Mr. Isaac Harkness. The first school house was near a spring on the creek south and east of where Henry Harkness now resides, in which Daniel Fash was the first teacher. But this honor is also claimed for Southport, where Eliza Rowley was the first teacher. A station of the "Under-Ground Railroad" was also maintained by Fountain Watkins on Section 29, where he received passengers headed for the North Star from Deacon Berge, of Farmington, and transported them on free passes to Rochester.

The following sketch is furnished by Hon. W. E. Phelps:

"The country about here was first known as Harkness Grove, from Isaac Harkness, the first settler, and the large body of timber around which the first settlements were made. It was afterwards called Harkness Precinct.

"Elmwood was first the name of the home of William J. Phelps, then the name of the Post Office. When, in 1850, the county adopted township organization, it became the name of the township. Justus Gibbs was the first Supervisor, and the first meeting of the Board was in April, 1850. As a natural consequence the railroad station and the village were also called Elmwood. For many years it was the only place of the name in the United States, and for that matter in the world. Now, however, there are two or three Elmwoods in other States.

"Isaac Doyle was elected first Justice of the Peace in 1833. William J. Phelps was elected Justice of the Peace in 1835, an office which he held for a number of years, and which gave him the title of "Squire" Phelps, by which he was known during the remainder of his life. He officiated at a large number of weddings. He married Mr. A. M. Wiley and Miss Mary Ewalt in 1838.

"The early Justice's Court was a very unique, and often amusing, institution. Usually the litigants managed their own cases, often very ably. Judge Wells, of Connecticut, the grandfather of our townsman, Mr. W. T. Wells, was a guest at Mr. Phelps' log cabin during the trial of a cow case. The cabin was crowded, and a number of witnesses were examined by the plaintiff and defendant, after which they argued the case. The Judge said he had been very much interested, and was surprised to see how clear an idea each one of them had of what he wished to prove, and just what bearing the evidence had on the case. He was more than ever surprised when Mr. Phelps told him that neither man could read or write. He could scarcely believe it, and said that frontier life had developed and broadened these men to an extent that would have been impossible anywhere else.

"In 1836 William J. Phelps was elected County Commissioner, and in 1840, after a hotly contested campaign, he was returned to the Legislature over Judge Norman H. Purple by a majority of eight votes, while the Harrison Electors were defeated by thirty-two votes. Judge Purple contested the election, and, after a long fight, Mr. Phelps was sustained in a Democratic Legislature. John Dougherty, afterwards Lieutenant-Governor, one of the Democratic members of the Election Committee, said boldly, 'Politics is one thing, but right is another. I believe that Phelps has been elected, and I shall support him.'

"These early settlers were not without their amusements. There was a log-rolling now and then, and, once or twice a year, a general round-up hunt. Then, too, there was the neighborhood dance, and the spelling-school, and, greatest of all, sugaring off time in the maple woods in the spring. The women did a good deal of visiting. They went early, spent the afternoon and staid to supper.

"Every now and then there was a quilting, on which occasions there was the usual amount of gossip. At one of these the ladies present got into a discussion of the comparative merits of their husbands. One was good-natured, but slack and a bad provider; another always kept the house well supplied, but was a constant fretter—and so on around until Mrs. ———— was reached. She raised her spectacles on her forehead, crossed her hands on the quilt and said:

"Well, when I tell you what I lost, if I had married, I know I never would."

"In 1847 Mr. Phelps secured the establishment of the Elmwood Post Office. He was Postmaster and Mail Contractor, the mail being brought twice a week from Farmington, although, if I remember right, the pay was only for one mail each week. At twelve years old I qualified as Deputy Postmaster, and also as Mail Carrier. The office was first kept in the house of Mr. William J. Phelps, in a cherry desk which was made for the purpose by the neighborhood cabinet-maker, Isaac West. It is still preserved in the family as a historic relic. Mr. Phelps afterwards built an office twelve or fourteen feet square by the roadside near the house. When the Post Office was moved to town, this building was sold to Mr. Neagy for a shoe shop."

CITY OF ELMWOOD.

The city of Elmwood is the outgrowth of the location of the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad up the Kickapoo Creek instead of by Farmington, as it was originally intended. William J. Phelps was one of the directors. He owned large tracts of land in the immediate vicinity, which would be greatly enhanced in value by having a ready market for their out-put. How far his influence extended in securing the location of the road to this point does not appear in the records, but being a man of wealth, influence and business ability, it may safely be inferred that he had much to do with it.

The first settlement on what is now the Town of Elmwood was made by John Jordan on the southwest quarter of Section 8. He built a house of hewed logs and enclosed about thirty acres with a sod fence. The house was located on or near what is now lot six or seven in Block "W."

Mr. Phelps purchased this tract in 1851. He, at the same time, owned and had under improvement the east half of the southwest quarter of Section 7, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 8. They were all fenced with a "six rail worm fence, staked and double ridged—regular eight rail Virginia fences"—of rails made in the vicinity.

From the early part of 1852 the railroad was regarded as a certainty, and arrangements were made to lay out and build a town. Mr. Phelps, not wishing to make a final plat until the railroad tracks and station were located, made measurements and sold building lots assuring the purchasers that, if there should be any failure in the building of the railroad, he would take them off their hands and repay them the prices. The first house was built in the summer of 1852 by George Rodenbaugh on lot 3, Block V. About the same time Dr. Swisher built on lot 2, Block V, the Elmwood Hotel property; Levi Richardson put up a house on lot 4 or 5, Block R. In the spring of 1853, Porteus B. Roberts, a civil engineer on the railroad, erected a house on lot 4, Block Q.

"In the winter of 1852-3 an arrangement was made with Mr. A. S. Andrews, who had a store at Newburgh, to remove his buildings and business to Elmwood, and in the latter part of the winter or early spring the new store commenced business and the first goods were there sold in Elmwood. It was on the northeast corner of Lot 1, Block W. In the latter part of the summer Addison L. Tracy and Walter T. Brewster built a brick store on the northwest corner of lot 1, Block Q. Nelson Burnham, of Farmington, now of Peoria, was the contractor. This building has, in recent years, been enlarged and remodeled by Mr. Nelson Criger, and is now a very handsome and attractive structure."

Elmwood was incorporated as a village, February 27, 1867, and, as a city, May 24, 1892. It had a population of 1,582, according to the census of 1900.

COAL MINING.

The first coal discovered in this region was found on the land belonging to William J. Phelps, near the village of Elmwood in the year 1835. It was obtained in small quantities for blacksmiths' use by stripping off the overlying surface. In course of time other deposits were found, and gradually coal-stoves were introduced for heating purposes. For some years all the mining was done by drifting into the hillsides.

In 1866, William E. Phelps formed a partnership with James Lee, which firm put down the first shaft in the timber west of the residence of Mr. William J. Phelps, on the southeast quarter of Section 18, which was worked by horse power for a year. About this time Mr. William J. Phelps joined the firm and, in the autumn of 1867, a shaft was sunk nearer the town on the southwest quarter of Section 17, which was operated by steam-hoisting machinery. Two years later another shaft was sunk near by, and the two being connected, the first one was converted into an escapement shaft, which is supposed to have been the first in the State affording absolute security to the men below.

In 1869, the Elmwood Coal Company built a narrow-gauge railroad to the mines and fitted up shipping and retail yards in the village. In 1873, another shaft was sunk by the same company, which then consisted of William J. Phelps and his son William E. Phelps, since which time the mines have continued to do an extensive business, employing from 100 to 200 men. In December, 1899, however, this company being unable to meet its obligations, its property went into the hands of a receiver, by whom it was operated for a considerable time, and is probably yet in the hands of creditors, but being quite valuable, it will doubtless soon go into hands that will operate it upon a substantial scale.

BANKS.

The first bank in Elmwood was established about 1865, by William J. Phelps, with Harlan P.

Tracy as cashier, and occupied modest quarters in the rear of the "long brick store," as Tracy's dry-goods store was known. A commodious bank building was soon erected, which has been the home of the financial institutions during the intervening years, and is yet so occupied by Messrs. Clinch, Schenck & Lott.

Phelps & Tracy became the banking firm, and about 1875, Mr. Tracy assumed the whole and his nephew, Fred B., became cashier and partner, the business known as H. P. Tracy & Co. The Tracys failed in 1883. The "Farmers and Merchants Bank" was immediately organized by the brothers, Edwin R. Brown, of Elmwood, and Deloss S. Brown of Peoria, which was sold at the end of about three years to Thomas Clinch and W. H. Lott, who had, in the meantime, opened another bank. At that time Henry Schenck was taken in as a partner and the name of Clinch, Schenck & Lott adopted, under which name the bank has had, and now maintains, a successful position. The deaths of Thomas Clinch and Wm. H. Lott have changed the personnel of the concern, which now consists of W. A. Clinch, Henry Schenck, M. T. Lott and Harry Schenck.

In 1891 the Elmwood State Bank was organized with a capital of $25,000, later increased to $50,000. In 1898 it was placed in the hands of J. D. Putnam as receiver, who is yet in charge of its assets, having paid a large per cent to its depositors.

In May, 1898, George Smith and his son Charles opened the Bank of Elmwood, closing it and paying off their depositors at the end of one year.

MANUFACTORIES.

Elmwood has the varied experience with manufactories that is common to all towns in a new and developing country.

The principal enterprises, which endured for many years or are yet in operation, are coal-mining, paper-making, wagon and foundry shops, brick and tile factories, and many smaller industries. The coal interests were developed by James Lee and W. E. Phelps, on the extensive lands of W. J. Phelps, and, for thirty years, have been in operation almost continuously. Through most of this period W. E. Phelps has been the sole owner, incorporated as the Elmwood Coal Company. In December, 1899, Mr. Phelps' property passed into the hands of receiver H. W. Lynch, of Peoria. The town property of the estate and the farm lands have passed into various hands.

Straw paper manufacture was begun in 1867 by Hugh Armson and continued by the Elmwood Paper Company, with a capital of $30,000. H. P. Tracy secured control of the property after a few years and operated it until his failure in 1883. The mill was bought at receiver's sale by E. L. Brown, who enlarged and operated it until its destruction by fire in 1893, he having sold it to the Columbia Straw Paper Company a few months previously.

During his ownership of the paper mill Mr. Brown had established, in 1891, the Elmwood Electric Light Company, which he still owns and operates, lighting also Yates City, Knox County, three miles distant, and having the largest number of lights in operation of any station in the United States, proportioned to population of the constituent towns. The company maintains a model station with service and prices which make the electric light a feature of the attractiveness and life, both commercial and social, of the two towns thus favored.

Besides many small industries and those above detailed, Elmwood has a brick and tile factory, making building and paving brick, and the Advance Canning Factory, owned by D. H. Gray & Son, having a large output of corn and tomatoes.

CHURCHES.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Invited to a notice publicly given, persons who had taken letters of recommendation from their respective churches, and who were desirous of uniting in organizing a Congregational Church in Elmwood, met for that purpose at the house of W. T. Brewster, on Monday, June 5, 1854. Mr. William J. Phelps was appointed Moderator, and Mr. W. H. Chapman, Scribe. The church was duly organized consisting of the following members: William J. Phelps, Mrs. Olive B. J. Phelps, Walter T. Brewster, Mrs. Emily C. Brewster, Zeno E. Spring, Mrs. Avella G. Spring, Warren H. Chapman, Mrs. Susan S. Chapman, Mrs. Ann L. Tracy.

A constitution, articles of faith and church covenant were adopted, and W. T. Brewster and W. H. Chapman were chosen Deacons.

Rev. F. Orton, then a recent graduate of Union Theological Seminary, New York, became the acting pastor, June, 1854. He died in Elmwood, August 20, 1855, greatly beloved and mourned by his people. During his pastorate nine members were added to the church by letter.

During the years 1854 and '55, the church and society erected a house of worship. Previous to the time of its completion, the congregation worshipped in an upper and unfurnished room over the store of Mr. A. L. Tracy. Rev. R. Rudd supplied the pulpit for a few months, commencing December 16, 1855. From some time in March, 1856, until August of the same year, the church had no stated ministerial supply, but there were added to the church, during that time, twelve members by letter, and three on profession. Rev. J. Steiner became an acting pastor of the church, in August, 1856, and labored as such until May 31, 1858.

Rev. Sherlock Bristol received a call, November 18, 1858, and became the acting pastor of the church, and labored as such nearly two years.

Rev. W. G. Pierce commenced his labors with the church, April 21, 1861, and soon after received a call from the church and society to become their pastor. He was duly ordained and installed, November 20, 1861. During the progress of the War of the Rebellion he acted as Chaplain of the Seventy-seventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, something more than a year, the church granting him leave of absence for that purpose. He was also absent for a few weeks in the service of the United States Christian Commission, in the Army of the Potomac.

Mr. Pierce closed his ministry with the church in 1871. For some months the church was without a pastor, being supplied by different clergymen and candidates. In 1872 Rev. Albert Fitch preached as supply one year. The church then called Allen J. Van Wagner, who had just graduated from the Chicago Theological Seminary. Mr. Van Wagner at once entered upon his labors, and, in October, following, was duly ordained and installed as pastor of the church. He was succeeded by Rev. L. R. Royce, Rev. W. R. Butcher, Rev. W. S. Pressy and the present pastor, Rev. Arthur Miles, who entered upon his ministry December 1, 1896.

The first house of worship was a plain brick building, with lecture or Sunday-school rooms on the first or basement floor and auditorium on the second. It was remodeled and its appearance greatly improved in the year 1893, at the cost of about $10,000. It now has a large corner tower with bell. The auditorium is still on the second floor, the first being divided into parlors, classrooms and large Sunday-school rooms. It is heated by two large furnaces, lighted with electric lights, comfortably furnished, and has a seating capacity of about four hundred.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—This Church like every other Methodist Church, began with the class. Prior to the year 1850, a class or society was organized in the home of Absalom Kent, then living near the grove a short distance southwest of where the town is now located. Among the early members were Abner Smith and his wife Eliza, Absalom Kent and his wife, Rufus Kent and his wife, David Morey and his wife, and John Jordan and his wife. It was at first a preaching station in the Canton Circuit, but a few years later the Canton Circuit was formed which included the station at Kent. There was no church building. The people at first worshipped in private houses, afterwards in an "upper room" over the store of Mr. Snyder. David Morey was class-leader and John Jordan, Elder. In the spring of 1854, the preaching was removed to Elmwood, then a village with but few houses. In the fall of 1854, the Elmwood Circuit was formed, which included Elmwood, Goulds near where Yates City now is, Remington's School House near Maquon, the Stone House near Spoon River, north of Elmwood, and French Creek. Rev. Jarvis G. Evans, late President of Hedding College, was preacher in charge. In the spring of 1855, the congregation began the erection of a house of worship on Silock Street, which was completed and dedicated in the fall of the same year by Rev. Silas Bolles, of Chicago, who had recently been pastor for two years of the First Church, Peoria. The first house of worship having served its day, a new one was erected, in the year 1893 on Main Street, at a cost of $10,000. The first Sunday-school was a Union school held in the store-room, David Morey being Superintendent. The first distinctively Methodist Sunday-school was organized in the church soon after its erection. Francis Minor was its first Superintendent.

Since the year 1855 this church has had a continuous supply of ministers, among whom may be mentioned, as worthy of special note, Revs. John Borland, Jarvis G. Evans, Andrew Magee, Milton L. Haney, Martin D. Heckard, James Ferguson, E. P. Hall, H. K. Metcalf, George W. Gue and S. J. G. Worthington.

Some of the well known ministers who have been Presiding Elders are the following: Richard Haney, S. J. G. Worthington, L. B. Kent, W. H. Hunter, M. V. B. White, C. O. McCulloch and F. W. Merrill.

The church maintains a Sunday-school averaging about eighty in attendance, of which Dr. C. P. Burt is Superintendent. It also has an Epworth League of about forty members, of which Dr. Cara E. Duth is Superintendent.

Rev. S. J. Cummings is the present pastor. The church is in a prosperous condition.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—Pursuant to appointment, a committee of Presbytery, consisting of Rev. Daniel F. McFarland, Rev. William A. Fleming, Rev. John C. Hanna and Ruling Elder Andrew Rogers, met at the Methodist Episcopal Church on June 5, 1856, for the purpose of organizing a Presbyterian Church. Fourteen persons were received by letter from other churches, and a church was organized with the following officers: Andrew D. Rogers, Ruling Elder, and M. Bush, John Bodine, George Griggs and Levi Richardson, Trustees. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was first administered in the Methodist Episcopal Church on June 8th, Rev. D. F. McFarland officiating.

After struggling along for about three years, the minister having moved away and many of the members having united with other churches, it was deemed best to reorganize. Application for that purpose having been made to Presbytery, a new committee was appointed which met on December 20, 1859, when twenty-three persons were received as members and the church was reorganized under its former name of "First Presbyterian Church of Elmwood." The Elders elected at that time were William Simpson, George L. Lucas and Joseph Warne. The first two having been formerly ordained to that office, were, on January 15, 1860, duly installed in this church.

After the reorganization a house of worship was purchased from the Congregational Society, which they had formerly erected at Newburgh, and moved into the village. It was at first located where the West Park is now, but, in the year 1877, was removed to the site of the present church building.

Rev. James E. Marquis was pastor from the time of its reorganization, in 1859, until his death, which occurred, February 22, 1863. Rev. George N. Johnson then supplied the pulpit for about one year, when in June, 1864, Rev. James H. Smith was called to the pastorate. He continued to fill that office until the fall meeting of Presbytery, in the year 1867, when by mutual consent the pastoral relation was dissolved. In November of that year Rev. John R. Reasoner began preaching for the church as a supply and, at the next meeting of Presbytery, received a call to become pastor, which he accepted. He remained pastor of the church until the year 1880, after which, until 1885, the pulpit was filled by supplies, among whom were Rev. A. C. Wilson, 1882-83, and Rev. C. C. Kerlinger in 1885. In the latter year, Rev. C. C. B. Duncan was called to the pastorate and remained until 1890. He was succeeded in 1890 by Rev. W. H. Mason until 1894. In June, 1895, the present pastor, Rev. B. Y. George, became pastor.

The purchase, removal and fitting up of the first house of worship cost about $1,200. In 1801 a very neat and commodious building was erected at the cost of $7,000. Regular services are maintained every Sabbath, and there is a Sabbath-school numbering sixty-five in average attendance, with a home department of twenty-five. The church members number 153, and the contributions to the benevolent work of the denomination are regular.

THE PRESS.

The Press of Elmwood has had a fitful experience. When the town was only three or four years old, John Regan came from Knoxville and established the "Elmwood Observer," the first number of which appeared, January 6, 1858, and it continued to be issued regularly until May, 1859, when its publication ceased.

On May 19, 1860, "The Chronicle" was started by Woodcock & Son, who had come here from Peoria. Its publication came to a close in September, 1862, in consequence of Mr. O. F. Woodcock, the son, having enlisted in the Seventy-seventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteers.

No paper was published from that time until July 19, 1866, when, with the assistance of some of the citizens, Mr. John Regan revived "The Observer." About the same time Mr. O. F. Woodcock revived "The Chronicle" as a Republican paper, which continued to be issued until November 9th of the same year. On the 17th of that month, J. A. Somersby took it up and continued its publication until May 9, 1872, when he was succeeded by R. P. Childs until July 4th of the same year. Mr. E. R. Brown, of Elmwood, and Joseph F. Barrett, of Peoria, then assumed control, who, on August 15th, sold to Alpheus Davidson & Son, who ran it until the close of the Presidential campaign of that year in support of President Grant, soon after which time the press and type were removed to Canton.

On March 6, 1874, Mr. John Regan began the publication of "The Messenger," which met with good success and was continued by him until the year 1891, when, owing to old age and ill health, he sold it, after which, until the year 1895, it underwent several changes but finally suspended, by passing into the hands of "The Courier."

On May 30, 1874, Mr. J. A. Somersby commenced the publication of "The Industrial Journal," which lasted until January 6, 1876.

On June 7, 1876, W. P. Gifford and A. M. Swan commenced the publication of "The Central Illinois News," which lasted only six months.

On July 3, 1877, Mr. John C. Snyder, who had just closed his career in college, commenced the publication of a semi-weekly paper which he named "The Express." On October 4th, he changed it to a weekly and devoted its editorials to the advocacy of the Greenback faith. After two weeks further efforts he closed it out.

The first number of "The Gazette" was issued in Brimfield, November 4, 1875, and continued to be published there until July 2, 1879, when it was removed to Elmwood. The first number was issued from its new quarters, July 10, 1879, as an eight-column folio, and continued to be issued in that form until December 5th, when it was changed to a six-column folio semi-weekly, and so continued for some time.

In 1881, or thereabouts, "The Gazette" became involved financially and the plant passed into the hands of Hon. W. E. Phelps, who continued the paper until July, 1883, when the present proprietor, M. H. Spence, took charge of it. From that time the paper has steadily increased in business until it is to-day on a solid foundation, financially, having the distinction of being the only paper ever printed in Elmwood that made the proprietor money.

In December, 1894, Albert McKeighan, of Yates City, started "The Elmwood Courier," and in 1895, he purchased "The Messenger" outfit, and dropping "The Messenger," still continued the publication of "The Courier." From 1895 to 1899, "The Courier" changed hands a number of times. In June, 1899, Beardsley Brothers of Princeville, purchased "The Courier" office, and resurrected the old "Messenger," and are now publishing that paper—"The Courier" having suspended.

SCHOOLS.

A few scattered district schools were established earlier in the history of the township, but the founding of the Elmwood Academy, in 1855, marked the beginning of a literary and educational prestige which has never abated. Prof. Don Carlos Taft and Miss Anna M. Somers were the tutors in its earlier years, and the school acquired a renown and enjoyed a patronage extending over a wide scope of country. The present main floor of the Congregational Church building was its home during ten years, and until its merging into a union of districts and the establishment of the graded schools. Elmwood has two Alumni Associations—the Academy and the High School—and the large numbers who assemble at their reunions, and the worthy and distinguished places which their members fill in the world, at home and abroad, reflect the impulse they gained from their Elmwood school days, felt all through life as their most valuable asset.

A school building, adequate in its time, was erected and, later, doubled in capacity. It was destroyed by fire, few years since, and replaced by a much larger one, complete in its appointments, of handsome outline and substantially built of brick and stone. The best and ablest of Elmwood's citizens have been proud to give of their time and energy, in official or private capacities, for the highest advancement of the schools which have always attracted generous attendance from abroad, as they have had the enthusiastic support of the entire home population. A board of seven members and a faculty of twelve teachers are in immediate charge.

A History Club and a Shakespeare Society are among the literary and social attractions of the city, which has always been noted for the excellence of its musical talent.

The vigorous blood of New England was liberally drawn upon in the early settlement of the city and surrounding country, and that nucleus has always attracted its like; and, therefore, in spirit, in energy, in taste, Elmwood holds a position often favorably remarked upon. The general classes of trade are housed in fine buildings, large stocks and liberal dealing being a natural accompaniment, as a large extent of country has grown to know Elmwood as headquarters in life and business.

Large residence portions are well and uniformly improved with handsome and commodious homes; social doors are often open in welcome, and those who come to visit or to dwell in Elmwood always leave it with regret.

As noted in Part I. of this work, Elmwood was well represented in the army during the Civil War. Its veterans have maintained close social relations ever since in the maintenance of a Soldiers' Union Association, and, latterly, in the organization of a Post of the Grand Army of the Republic. It has also Masonic and Odd Fellows Lodges, with the usual complement of other benevolent associations.

Although of late years Elmwood has suffered some reverses, yet, from its contiguity to extensive coal-mines, and its railroads leading to all points of the compass, there seems to be no good reason why capital may not flow into it, nor why it should not continue to be the second city in the County of Peoria.

EDWIN RUTHVEN BROWN

Many men, looking backward when they have reached advanced years, express regret that they lacked opportunities when young; but if the lives of the men who have made history from the first records of the world prove anything, it is proven that opportunity does not so much make men as that men make opportunities.

There are few better illustrations of this truism than the life of Edwin R. Brown, "the Sage of Elmwood." He was born April 2, 1825, at the foot of Greylock Mountain, Adams, Massachusetts, a few rods from the rapids of the Hoosac River. His father, Hiram Brown, removed with his family a few years later to the village of Cummington, Massachusetts, where he operated a satinet factory.

Between working in the factory and on the neighboring farms, the boy had little time for books or play, but his hands acquired a skill and his eye an aptness, which rendered him ever a desired authority on matters of architecture, coloring and mechanical and landscape effects. These were the material manifestations of a grand and elemental mind, which, from itself and aided by environment, gave to the world a life of balanced strength and sweetness. Of hardy and intellectual ancestry, his boyhood and young manhood were passed amid those scenes of natural grandeur which brought forth such giants of brain and heart as Emerson, Thoreau, Bryant, Whittier, Garrison and Alcott, with many of whom a friendship was maintained by him through life.

His eye found the picturesque in every scene; he felt the inspiration of the mountains, he heard the music of the winds and the story of the waters that tumbled down from springs in the woods. Thus were instilled into his truly poetic soul, lessons more lasting than any to be found on printed page. In hours at early morn and at evening and on Sundays, he wandered over the hills, inhaling the sweet breath of the fields, becoming thus a botanist, a geologist and a philosopher in his close observation and love for the ways of nature. To him she told her story in the mold of rocks, in whispers of trees, in ripple of brooks and liquid music of birds. Such habits of thought gave deeper insight to a mind so formed than that possessed by shallow ones, which he likened to valueless, though perhaps showy, books,—the whole story written on the cover.

When but nine years of age a number of his companions "got religion" at a revival, and a few evenings afterward the same boys helped themselves to watermelons and apples from an adjoining farm. His boyish philosophy suggested there must be something amiss, and that instinctive feeling, that profession and practice should walk hand in hand, illustrates his unful-tering preference through life for the right simply for right's sake. This exemplifies his irreplicable character, the guiding star of all his future actions, although it often placed him at war with the trimming of parties, the cant of conservatism and with hypocrisy in its many forms.

A few winters of irregular schooling were followed by brief seasons at an academy, at Williston Seminary and at Williams' College. While a boy he walked ten miles and paid his only dollar for a copy of one of the earlier editions of Whittier's poems. To a mind thus eager to absorb the best, it is apparent that the glimpses he obtained of literature and science during his school life, would lead him in the path of high ideals, and his own writings, and his words and acts show a broader and more sympathetic faith, a more universal philosophy, than that of any formal religion.

Edwin R. Brown came to manhood at the time when the anti-slavery wave was at its crest in the New England States. His father and mother were among the first to join the Abolition camp; and to their mountain village home came often the leaders of the movement—Garrison, Phillips, Pillsbury, Fred Douglass, the Hutchinsons, and other of those devoted apostles who risked everything in the name of freedom. This inspired his young blood, and when he saw the church temporizing and halting on the question of the rights of all men to their own souls and bodies, he realized that theology and real religion were very different things; that true religion must be one thing to all men, and consist not in words and observances, but in right deeds and actions. It was of these times that he wrote:

"We fought the demon slavery,
And there the prophets came
To kindle in that mountain nook
Fair Freedom's sacred flame."

Through the abolition movement he became, therefore, one of the leading free-thinkers of the West; for, after teaching and engaging in business a short time following his school days and his marriage with Miss Marilla L. Jenkins in 1849,—than whom no man ever had a truer helpmate,—he made a new home in Illinois, coming to Elmwood in 1856. That attractive little city was his home during forty active years and until his death, August 8, 1896.

Here again he was thrown into the maelstrom of the movement for the abolition of slavery, and his ready pen and convincing voice were in constant demand. He took time from business to make many addresses, backed by earnest friends, although sometimes opposed by the logic of bad eggs and hard snowballs. He also became a powerful writer for local papers and for those of national circulation. This brought him into literary prominence, and, for a time while health permitted, he edited the "Peoria Evening Review," then a leading paper of Central Illinois; and he was, at a later period on the editorial staff of the "Saturday Evening Call." Associations then formed between him and Eugene Baldwin, Thomas Cratty, S. R. Henderson and others at interest with him, continued a source of mutual pleasure and esteem throughout his life.

It is a matter of record that Mr. Brown organized a club, the first in Western Massachusetts, and possibly the first in the Nation to adopt the name Republican; and, while at variance with the early policy of that party on the slavery question, he hailed with joy its attitude toward rebellion and the welding of the sentiment in that party for union and emancipation.

As an artisan and builder, the dwellings and business properties he erected and owned yet speak his taste for landscape effects and architectural excellence. Thirty years a merchant, his store was exceptionally recognized as a center of the best in art, for novelty as well as for intrinsic values. During many years he was associated with the public schools in such capacities as Director or President; was Postmaster under four administrations, from Grant to Cleveland; and for several years a banker.

Open and fearless in his views upon social, political and religious questions, he extorted the admiration of those opposed to him, his ability and courtesy being of that character that made him warmest friends among those of contrary views in religion or politics. At his funeral, his dear friends of later years, President Finley, of Knox College, and Rev. R. B. Marsh, of Peoria, from whose desk in the People's Church he had often spoken, the local clergymen and his friends of older times, spoke, as privileged, in warm words their esteem of what his life had been to himself, his associates and to the world. From a poem written by him of his father, these words could as truly be said of him:

"Smiling, weeping, true ways keeping,
In Truth's battle strong;
Living cleanly and serenely,
Life was sweet and long."

His riper years and ever expanding mind absorbed and breathed forth an ever richer volume of mellow philosophy, which drew to him the friendship and admiration of those high in the world of letters and of progressive thought. John Howard Bryant, a brother of the poet, and himself not less a student of nature and portrayer of the beautiful, prized Mr. Brown through long years as his closest companion; and these two devoted and congenial friends sojourned together several winters in Florida and California, and summers in New England. Whittier, Thoreau, Chadwick, Ingersoll—such were the prized associates of his best years; and when the centennial of the poet, William Cullen Bryant, was celebrated at his birthplace in Massachusetts, Mr. Brown was chosen to deliver the oration. It was a masterpiece in style, finish and reference; most satisfying to the many savants and scholars of renown gathered there, as well as to the thousands of residents of the region to whom both the poet and the orator had been familiar figures in former years. Similar addresses he afterwards delivered at Knox College, Galesburg, and at Princeton, Illinois, the home of John Howard Bryant, the venerable brother of the greater poet.

The Peoria Scientific Association looked upon Mr. Brown as its chief attraction, and much of his best work was the writing of the addresses with which he closed the lectures of each year. One of them, "The Law of Change," has been published in several editions and has never been surpassed and rarely equaled. The late Dr. Stewart termed him "the Western Burroughs, the Emerson of the Prairies." Space is too limited in which to speak in detail of his travels; of his versatility as writer and speaker; his grace in portrayal of nature; his speeches on various subjects and occasions; of his poems, in which pathos, humor and earnest purpose flowed in perfect measure. A sage, poet, reformer, he excelled in nothing so much as in character; so that he was recognized everywhere as an elevating and energetic factor in all that was for the best in the community. A clear and deep thinker, a heart broad and tender in its sympathies, his love embraced mankind. Col. Ingersoll said of him:

"Edwin R. Brown was a soldier in the army of progress, and he bravely battled to the end. He fought for the weak against the strong, to free the bodies and the minds of men. I loved him, and his death is softened by the memory of great and splendid deeds, of wise and loving words. His passing is like the setting of the sun, which leaves the heavens glorious with golden clouds."

He delivered addresses at more than eighty funerals, and, through his words, thousands learned a faith that sprung deep in his soul, a deep religious sense, compatible with an entire absence of theology, needing no book and no human interpreter to discipline him to the beautiful order of Nature. His was a high and serene faith that, in the change of worlds, there is no reason to think we will be deprived of opportunities, and that all is and will be well. He expressed a growing consciousness that he would meet those gone before, and greet those that shall come after; that the same power, whatever it is, that rules in this world will rule in the next. No one could have a more fervent attachment to the beauties of this life, to devoted family and friends; but when the time of parting came, none ever gave them up in a gentler or more heroic spirit.

His wife died April 25, 1901. A true mating was theirs, a first love, a union of every wish and purpose, and when he was gone her days were but a waiting time.

A little son, Tileston, died many years ago, and a son, Lester, and a daughter, Lois, wife of Dr. J. F. Cooper, both reside in Elmwood. A sister resides in California, and his two surviving brothers, Hiram and Deloss S., are citizens of Peoria.

THOMAS CLINCH.

More than is given to the majority who are the architects of their own fortunes, Thomas Clinch realized his inherent aspirations for the best that his environment made possible, and upon the super-structure of a fine and harmonious character, erected a success within the power of those only who are large of heart, broad in experience and more than ordinarily endowed with good judgment and business sagacity. Like an animate spirit of the Middle West, he was the personification of all that radiates and develops from the fertility of Illinois, and reflected in his accomplishments the abundant harvests, financial soundness and multitudinous interests which have arisen and flourished upon the prairies, redeemed from inactivity by the ingenuity of man. Nor was his life expansion a matter of mature years and propitious opportunity, but rather took root in the heart of a boy, injured by early misfortune to the serious and responsible side of existence. In Kent, the luxuriant garden spot of England, he was born January 26, 1827, and was the oldest in a family of five children. When he was nine years old, his father died, and, as the diminutive head of a family dependent upon their own resources, his youthful energy was shifted to the field of support. For years he faithfully performed his duty to those near and dear to him, and his education was naturally curtailed by the arduous duties which filled his days. Observation, however, played an important part and influenced the formation of his ideas; and, in time, his ambition extended beyond the shores of his native island, intensified by the fact that friends had preceded him to the new world, and in Illinois had found a broader field for their activities. To the tireless and fearless who have reached the age of twenty-two, there are few insurmountable obstacles; and the fact that he arrived in Peoria County with available assets amounting to two dollars and fifty cents, in no way diminished his ardor or impoverished his expectations. The journey to the well-known faces and voices awaiting him in Illinois was accomplished by means of such transportation as he could command in return for services rendered, and he at once took up the burden of life destined to broaden at the approach of his understanding and energy. A friend in need presented himself in the person of Nathan Kellogg, who had a large farm on the Farmington Road, and in whose employment he remained for thirteen months, at thirteen dollars a month. A fellow laborer and sharer of early hours and hard work was William Pitt Kellogg, who afterwards became a politician of note and, in time, a Senator from, and Governor of, Louisiana. By the exercise of frugality Mr. Clinch was enabled to save sufficient means to permit of independent farming on land owned by the Hovendons; and, while thus endeavoring to forge his way to the front, married, in 1854, Sarah Ann, oldest daughter of Major S. Bohanan. The following year he removed to the southwest corner of Elmwood Township, and, in 1860, removed to Rosefield Township, through the simple process of building himself a house across the road from his former residence. With the coming of succeeding summers his grain ripened under the beneficent Illinois sun, his cattle flourished and multiplied, and the ready disposal of his general produce eliminated more and more the possibility of future want. From the comparatively small amount of land, his possessions increased to three, and then four hundred acres, the splendid development and resourcefulness of which far exceeded his anticipations.

With the same vigorous mentality which had directed his farming enterprises, Mr. Clinch entered into the affairs of Elmwood, to which place he removed in 1886. There was immediate demand for his financial discernment, and when he entered into partnership with Mr. W. H. Lott in the banking business, the move was correctly construed as an advance in the general prosperity. This association was amicably continued until the tragic demise of Mr. Lott in the Chatsworth disaster, in 1887, after which Mr. Clinch re-organized the bank, associating with him Henry Schenck, Marshall Lott, and his son, Walter A. Clinch, the affairs of the bank being then conducted under the firm name of Clinch, Schenck & Lott. This banking house became one of the substantial financial concerns of Peoria County, and through it and his various other interests, Mr. Clinch accumulated, in his own right, about $50,000. A staunch upholder of Republican institutions, he took an intelligent and active interest in local affairs, and held many offices of responsibility in the township. In 1874 he was a member of the Board of Supervisors from Rosefield Township, and was repeatedly re-elected to the position until his removal to Elmwood. The same office awaited him in his new location, and he was thus serving the interests of his township at the time of his death, October 13, 1895. As chairman of the Board he was instrumental in encouraging numerous improvements in municipal affairs, and it was partly owing to his efforts that the new court-house was erected. Although a member of no particular religious denomination, he was essentially religious, and fashioned his dealings with men upon humanity and the golden rule. He was essentially a well balanced man, and few inharmonious notes disturbed the well-adjusted composite wholeness of his character. Life to him was a meeting ground of friends, and a field of effort to be optimistically regarded and faithfully canvassed, and no harshness or malice or bitterness entered into his calculations, or disturbed the geniality and good-fellowship of his nature. At his funeral there were innumerable indications of the esteem in which he was universally held; flowers galore breathed their tender messages; special trains brought to Elmwood former friends and associates; business was entirely suspended, and the flag on the court-house was at half mast.

To Mr. and Mrs. Clinch were born four children: Walter A., born September 24, 1856; Charles E., born August 11, 1858; Maud, born August 29, 1864; and Sadie B., born May 22, 1872. Charles E. became a farmer after attaining his majority, but died at the early age of twenty-four, of typhoid fever. Maud married H. B. Wilkinson, and died in 1893, leaving two children: Sumner and Cecil. Sadie, an unusually promising girl, graduated from the Elmwood high-school and from the Knox College Conservatory of Music, but unfortunately contracted consumption in 1895 and died the following year. Walter A., after graduating from the Elmwood high-school and taking a course at the Wesleyan College, Bloomington, Illinois, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1878. Owing to ill-health his professional practice was of short duration, and he eventually became a member of the firm of Clinch, Schenck & Lott, and is now the head of the firm. Through his marriage, in 1884, with Bessie, daughter of Rev. John Miller of Peoria, two children have been born, Charles and Paul.

ARCHIBALD. THOMAS: Farmer; born on the Isle of Man, December 13, 1826; received a common school education. He came to America in 1852, arriving at Springfield, Illinois, October 15th of that year. Thence he went to Macon County, where he remained two years; then after spending a year at Brimfield, Peoria County, removed to Eugene, Knox County, where he remained ten years, and from there went to Kansas for a few months. In 1868, he located on a farm four miles south of the city of Elmwood. Mr. Archibald married Ann Susan Kalb, in Macon County, Illinois, September 25, 1854. They had nine children: James Henry, born August 19, 1855, died August 1, 1856; Thomas A., born April 22, 1857, married Emma Ruppe; Jane Eliza, born November 8, 1858, married William Horner; Josiah N., born March 27, 1860, married Hattie Brinner; George W., born October 15, 1861; Ella, born March 1, 1863, married Isaac Taylor; Anna May, born July 29, 1864, married Henry Sultz; Abraham Lincoln, born March 21, 1867, and John Edson, born January 10, 1869, married Mary Shambough. They reside on the old homestead. Mr. Archibald is a Methodist. Mrs. Archibald was born in Virginia, June 26, 1834, the daughter of Ezekiel and Eliza (Cummings) Kalb. She was a member of Graham Chapel, of the M. E. Church; died December 28, 1897.

Mr. Archibald is a Republican, and has served as School Director and Road Commissioner. He prizes highly a document, now in his possession, which reads as follows:

He finally bought the mill, which he operated until 1880, when it was destroyed by fire. In the meantime he had invested in a farm of one hundred and twenty acres southeast of the city of Elmwood, which he managed for several years until he met with an accident, which unbalanced his mind. He was an expert miller and a very industrious man. Mrs. Bacher and her son, George, look after the business. Mrs. Bacher was married to Mr. Bacher, in Chicago, in 1876, and they have had five children: Eliza, George, Anna, Mary M. and Sophia J. Eliza married William Threw. BARTHOLOMEW, ALBERTUS Y.: Farmer; born February 26, 1838, the third white child born in Elmwood Township. Mr. Bartholomew came of fine old New England parentage. His paternal grandparents, Noyes Dana and Betsy

Bartholomew, were born in Wallingford, Connecticut; his maternal grandparents, General John Yale and Mary Yale, were natives of New Haven. His father, Luzerne Bartholomew, a native of Connecticut, emigrated to Illinois in 1837, coming all the way in a covered wagon, and settled on a farm in Section 6, where he built a log-house for his family. He bought three eighty-acre tracts of land, and later erected substantial buildings, among them a comfortable residence, tread-mill, wind-mill and a woolen mill. He was a man of infinite resources and equally expert in various callings. Besides being a skillful farmer, he was a fine machinist. He helped to lay out the town of Newburg and was largely interested in other enterprises. In 1848 he crossed the plains to California with a company of emigrants, and was made Captain of the expedition. Soon after his arrival in California, he captured a grizzly bear weighing about two thousand pounds, which he brought home by the Isthmus of Panama, it being the first live animal ever taken across the Isthmus. After coming home, he exhibited the bear throughout the United States, in Eastern and Southern Canada, and, in the fall of 1856, made a trip to Europe, exhibiting the bear in all the leading cities. During all these travels his son, Albertus Y., was his constant attendant. In 1866 the father died. He was twice married, his first wife being Betsy Yale,

the Yale family of that State. She was a highly educated woman, possessing great literary talent, writing both prose and poetry with facility. She was the mother of three children, of whom Albertus Y. is the only survivor. John B., a soldier, was a flag-bearer at the siege of Vicksburg, where he died in the service of his country before he was twenty years of age. Sarah Helen died at the age of eighteen. Albertus Y. Bartholomew gained his primary education in the district schools and subsequently pursued an excellent course of study in the Galesburg Academy, but attended school only six months after his sixteenth year. Mr. Bartholomew began his farming operations with an eighty-acre tract of half improved land, and did so well in its cultivation that he has been enabled to buy more until he now owns five hundred and sixty-five acres, which is considered one of the best farms in Peoria County. He is largely engaged in raising stock and has acquired some wealth in his dealings. By his marriage to Miss Mary Ennis, May 15, 1862, Mr. Bartholomew secured a wife devoted to his interests in every way. She is the daughter of John and Sarah (Loomis) Ennis, natives respectively of New York and Connecticut. Mrs. Bartholomew was born in Westmoreland County, New York, June 16, 1840, and came west with her parents when but six years of age, the family settling on a farm in Salem Township, where Yates City now stands. Mr. and Mrs. Bartholomew are the parents of six children: John B., manufacturer and inventor, is Vice President of the Avery Manufacturing Company of Peoria; Orie Y., a graduate of Knox College and poet of the class of 1888, is now at the head of the Bartholomew Manufacturing Company of Peoria; Lura H., also a graduate of Knox College, where she was class historian, is associated with a publishing house of Chicago; Charles A., manufacturer, is at the head of the branch house of the Bartholomew Company, located at Cincinnati, Ohio; Carrie Maud, now the wife of Joe De Jarnette, of Des Moines, Iowa; and Pessie Alice, who died August 15, 1897. Mr. Bartholomew is a noble-spirited, high-minded, generous-hearted man of exemplary habits, whose course both in public and private life is beyond reproach, and he and his wife are noted for their hospitality, their kindness and cordiality, which renders their charming home in the town of Elmwood attractive to all who enter. Mr. Bartholomew is a strong Republican and takes a deep interest in politics. He has held the office of Commissioner of Highways; was Supervisor four terms, at one time saving the township $50,000 in railroad bonds, which had been irregularly floated; and has been President of the Board of Education several terms.

BROWN, EDWIN LESTER: Elmwood; born in Cummington, Massachusetts, December 23, 1850. From New England, the cradle of his birth, he came to Elmwood in 1856 with his parents, Edwin R. and Marilla (Jenkins) Brown. Industrious in mind and body, he worked on farms and in shops between terms of school until the age of seventeen. Entering the store of his father, he began a life of varied interests and activities which has made him a prominent feature in the prosperity and attractiveness of Elmwood to the present day. Aptitude in business and a faculty for details have always brought him unusual responsibilities. During many years he was manager and partner with his father in merchandising, and with whom, also, he was associated as Assistant Postmaster and as bank cashier, and was also partner with A. C. Arms in a successful dry-goods business. Purchasing the Elmwood Paper Mill, he operated it with excellent results for some years, until its destruction by fire in 1893. For ten years past he has been the owner and manager of the Elmwood Electric Light Company. He originated and developed the business there and extended the lines to Yates City. The station is rated the largest lighting system in the United States, proportioned to population. He has always enjoyed the good will of the community and has justified it by enterprising methods and liberal policies in business. Endowed with a voice of especially sympathetic and expressive qualities, his singing has been a source of great pleasure to multitudes who have enjoyed it in parlor, church and hall. Refusing the allurements of the professional stage, where he had reason to believe his talent would have brought him a high degree of fame, he has made his voice a modest contribution to the attractions of the social circles where he has moved.

His devotion to his father and his lifetime association with him in personal and business relations were of a character rare even between father and son. A rare heredity was his, enriched by close relations with such parents and such a home. Intelligent and well equipped, therefore, he has wide and reasonable views of life and of the forces that move the world. He is a lover of literature, of art, of investigation, and he is also in touch with the economic and business pulse of the times.

Independent in politics and religion, charitable in his opinions, he holds faith in the improving conditions of man and woman, and in the ultimate happiness of all mankind. He reads his best sermons in the processions of nature his home is his temple, and the loved ones who meet him there are his ministers.

He married, in 1870, Miss Laura Smith, of San Jose, California, a native of Decatur, Illinois, in whose warm heart and steadfast and reliant mind he has always found brave companionship and true support. Two children, Marian M. and Edwin O. comprise their family.

Their spacious new mansion, "Elberon," has wide doors of hospitality, and their numerous friends pass many hours there, where taste and good cheer combine to make an ideal home, in a community notable for the high order of its sociability.

For about four years he was engaged in the practice of law in Peoria with success and profit. Failing in health, however, he abandoned the law and took up farming on his father's land, that he might recover his health in the outdoor work and open air. This change brought him health and, at the end of two years on the farm an opportunity was presented him of entering into the business of banking at Elmwood. Mr. Clinch entered the Elmwood Bank in November, 1886. The proprietors of the bank at that time were Thomas Clinch, his father, who had associated with him Mr. W. H. Lott in the business. The active management of the bank was intrusted to W. A. His parents, Lewis Edson and Lydia (Doolittle) Washburn, were born in Connecticut, the former in 1777, the latter in 1783. Dr. Washburn located in Elmwood Township in 1849, where he has since practiced medicine with success. His first marriage was at Farmington, Illinois, with Antoinette Bradley, a successful teacher, and a native of Pavilion, New York. Three children graced their home, the eldest being Hermione (Washburn) Andrews, who is a practicing physician at Spokane, Washington; Albert Galen, who died at the age of four years, and Mattie Ethel (Washburn) Crawford, also a resident of Spokane, Washington. Dr. Washburn's second marriage was with Minnie E. Wilkins, a daughter of Frederick and Frances Wilkins, of Vermont and New York, respectively. She was born in Lacon, Illinois, March 31, 1850. Dr. Washburn is a Republican, and one of the most prominent men of Elmwood. He belongs to the Masonic Fraternity, having been initiated into the mysteries of the order at Farmington, Illinois, in 1852, and is consequently one of the oldest Masons, as well as one of the oldest physicians in the county.

WATTS, WILLIAM ISAAC; Manager of Elmwood Coal Company; was born in Boone County, West Virginia, October 9, 1848, the son of Silas and Spisa Ann (Harless) Watts, natives respectively of Point Pleasant, Macon County, and Boone County, West Virginia. His grandfather, William Watts, was born in Ireland. His grandparents in the maternal line were Philip and Eliza (Barker) Harless, the first a native of Giles County, Virginia, the other of Boone County, West Virginia. Silas Watts and six of his wife's brothers, who were Union sympathizers, kept under cover as closely as possible until the Confederates under Wise were driven from their vicinity by the Federals under General J. D. Cox, when they enlisted for service under the "Stars and Stripes," the former in September, 1861, in Company B, Eighth Regiment West Virginia Infantry, re-enlisting later and serving until 1865. At Rocky Gap, while scouting, he was wounded in the shoulder. When about thirteen years old, William Isaac Watts, by arrangement with Lieutenant Fisher, of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, attached himself to that regiment, then at Charleston, West Virginia, and, accompanying the wagon trains, assisted Jacob Weikel, of Company I, to cook and performed other services such as were possible for a boy. He went from Charleston to Washington, and thence to Alexandria, Virginia, and was with the army in several skirmishes and in the battle of South Mountain and Antietam. At the last mentioned President Lincoln reviewed the troops, a fine body including many soldiers mustered into the service from Boone County. Mr. Watts' connection with mining began soon after the close of the war. After working in the Ladley mines at Charleston and at Peytona and Coldsburg, he came to Illinois in 1877, and located at Bryant, Fulton County, where he became superintendent for the Bryant Coal Mining Company. Later, after spending some time in Arkansas and in the Black Hills, he came, in 1892, to Elmwood to occupy his present position. He is a Methodist, a Republican, a Master Mason, an Odd Fellow, and a member and chaplain of the Sons of Veterans. He served as Police Justice at Bryant, and is in his third term as a member of the Village Council of Elmwood. Mr. Watts married Martha A. Vickers, at Madison, West Virginia, August 4, 1868, and they have had eleven children: Calvern, Alma H., Randall F., Clement and Estella, all of whom are dead, and Thomas J., Alexander, Lucella, Florence F., William Goudy and Charles H. Mrs. Watts was born in West Virginia, October 14, 1848, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elias P. Vickers.

WILLSON, JAMES E.; Farmer; born in Rutland County, Vermont, October 3, 1838; educated in the common schools. Joseph, his paternal great-grandfather, was a native of Wales; Joel, his grandfather, was born in New Hampshire in 1766; Mary (Harold), his grandmother, came from the same State. His maternal great-grandparents were Edward and Abigail (Brown) Wright, whose home was in Concord, Massachusetts, where the former died. The maternal grandparents were Abner and Annie (Hunt) Wright, the former born in 1770. Mr. Willson's parents, Oliver and Mary A. (Wright) Willson, were natives of New Hampshire, the former born in 1795 and the latter October 21, 1804. They were married at Gilsun, New Hampshire, April 28, 1828. James E. Willson first came West to Indiana, but soon returned East. In 1856, he came to Brimfield, Peoria County, Illinois; afterwards went to Pike's Peak and from there to Nevada and California, finally returning to his native State of Vermont. During his journey through the Western States he endured many hardships, ox carts being the principal mode of conveyance for a part of the way. In 1868, he returned to Brimfield, engaged in raising Osage Orange hedge plants for a time, and was superintendent of a brickyard. For about twelve years he was in the Singer Sewing Machine business in Chicago and New York, during which he resided in Chicago for about eight years. Mr. Willson married in Elmwood Township, May 16, 1871, Florence E. Pulsipher, who was born in Elmwood Township, August 6, 1843, the daughter of Samuel and Angeline Pulsipher. She is a member of the Congregational Church. They have an adopted daughter, born October 23, 1884. Mr. Willson is independent in politics and, in early days, was an Odd Fellow.

ZINK, HYMAN PENN; Farmer; born in Brown County, Ohio, July 14, 1856; educated in Delaware College. His maternal grandparents were John S. and Sarah (West) Beasly, who come from Ohio. His father, Rev. M. P. Zink, was born in Highland County, Ohio, in 1825; his mother, Mary Jane (Beasly), was born in Brown County, Ohio, September 23, 1834; they were married September 26, 1855, by Rev. Mr. Dustin, while she was a student at Oakland Female Seminary. She was a loyal and consistent member of the Methodist Church for over forty-five years; she died January 18, 1898. Rev. M. P. Zink was a circuit rider of the Methodist Episcopal Church for forty years, but was super-annuated in 1889. Mr. H. P. Zink was married to Ida Bell Bowers, in Elmwood, in January, 1882. They had four children: Merle P., born September 4, 1886; Dale F., born October 6, 1888; Lelia M., born October 2, 1890; and Ruth, born January 16, 1899. Mrs. Zink was born in Mt. Pleasant, Henry County, Iowa, January 22, 1862. She was the daughter of Charles L. and Emeline Bowers; her mother is deceased, but her father is still living in Elmwood. Mr. Zink came to this township in 1875 and located on Section 6, one mile northwest of the city. He has a fine farm where he makes a specialty of raising thoroughbred short-horn cattle and Percheron horses. He is a Republican, and he and Mrs. Zink are members of the Court of Honor.

CHAPTER V.

HALLOCK TOWNSHIP.

Material Furnished by
DANIEL HAKES AND JOHN G. SPICER.

The geographical designation of this township is "Township 11, N., Range 8, E. of the Fourth Principal Meridian." It contains a large extent of bluff and timber lands, a belt of which runs through its center from north to south, varying in width from nearly four miles on the north, to a little over one mile at its southern boundary. The twelve western sections are almost entirely free of timber, and are of a most excellent quality of land. The southeast corner, situated on LaSalle Prairie, is also almost entirely clear of timber, and is splendid farming land.

The first settler in this township, without doubt, was Lewis Hallock, who came to it about the year 1820, and, after some months roving about among the Indians, took up some land and built a cabin in what is now called Hallock's Hollow. He was a native of Long Island, had left home when a young man, wandered westward and, for many years previous to his appearance in Peoria County, lived among the Indians in Wisconsin and elsewhere, gaining a livelihood by hunting and trapping. At the time of his settlement he was a single man, and, about 1825, lived for some time with a Frenchman called Osier (known in Peoria by the name of Ogee), who was the Government interpreter to the Pottawattomie Indians, and had married into the tribe. In the winter of 1820, he married a Mrs. Wright, a daughter of Hiram Cleveland, and brought her to his cabin in the hollow. By her he had one child, a girl called Clarissa, who afterwards married Henry Robinson. Hallock died, April 1, 1857, on his old farm, at the age of sixty-one years. He was a man of sterling character, upright and honest in all his dealings.

About 1825, settlers from the East began to drop into the district. Simon and Aaron Reed came from Jackson County, Ohio, in November of that year, and they were closely followed by Moses and Samuel Clifton, Francis Thomas, Joseph Meredith, Cornelius Doty, Resolved and Hiram Cleveland, Gershom Silliman and family and William Wright. In 1830, Joel Hicks and family and Jeriel Root, with his sons Erastus C. and Lucas Root, came. The greater part of these settled near the north end of La Salle Prairie. In 1830, Joseph Meredith settled on Section 12, and kept a small tavern for the accommodation of the stage-drivers and travelers on the main road between Galena and Springfield.

In the last days of June, 1836, Roswell Nurse, with his son, Isaiah Nurse, and Ebenezer Stowell, came to the township on a prospecting tour. They started from Chenango County, New York, walking to Buffalo and coming thence to Toledo by water, where they again took the road and traveled to Hallock Township on foot, with rifle on shoulder and all their equipments in one knapsack. Taking due note of the fine land lying yet unclaimed in the township, they pursued a zigzag course toward Quincy, still prospecting, but found no land more inviting, and, on arriving, forthwith entered their land in the Government Land Office at Quincy, and returned to take possession. They found at this time no one living north of Northampton, but, in the fall of the same year (1836), Erastus Root took up his residence on Section 3, now occupied by his son Lorenzo Root.

The winter of 1831 was an exceptionally severe one all over the West. During the winter, two men, strangers to the settlers, named Dr. Franklin and McMillan, with six yoke of oxen and two sleds, loaded with goods and bound for Prairie du Chien, stopped at Simon Reed's and, after a stay of about a week, during which they built another sled and hired a man by name of Cooper to go with them, started some time in the month of January, and were soon caught in a terrible north-east snow storm, which filled up their track and caused them to lose their way. Night overtook them when out on the prairie near Boyd's Grove, and they turned the oxen loose and tried to reach Boyd's on foot. Two of them perished, and the third—McMillan—got there next morning badly frozen. Eleven of the oxen were frozen to death, and one came to Meredith's.

The deepest snow ever known in the township fell during this winter. It was three feet deep on the level, and the drifts were in some places fifteen to twenty feet deep. The cold was steady and intense. The deer and wild hogs died in great numbers, and the prairie chickens and quails were almost entirely destroyed.

The Black Hawk War in 1832, found the settlers in this district not only prepared for self-defense, but to take the field against their treacherous foe. In April, of that year, Thomas Reed, Edwin S. Jones, Lucas Root, James Doty, Elias Love and Simon Reed, volunteered in Abner Eads' Company, and their services were accepted. Simon Reed was detailed to act as teamster, and served until the close of the war. James Doty was killed in the battle of Sycamore Creek, or Stillman's defeat, May 14. The others named were at the front for thirty days, and afterwards served as "rangers" on the frontier between Peoria and Rock River, until they received their discharge at the close of the war. Previous to this outbreak the Indians were quite numerous and very friendly. The Pottawatomies had three towns in or near the township—one on the land now occupied by Emory Stillman, in Medina Township, one at Smith's Springs between Rome and Chillicothe, and one on the Senachewine creek, not far from the bridge.

The first mill built near the township which the settlers in the northern part could easily reach, was that built on Senachewine by William Moffatt, on the northeast quarter of Section 18, Township 11 North, Range 9 East, one and a half miles east of Northampton, about the year 1834. The first mill built in the township, and the only one that ever did any amount of work, was erected in the year 1838 by Thomas Ford, on the northeast quarter of Section 13.

Prior to the adoption of township organization, this settlement formed part of LaSalle precinct. Simon Reed was the first Justice of the Peace, and was appointed to the office prior to 1828, and Cornelius Doty was elected Justice in the fall of 1831. This election took place at the only polling place in LaSalle precinct, covering nearly one-half of the northern part of Peoria County, on Section three of Medina Township.

In 1850 township organization was adopted, and the township received its name, out of compliment to its oldest settler, Lewis Hallock, by vote of the citizens. The first town meeting was held at the house of Reuben Hamlin in Northampton, on Tuesday, April 2, 1850. William Easton was chosen chairman pro tem. and Charles Barker Clerk, after which Charles Barker was elected by ballot Moderator of the meeting, and Robert Will, Jr., Clerk for the day. After the polls closed the following officers were declared elected: Walter S. Evans, Supervisor; Erastus C. Root, Assessor; Lyman Robinson, Collector; Isaiah Nurse, Joel Hicks, Simon Reed, Commissioners; Jesse Jenkins, Overseer of Poor; Munson Hinman, Town Clerk; William Easton and Nathaniel Chapin, Justices; Augustus Barton and Eliphalet Russell, Constables.

The present Town Officers are: Alfred Tallett, Supervisor; J. W. Gullett, Town Clerk; M. B. Vars, Assessor; William E. Wideman, Collector; Loren N. Gallup and M. M. Burdick, Justices; Thomas Burns, A. T. Bristol and W. J. Burns, Commissioners; J. R. Kidd and I. A. Barton, Constables; William Wideman, Thomas Keach and William A. Hervey, School Trustees, and Thomas Vars, School Treasurer. Mr. Vars has been Township Treasurer in charge of the school fund since October, 1875. He is a retired farmer and lives in Edelstein.

VILLAGES.

THE VILLAGE OF NORTHAMPTON was laid off on Section 13, by Reuben Hamlin and Mr. Freeman in July, 1836. The first house therein was also the first erected in the township as a tavern. It was built in the winter of 1835-36 by Reuben Hamlin, and was kept as a public house by him for many years (1). He came from Northampton Massachusetts, and he named the village, of which he was the founder, after it. Aaron Reed was the first settler near the site of the village, and his old log cabin was replaced by a house which stands beside the bridge, near the south end of the village.

Nathaniel Chapin, a native of Massachusetts, was quite a prominent resident of the village about 1840. He held the office of Justice of the Peace.

The population of the village is, at present, but little over 60, and it contains one good general store, kept by Mr. P. E. Phillips, who is also Postmaster. It has also a harness shop and a brickyard owned by Thomas Goodwin. It has also one Methodist Episcopal Church.

THE VILLAGE OF LAWN RIDGE stands upon the boundary line dividing Peoria and Marshall Counties; and has a population of about 200. Nathaniel Smith (later a resident of New York State, but now deceased) was one of the earliest settlers in it. It has two churches—a Methodist Episcopal and a Congregational—whose congregations are drawn about equally from the two counties.

Located on the Peoria side of the line, William Even runs quite an extensive agricultural implement, carriage and stove business; Fred Green operates a meat market; William Nickerson is postmaster and sells patent medicines; Newton Brag succeeds his father in the blacksmith and repair shop, and Ed. Kruse is the popular proprietor of the hotel.

EDELSTEIN, a flourishing village, situated on the northwest quarter of Section 18, has sprung up since the location of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad through the township. It was founded in the year 1887. It was at first intended to locate it on the south side of the railroad, but it was later determined to locate it on the north side on land owned by Samuel Burns. In the year 1887, Mr. A. J. Ramsey erected the first store building south of the railroad, but afterwards removed it to the north side. During the same year Robert A. Green, of Lawn Ridge, erected a grain elevator and did a thriving business in grain and stock for about three years, when he sold out to E. E. Kendall and A. R. Cline, who were succeeded in March, 1894, by the present proprietor, A. J. Speers, whose business in grain, coal, tile, seeds and stock during the past year has amounted to over $130,000, and his shipments of grain have been 366 cars. In 1894, Messrs. Kendall and Cline built another elevator northwest of the depot, near the site of one that had been burned, which they operated successfully until 1898, when they were succeeded for one year, by J. W. Cole, who sold out to A. J. Hawley and J. A. Speers. During the construction of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad in 1901, from Nelson to Peoria, this elevator was removed to Akron, a station on that road three and one-half miles southwest of Edelstein.

1) For a racy description of this tavern, the reader is referred to an elegantly written little book in our Public Library entitled, "Life in Prairie Lands."

In 1888 Mr. E. W. Houghton established a successful trade in lumber, lime, stone, brick and cement under the management of Mr. Rollin L. Houghton who, in connection therewith, established the Exchange Bank of Edelstein, and continued to manage both branches of business until his death in May, 1900. There is no bank at the present time.

In 1889, Mr. J. A. Potter, of West Hallock, built the store now occupied by J. H. Johnson, which was managed by his son Anthony Potter for about one year, after which it passed in rapid succession through the hands of several owners until, in the year 1896, it came into the possession of the present proprietor, Mr. Johnson, who does a flourishing business amounting to $20,000 per year.

One of the leading business men of Edelstein was C. Y. Brayton, a nephew of N. B. Curtiss, banker of Peoria, who began business in the fall of 1888 by building and opening a general store, which he continued to operate with an extensive stock of goods until his death, which occurred in March, 1900. Since that time the business has been carried on by his widow and son under the name of Mrs. C. Y. Brayton.

In 1888, Mr. F. W. Rotterman established the business of dealing in hardware and carriages in connection with the trade of a tinner. This he continued until 1898, when he was succeeded by F. A. Sager, whose business was so prosperous that, in 1899, he added a stock of farm machinery and harness. His business in 1900 amounted to $22,000.

M. J. McDonna operates a blacksmith, wagon and general repair and paint shop.

In 1891, Mr. W. R. Peck became owner and proprietor of the drug business in the village, and in 1893 he was appointed Postmaster, since which time, notwithstanding the political changes in the administration, he has served the public in both capacities to their entire satisfaction.

J. G. Spicer & Son have, for many years, been operating a creamery about one mile southeast of the village. Of the quality of the butter produced by them it is only necessary to say that, at the Columbian Exposition of 1893, they secured the highest score on their four months' exhibit, in token of which they have a valuable medal and a beautiful diploma—the highest award made to any exhibitor in this line. They have also carried off many first prizes at State Fairs and other exhibitions of like products. In 1900 they handled over 800,000 pounds of milk, for which they paid over $8,000. Their butter is largely used on the tables of many of the leading families of Peoria. In connection with the creamery they also have an artificial iceplant intended principally for their own use, but from which they also supply the village and surrounding country with ice.

Edelstein has one hotel which, since 1896, has been carried on by Mrs. L. V. Weber, who is doing a successful business.

The Knights of Pythias have a Lodge, organized in 1892, which has now a membership of 32, and own the two story building known as the Knights of Pythias Hall.

The Modern Woodmen of America have a Camp organized in December, 1892, which is in a flourishing condition with a membership of about 55.

WEST HALLOCK.—The hamlet of West Hallock is about one-half in Akron Township, opposite Section 10 of Hallock Township. It contains a cheese factory, which has been in operation for some years, mentioned in the history of the township in which it is located. It also has a good general store and post office, and feed mill, blacksmith and machine shop under the ownership and care of Mr. N. S. Burdick. On an adjoining lot Alfred Tallett operates a wood-working, general wagon and repair shop, with a planing mill attached, deals in wind-mills, pumps, etc., and does a general gas and steam-fitting business.

CHURCHES.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH at Lawn Ridge was organized by Rev. Owen Lovejoy, who was then a settled minister in Princeton, Illinois, in March, 1845. The original members were six in number, viz.: Ebenezer Stowell and wife, Nathaniel Smith and wife, and Dr. A. Wilmot and wife. The organization took place in a small brick school house in Hallock, which had been built about seven years before. A preacher was shortly afterwards hired and, with help from the Home Mission, regular services were maintained until about 1848, when, owing to the rapid settling up of the prairie around Lawn Ridge, the place of meeting was transferred there. At first they met in the small school house, and some years later built a small church which they continued to occupy till about 1876, when the present fine building was erected, at a cost of about $6,000. Rev. J. H. Runnells, is the present pastor.

LAWN RIDGE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The church which is known as the Lawn Ridge Methodist Episcopal Church, was built during the summer of 1856, on the land of David Shane, Sr., about three miles south of Lawn Ridge, and it was dedicated by Rev. H. Summers, under the name of Mount Hedding Methodist Episcopal Church. The leading movers in its erection were David Shane, Sr., Isaac Weidman, and John Ferguson. About fourteen years later, it was decided to move it to Lawn Ridge, which was done in the spring of 1871, and the church was rededicated July 22, of that year, under its present name. It is a plain, substantial, but well-finished building, with a seating capacity for over 200 people. The present pastor is D. C. Martin.

SEVENTH DAY BAPTIST CHURCH.—The only church in the village of West Hallock is that of the Seventh Day Baptists. In the year 1845, Elder Anthony Hakes, of Berlin, New York, came to the Township, and was followed, some three years later, by his brother, Daniel Hakes, and John Simpson. In due time accessions were made to their number, and meetings were held from house to house until the erection of the Academy building, when it was made their place of worship. On the 3d day of September, 1852, at the house of Elder Anthony Hakes, the church was organized by Elder Stillman Coon, with fourteen constituent members, Elder Coon being the first pastor. The society grew yearly in numbers, and, in 1871, it was found expedient to erect a larger and more comfortable building for their sole use. The present house was accordingly put up in the summer of that year, at a cost of $5,500, the whole of which was pledged by the adherents and friends of the church before anything was done towards its construction. The building is a neat and substantial one, and can comfortably seat 250 people. Elder A. Hakes was the founder of the church, and for many years preached to the Baptists at Union and in the surrounding country. His ministration at funerals of all sects and classes was especially popular. He was ordained to the gospel ministry in 1856 and had charge of the congregation for some years. Rev. R. B. Tolbert is the present pastor, who has been with them since November, 1899. A live Sabbath School and an enthusiastic Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor are well maintained each Sabbath.

HALLOCK METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The first Methodist sermon preached in this district was by Rev. Milton Smith, a local preacher, about the year 1839, in a log-cabin which stood on the site afterwards occupied by the house of Isziah Nurse, on Section 3. In 1841 a two days' meeting was appointed to be held in the brick school house then in process of erection at Hallock. From this time forward regular preaching was held every two weeks till 1849, when a successful joint movement was made by the Methodists and Congregationalists in the vicinity for the erection of a church, in the summer of that year. Robert Will donated the land now occupied by the church, school and graveyard. The church was used on alternate Sundays by the Methodists and Congregationalists, until the meeting place of the latter body was changed to Lawn Ridge, and it is now and always has been, a free church, used for the meetings of all denominations. The first cost was about $800, and when it was finished and completely seated, some seven or eight years later, near $1,200. It had a seating capacity of 200. This church having become unsafe, it was decided by the quarterly conference, held in October, 1897, to erect a new one. A mass meeting of the citizens was called: N. L. Robinson, A. M. Root, S. R. Stowell, J. L. Root, J. S. Gallup, Frank Harlan and H. H. Nurse were appointed a building committee, funds were raised and, by the next spring, the building was commenced under the direction of R. B. Beebe, the contractor. It has a seating capacity of 250, cost $2,500, and was dedicated September 4, 1898, by Rev. F. W. Merrill, Presiding Elder of the Peoria district. It is one of the neatest churches in this part of the county. Rev. D. C. Martin is the present pastor.

THE UNION BAPTIST CHURCH is located at Union, on Section 26, and its congregation was formerly connected with the Chillicothe Baptist Church. It was organized, June 19, 1858, with thirteen members, as follows: Thomas B. Reed, Sanford Reed, Amy Silliman, Simon Reed, Walter S. Evans, Sarah Kirkpatrick, Mary Baggs, Francis Reed, Nancy Sprague, Levi Sprague, C. Reed and Amy Reed. In July of the same year, Elder Anthony Hakes was chosen pastor, and preached once in two weeks. The church was erected immediately after the organization by the Methodists and Baptists of the neighborhood in common, and was, in consequence, called the Union Church. It was occupied by these societies in common until 1873, when the Methodist interest was bought out by the Baptists and the building assumed its present name, but no regular services have been held here for some time.

The first religious services in the village of Edelstein were held on October 21, 1891. Through the efforts of P. M. Nelson, President of the Peoria County Sunday School Association, and Rev. John Bliss, of Princeville, with a few families in and around the village, a Sunday School was organized with a full corps of officers, Rollin S. Houghton, now deceased, being Superintendent. The Sunday School continued regularly with occasional preaching by Rev. Stephen Burdick, of the West Hallock Seventh Day Baptist Church, and Rev. Charles E. Marsh, of the Lawn Ridge Congregational Church, until the spring of 1893, when Rev. Marsh commenced regular preaching services in connection with the Sunday School until such time as a church might be built, the services being conducted in the public hall. In March, 1894, a series of revival meetings were conducted by Rev. H. L. Wanamaker, of the Congregational Church Missionary Society of Peoria, which resulted in the formation of a Congregational Church composed of twenty-seven members coming from several denominations. Steps were at once taken to secure money to build a new church. The corner-stone was laid, August 4, 1894, and the church dedicated December 30th of the same year, by Rev. James Tompkins, of Chicago, Rev. Stephen Burdick, of West Hallock, and Rev. Charles E. Marsh, of Lawn Ridge. The church cost $2,800, substantially all paid before dedication. Rev. Charles Marsh was the first pastor. He continued to fill that position until July, 1900, when he resigned, since which time several ministers have supplied the pulpit, the present one being Rev. R. B. Tolbert, of West Hallock. A good Sunday School and a Christian Endeavor Society, as auxiliaries to the church work, are regularly maintained, both having a good attendance.

The ST. MATTHEW'S CATHOLIC CHURCH was commenced in the year 1900 under the supervision of Rev. C. A. Hauser, pastor. With the liberal donation left by the late Matthew McDonald, the church building was erected at a cost of $2,350. There are at present about thirteen families in connection with the church, the membership being about fifty. Rev. C. A. Hauser was succeeded by Rev. C. A. O'Neill, the present pastor. The building committee who superintended the erection of the church were John McDonnell, Michael McDonna and Thomas Burns.

SCHOOLS.

The first school ever taught within the present bounds of the township was located on Lewis Hallock's farm, and was taught during the winters of 1829 and 1830, by Lucia Root, daughter of Jeriel Root. The first school house built in the district, stood near Joel Hick's place on Section 32. It was erected in the fall of 1836, and was removed about eight years afterwards to the Hallock farm. In the northern part of the township a little school was taught during the summers of 1839 and 1840, in a log-cabin where the house of Isaiah Nurse was afterwards erected. Fiducia Bliss was the teacher. In 1841 the first school house, in what is now School District No. 1, was erected. It was 18 feet square and was built of brick. Sarah Fosdick was among the earliest of the teachers. The present school house in that district was built in 1856, and stands near the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of Section 3. It is well fitted up and can accommodate sixty children. In School District No. 5, the first school was taught in an old log-cabin, which stood a little south and east from where O. M. Miller's dwelling was afterwards erected, and was used for that purpose about the year 1851. Joseph Gallup was then its teacher. In 1856 the present school house was built. School District No. 6 was originally composed of portions of Peoria, Stark and Marshall Counties, and was reconstructed with its present limits in 1860. It was the last school district to be organized in the township. The first public school was built about 1857, at a cost of about $800, and, in 1866, to accommodate the growing wants of the district, the present school house was erected at a cost of about $1,400.

In West Hallock District, the structure now occupied as a public school was erected in the fall of 1856 as an academy, and was occupied as such for about five years, when the district was formed by a special act of the Legislature. It then fell into the hands of the School Trustees, and has since been conducted as a public school.

The school house in District No. 4 was erected about 1870, and stands on Section 32. It was the first school in that section.

The citizens of Edelstein, feeling the necessity of better school privileges in the village than they would have under existing conditions, the friends of education, after several unsuccessful attempts, succeeded in 1894 in having established the Edelstein School District No. 7, and, in the same year, erected a school house at the cost of $1,000. The Board of Directors then consisted of J. G. Spicer (President), E. E. Kendall and Thomas Burns. Since then James Shane and Mr. A. J. Speers have succeeded Mr. Kendall. At the time of the organization of the district there were only twenty-three children of school age; there are now 89 of whom 53 are in daily attendance at the school.

LUCAS C. HICKS.

The ancestral home of the Hicks family in the snug and picturesque little country of Wales, harbored forefathers who worthily performed the tasks of citizenship, and, in their coming and going, observed the frugality, wise conservatism and forethought upon which admirable characteristics are founded the strength and solidity of Welsh national life and institutions. Long before the patience of the American Colonies was exhausted by tyrannical English rule, and found vent in the victory of the Revolution, the emigrating ancestors crossed the seas and settled in Rhode Island, afterwards removing to Nova Scotia. Later, members of the family located in New York, and from this State the grandfather, Levi Hicks, removed to Ohio, where his declining years were spent. His son, Joel Hicks, the father of Lucas C., was born in Nova Scotia, and had three other sons, Levi, Samuel and Rufus. Lucas C., was born in Jackson County, Ohio, August 25, 1819, came with his father to Hallock Township, Illinois, in 1830, and has since been identified with the upbuilding of this resourceful part of the State. As one of the very early pioneers he has witnessed many changes, himself an integral factor in the transformation of the erstwhile prairies into farms and their abundant harvests and practically unlimited fertility. He has been foremost in political and other advancement in his neighborhood, and, on the Democratic ticket, was elected for a year to the office of Supervisor, and served as Road Commissioner for several years. The farm upon which he lives was purchased in 1846, and is one of the fine and profitable properties in the county.

September 3, 1846, Mr. Hicks married Sarah, daughter of Samuel Reed, one of the first settlers of Buffalo Grove, Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Hicks have been born the following children: Lucius E. born January 31, 1848; Samuel F., born July 10, 1850; Ira J., born November 10, 1852; Emerson C., born December 15, 1855, and died October 7, 1895, leaving a wife, three sons and one daughter; Fanny A., born August 7, 1858, and died January 1, 1877; Mark I., born December 7, 1860; William, who died in infancy; and Sarah A., who was born July 26, 1866, and married John Snyder, a farmer.

WILLIAM M. SANGER.

By those who knew him best during his long and steadfast life in Illinois, William M. Sanger is remembered as a typical representative of the middle western farmer, large of purpose and high of motive, combining an intelligent grasp of the opportunities by which he was surrounded, with and appreciation of the needs of the community of which he was an honored citizen. It may be said that he was the architect of his own building, for, at the age of fifteen, he became independent of other than his own efforts, and not long after courageously faced the obstacles in the way of the Illinois agriculturist of the middle of the century. His ambition to succeed found scope in the improvement of one hundred and sixty acres of raw prairie land on Section 12, Akron Township, and so unflagging was his zeal, and so well directed his energies, that at the time of his death, June 18, 1897, he was the possessor of two hundred acres of finely cultivated farm land, and an equal amount of valuable timber land. It is thus apparent that he had sound business sense and financial acumen, which, in connection with his unchallenged integrity, constituted a career worthy of admiration and emulation.

A native of New York State, Mr. Sanger was born at Honeoye Falls, Monroe County, November 22, 1828, a son of James and Maria (Wheeler) Sanger, natives of Vermont. His youth was uneventful and not unlike that of the average farm-reared boy, and his education was acquired at the district schools of New York and Vermont. A far-sighted discernment directed his steps to Illinois in 1849, and from then on he became one of the chief factors in the development of Peoria County. In the religious work of the neighborhood he took a foremost part, and exerted a notable influence as a member of, and liberal contributor to, the Methodist Episcopal church. No less extended were his political activities, and his affiliation with the Democratic party resulted in the holding of township offices, especially that of Assessor, which position he satisfactorily filled for many years. In Chicago May 13, 1853, he married Semiramis Kemble, who was born in Paducah, Kentucky, June 28, 1835, a daughter of Colin B. and Elizabeth (Harlow) Kemble, natives of Kentucky. Mrs. Sanger, who is living with her daughter, Ella, widow of R. L. Houghton, of Edelstein, Peoria County, is the mother of five children, of whom James W., Carlisle B. and Mrs. Houghton survive.

EBENEZER STOWELL.

Armed with the equipment of a strong and virile character, a determination to make the most of everything that came his way, and a true regard for the rights of all with whom he came in contact, Ebenezer Stowell became one of the prime factors in the early development of Illinois, and especially of Hallock Township, where he lived and worked and grew in the esteem of his fellow-men for nearly half a century. Remote, indeed, seem the days of a youth uneventfully passed in Chenango County, New York, where he was born October 19, 1807. Of English ancestry, his father, Abishai Stowell, was born in Windham, Windsor Township, Vermont, in 1779, and his mother, Hannah (Field) Stowell, in Brattleboro, Vermont, in 1782. Ebenezer Stowell was reared on the farm in Chenango County upon which his father had settled when a boy, and, during the cessation of labor in the winter months, attended the early subscription schools. As an aid to future independence he learned the trade of millwright, at which he worked for several years, and, in the meantime, his ambitions extended beyond the limitations of his surroundings to the almost primeval conditions of Illinois. The farm upon which he located in the course of time, and which, for so many years, was his special pride and comfort, was gained in a manner quite incomprehensible to the latter-day purchasers of country property. With patience and faith in the future known only to the forerunners of Western civilization, he started out in the spring of 1836, with two companions, Roswell and Isaiah Nurse, to locate land in Illinois. They walked from Chenango County to Buffalo, going from there by boat to Toledo, Ohio, thence up the Maumee and down the Wabash River to Covington, Indiana, from which place they walked across the prairies to Beardstown, Illinois, and from there to Peoria County. They traveled through Knox and Fulton Counties, returning to Peoria County, where they located land in Hallock Township, which they entered at the Government Land Office at Quincy, in the summer of 1836. In the fall of the same year Mr. Stowell returned to his former home in Chenango County, New York, and farmed until the spring of 1843. Having finally disposed of his interests in the East, he brought his family to the Illinois possessions, and at once settled down to till his land, and make himself and those near him as comfortable as the crude conditions and almost utter isolation permitted. During the following years, and up to the time of his death, May 7, 1880, he was an interested spectator of the transformation of the wild prairies into harvest laden fields, and the substitution of the farm house and its attendant teeming industry for the Indian wigwam and barbaric ceremonial. He became the owner of six hundred acres of land in his adopted township. He was a staunch upholder of Republican institutions, but was never officially connected with local political undertakings.

February 23, 1833, Mr. Stowell married Paulina, daughter of Reuben and Anna Bridgeman, who was born in Chenango County, New York, April 14, 1811, and died May 7, 1834. Of this union there was one son, Orson B., now a resident of Hallock Township. The second marriage of Mr Stowell was contracted October 5, 1835, and was with Laura Bridgeman, a sister of his former wife, and also a native of Chenango County, who was born July 11, 1808, and died April 19, 1889. To them were born nine children, six of whom are living, five being married and settled in the neighborhood, and one a resident of the old homestead: Calvin, born October 5, 1836; Henry Allen, born March 14, 1841 and died March 16, 1853; Charles Edward, born September 23, 1844, and died January 19, 1846; Mary Cornelia, born April 4, 1846, and married Cyrus Root of La Prairie Township, Marshall County; Charles Edward, born March 6, 1848; Samuel Reuben, born February 23, 1850; Anna Paulina, born May 14, 1851, and married William Stephenson of Ogle County; and Ebenezer, born March 11, 1855, now deceased.

The father was born in Chenango County, New York, October 19, 1807, and died May 7, 1880. The mother was born in New York April 14, 1811, and died May 7, 1834. The paternal grandparents were Abisha Stowell, born at Windham, Vermont, December 9, 1779, died in Hallock Township September 5, 1840 and Hannah (Fields) Stowell, born at Brattleboro, Vermont, March 20, 1784, died in 1819. Ebenezer Stowell first came west in 1836 and bought wild land in Marshall and Peoria Counties. In 1836 he returned to New York and again came to Illinois with his family in 1843, bringing his household goods by team and wagon, and settled on Section 3 in Hallock Township. Mr. O. B. Stowell came to Illinois with his father and stepmother and remained on the farm until he was twenty years of age, and then spent four years traveling in Illinois and Indiana. After his marriage he settled on a farm in Hallock Township, where he now has two hundred and ten acres of land and good buildings. Mr. Stowell is an uncompromising Republican, has been active in local politics, and has served as Road Commissioner two terms, Town Clerk two terms, and Justice of the Peace for several years. He is a member of the Congregational Church. He was married at Toulon, Stark County, Illinois, May 18, 1859, to Harriet R. Church, born in St. Lawrence County, New York, October 9, 1833, the daughter of Norman and Rebecca Church—the father being a native of Massachusetts, and the mother of Vermont. Of this marriage there are five children: William L., born May 18, 1860, married Alice Merrill; Paulina P., born July 23, 1862, married James P. Green; Laura Rebecca, born May 30, 1865, married J. B. Bell, died January 13, 1890; Fannie, born November 3, 1867, married William R. Peck; and Luther E. born January 20, 1875, who is a graduate of Rush Medical College, of Chicago, and is a practicing physician at Williamsfield, Knox County, Illinois.

STOWELL, SAMUEL R.; Farmer; born in Hallock Township, February 23, 1850, is a son of Ebenezer and Laura (Bridgeman) Stowell, natives of Bainbridge, Chenango County, New York. His ancestors in the paternal line settled early in Vermont, whence representatives went to New York, where Ebenezer Stowell was born October 19, 1807. His father was Abisha Stowell, and his grandfather, Israel Stowell. He learned the trade of carpenter and millwright in his native State and, in 1836, in company with Roswell and Isaiah Nurse, made a journey to Illinois on foot and entered land in Peoria County, walking to Quincy to complete the transaction at the land office there. Mr. Stowell married Paulina Bridgeman February 23, 1833, and she died May 7, 1834. On October 6, 1835, he married her sister, Laura Bridgeman. His first wife bore him a son, Orson, his second wife seven children, as follows: Calvin, born October 5, 1836, now a farmer in Hallock Township; Charles E., who died in infancy; Henry A., deceased; Samuel R.; Mary C.; and Charles E. (second of the name), who is a farmer in Marshall County. The father of these children died May 7, 1880, the mother, April 19, 1889. Samuel R. Stowell married Clara Hollister, at Hamlet, Mercer County, November 4, 1886, and they have three children: Ruth, born January 19, 1888; Armina, born April 23, 1890; and Esther, born November 4, 1898. Mr. Stowell is a Republican and he and members of his family are identified with the Congregational Church, of Lawn Ridge, of which his father and mother were two of the original founders in 1845.

TALLET, ALFRED; Wagonmaker; born in Akron Township, Peoria County, in 1863; son of Ransom and Charity (Lewis) Tallett. The father came from South Otselic, Chenango County, New York, about 1859, and settled in Akron Township, where he carried on farming until his death in 1879. Alfred Tallett was brought up on a farm and managed a cheese factory for several years. Later he settled at West Hallock, where he has manufactured wagons and sleighs. He is also agent for a windmill company, and has erected many mills throughout the neighborhood. He married Lucy Nurse September 12, 1887. Mrs. Tallett is the daughter of R. J. Nurse, of Blue Ridge, Hallock Township, and was a very successful school teacher for some years before her marriage. Mr. Tallett is a Republican, and one of the leading men of his township. He is a member of the Republican County Central Committee, and has held many township offices. In 1897 he was elected Supervisor, which office he now holds; he is a prominent member of the Board. He is a member of the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and of the Elks, of Peoria.

VARS, THOMAS; Farmer; born in Berlin, Rensselaer County, New York, September 7, 1824, where he received his education. He was the son of Benjamin, grandson of Thomas, whose father was Isaac, son of Theodata, son of Isaac, son of John, who came from France to Rhode Island in 1680. Benjamin Vars was born in 1790, and his parents located at Berlin, New York, the same year. Thomas Vars removed to Illinois in 1854 and invested in a farm in Hallock Township, where he was one of the most prominent farmers until 1891, when he removed to Edelstein, where he has since lived. He was married October 28, 1848, to Helen Maria, daughter of Benjamin Hull, and the granddaughter of Daniel Hull. Her great-grandfather, also named Daniel, located at Berlin in 1770, and was prominent in the Revolutionary War, and had the distinction of being among the first white settlers in that section of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Vars have four children: Alma A., who was born September 20, 1851, and died March 3, 1854; Lillie M., born November 22, 1853; Morton B., born August 17, 1859, married Nettie L. Potter, and is a farmer on the home-stead farm; Olive M., born January 27, 1860, who resides with her parents. The wife of Morton B. died in 1894, leaving four children: John T., Bessie M., Mary B. and Grace E. His second marriage was with Ruth Stillman, of Nortonville, Kansas, February 20, 1901. Thomas Vars is a Republican and has always been active in public affairs; has served as Supervisor and Assessor, and has been Township Treasurer for twenty-six years. He is a member of the Seventh Day Baptist Church, of Berlin, New York.

CHAPTER VI.

HOLLIS TOWNSHIP.

This township is situated in the extreme southeastern portion of the county and is bounded north by Limestone Township, west by Timber Township, east and south by the Illinois River. It is much broken by the river bluffs and La Marsh Creek and its tributaries. It was formerly nearly all timber land, but is now mostly cleared, the northwesterly portion affording good farming land, that on the east and south being low bottom land interspersed with numerous small lakes. Opposite the city of Pekin, with which it is in communication by a substantial wagon-road bridge, an extensive tract is protected from overflow by artificial means. The river bluffs are filled with coal, and extensive mining operations are carried on at several points.

Andrew Tharp was the first white person to settle in this township. He came in 1826 and died in the winter of 1844-45 of a contagious disease known as the "black tongue," which carried off nine persons in the neighborhood in that year. In 1827 William L. Scott, with his family, came in a one-horse wagon from Terre Haute, Indiana, and settled about one-fourth of a mile east of the present site of Mapleton. In 1831, Aholiab Buck, with his wife, Annis (Drake) Buck, came from New York State and settled on Section 6. Soon afterward we find Peter Muchler, Moses Perdue and Captain Francis Johnson among the early settlers and, a little later, William Tapping, James Clark, William and Abraham Maple, William and John Martin, Moses Dusenbury, ———— Franks, Robert Buchanan and his wife, Rebecca, William Maple and Marv, his wife, Hugh Jones and Sidney Ann, his wife, John Rahn, John Jenkins, John Hornbaker, William S. Powell, Jesse Jones, William Johnson, Samuel Watrous, Ansel Haines, Samuel Hootman, Isaac Maple and Thomas J. McGrew.

In 1834 Captain Francis Johnson built the first steam grist and saw-mill, with a machine for sawing shingles attached. It was situated on La Marsh Creek. It was a two-story frame building, the first and largest of its kind ever erected in the township. There was also a brick yard near it, also owned by Mr. Johnson. He died in the winter of 1844-45 of the epidemic already mentioned, and, in 1847, the mill came into the hands of Thomas J. McGrew, by whom it was owned until May 16, 1858, when it was destroyed by the great storm of that day and never rebuilt.

In 1836 Moses Dusenbury brought the first hand grist mill to the township, the burrs of which were sixteen inches in diameter. They are yet in the hands of Mrs. Edward Campen. In 1838 Mr. Dusenbury was killed by falling with his blind horse over the high bank on the west branch of the La Marsh Creek.

In 1839 Thomas Stevens erected a two-story building, for a saw-mill, on the west fork of La Marsh Creek on the east half of the southwest quarter of Section 8. In June, 1872, the mill and mill-dam were washed away by the highest water ever known here, all bridges in the township being destroyed.

The changes which have taken place since those early days are indicated by the facts that, in 1832, Moses Perdue set out the first vineyard; in 1837 Mr. Franks had the first brick yard; and, in 1839, John Rahn had the first tannery, which continued in operation until about 1871. In 1838, John Martin brought from near where St. Paul, Minnesota, now is, the first pine tree, which was set out by William Tapping and it is still standing. In 1848 the Maple Brothers set out the first chestnut trees. By 1855 apples had become somewhat plentiful and the Maple Brothers had the first hand cider-mill. But this industry has never proved a success. In 1853 Mr. William T. Stackpole, of Pekin, set out 1,000 apple trees on Section 15. The next year he started a brick yard, built a two-story brick house and brick barn, which are still standing. But in two years there were only two of his apple trees left. Mr. Jacob Riplet replanted forty acres of the same land with apple trees, which was the largest orchard in the township, but at present there are only a few trees left. This farm gave the name to Orchard Mines.

In 1846 Moses Perdue brought the first cook stove into the northeastern part of the township. In 1839 John McFarland erected, of logs, the first blacksmith shop, near the northeast corner of Section 5 and William Van Norman was the first blacksmith. In 1840 James Clark erected a blacksmith shop, which is still standing. In 1858 the Maple Brothers erected a three story steam saw and grist mill at Mapleton, at a cost of $5,800. It was the largest building in the township at that time.

In 1832 the first coal bank was opened at Little La Marsh Creek. The coal was hauled by oxen to Egman (now Kingston) Lake, and there loaded on boats for St. Louis.

This township (formerly known as Lafayette Precinct) is named after Denzil Hollis, one of the early settlers who came from England, and at the annual town meeting, in 1897, it was resolved to put an iron fence around his grave. Township organization took place on April 2, 1850, on which date, in pursuance of notice, the first Town Meeting was held at the house of William Martin, Esq., near the southeast corner of Section 5. John Magee was chosen Moderator and John F. Buck, Clerk, pro tem. The following Town Officers were then elected: Supervisor, Stephen C. Wheeler; Town Clerk, George Jenkins; Assessor, Albert G. Powell; Collector, David Goodwin; Overseer of the Poor, Denzil Hollis; Commissioners of Highways, John Houghtaling, James Clark and John Dufield; Justices of the Peace, William Martin, Sr., and Miles M. Crandall; Constables, S. D. Buck and David Goodwin.

The present town officers are W. E. Foley, Supervisor; George Kuntz, Town Clerk; W. H. Foley, Assessor; John F. Kuntz, Collector; John L. Petrie, August H. Erxleben and A. T. Polson, Commissioners of Highways; Joseph Watrous and Mat Nesselhaus, Justices of the Peace; John Richiger and James Morton, Constables; William Stantz, George Haller and Charles Hornbaker, Trustees of Schools, and George Kuntz, School Treasurer.

HOLLIS VILLAGE is situated at a point in Section 11, where the old Illinois River Railroad, afterward the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville, formed a junction with the Peoria & Hannibal Railroad, the former crossing the river on a bridge which, a few years ago, was burned and has never been rebuilt. The Toledo, Peoria & Western now occupies and uses the track of the former roads from Peoria to this point, but it is owned by the Peoria & Pekin Union. The Peoria & Pekin Terminal Railway also runs through the northern portion of this township, crossing the river to Pekin on its own bridge, lately constructed. It is an electric road for passenger service, but is also adapted to the use of steam power for freight. The village was laid out on September 8, 1868, by E. J. and M. A. Jones, on the west half of the northeast quarter of Section 11. It consists of one tier of lots fronting on the railroad. It is occupied principally by a mining population.

THE VILLAGE OF MAPLETON was laid out May 18, 1868, by John T. Lindsay, of Peoria, and Samuel Gilfovy and William J. Maple, of Hollis Township. It is located on the east half of the northwest quarter of Section 20. Extensive coal mines exist in its vicinity. At this point a spur track of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway branches off to Kingston, in the adjoining township. The village has a population of about 150. The coal mines, originally operated at Mapleton, have been mostly worked out, but there are two a short distance west of the village, one operated by W. E. Foley and the other by James Walker, of Mapleton.

The Methodist Church was organized in the autumn of 1886 by Robert Burden, a local preacher, with the following members: Mrs. William Harris, Mrs. Emma Newsam, Mrs. Mary Galloway, Mr. and Mrs. James Bradshaw, Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo Walker, Mrs. Maria Thrush, Mrs. J. T. Newsam, Mrs. Ann Galloway, Mr. and Mrs. John Scheidel, Miss Kate Jones. They have a church building 45 by 26 feet, erected in 1890 and dedicated by Rev. J. G. Evans, President of Hedding College, in November of that year. Rev. George B. Slack is the present pastor. There is a school house of one room, capable of seating about eighty pupils, built in the year 1873.

REED CITY.—About the year 1883 some enterprising speculators came from Ohio, and, under the name of the Buckeye Coal and Coke Company, started in on an extensive scale to get possession of all the coal lands in this vicinity. They obtained mining leases upon a large quantity of lands in Hollis and Timber Townships, and, for a time, it seemed as if it would become a flourishing enterprise. After one or two changes of name, it became known as the Reed City Coal and Mining Company; a village going by the name of Reed City having been started on the northwest quarter of Section 19 by Dwight R. Chapman. The plat of this village has never been recorded, but it appears upon the most recent maps. The mines of the company are still operated on a somewhat extensive scale, by the Newsam Brothers, who also own a store for general merchandise. The village has a population of about 250.

In 1889 Mr. Reed, the principal stockholder in the company, erected a school building and hall combined, at a cost of about $40,000, and endowed it with sufficient funds for its maintenance. It is called the Reed Institute, and is for the free use of the residents of the village. It contains three school rooms, a library and a hall, illuminated with electric lights, all maintained by the provision made by Mr. Reed in his life time. He had become the sole owner of the property, which consists of over one thousand acres, and died leaving it to his widow, who still resides in Boston, Massachusetts.

In the year 1889, the Pekin and La Marsh Drainage and Levee District was organized, to improve a large tract of bottom land in this township lying opposite the city of Pekin. The petition for its organization was presented to the County Court on August 13th and was granted on September 16th of that year, at which time Leander King, Michael McMorrow and John D. McIntire were appointed Drainage Commissioners, who were to report their plats, profiles and plans of operation at the next succeeding term. At the October term their report was presented and approved, the boundaries being es-established as follows: Beginning at the bluff above high water mark on Section 15, 7 N., R. 7 E., thence southwesterly to the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad; thence, with the railroad embankment, to near the east bank of the La Marsh Creek; thence, near the east bank of La Marsh Creek to the bank of the Illinois River; thence up the Illinois River, on or near the top of the bank of the Illinois River to the north side of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railroad embankment; thence northwesterly with the north side of the said Peoria & Pekin Railroad embankment, to the town of Hollis; thence, along the Peoria & Canton Road, at the foot of the bluff, from Hollis to the place of beginning. The cost was estimated at $20,000, the height of the embankment to be fifteen feet above low water mark at the Pekin Bridge. The times fixed for the payment of the cost were: January 1, 1900; January 1, 1901; January 1, 1902, and January 1, 1903, in sums of $5,000 each, for which bonds were to be issued. Other lands have since been added, the levee has been constructed and in operation for many years, pumping works have been erected and drains dug. This is one of the most important enterprises in the township. It embraces between four and five thousand acres of land.

La Marsh Baptist Church, at Maple Ridge, is one of the oldest churches in the county. It was organized October 27, 1838, with fourteen original members from Guernsey County, Ohio. Among them were Isaac and Sarah Maple, Robert and Rebecca Buchanan, Abram Maple, William and Mary Maple, Hugh and Sidney Ann Jones, Mrs. Harker and Eliza Jones. The nearest Baptist Church at that time was at Peoria, over which Rev. A. M. Gardner was pastor; but he became the first pastor at La Marsh and continued to serve it in that capacity until August, 1848. By that time it had increased to thirty members. In January, 1849, Elder William T. Ely became pastor, residing at Washington, Tazewell County, and preaching at La Marsh one-half his time. The Baptist Association met here in 1849, holding its sessions in a barn for want of a house of worship. Some of the ministers remaining after the close of the session, among whom were Rev. Henry G. Weston, of Peoria, and Rev. L. G. Minor, a series of meetings was held, resulting in a revival which continued through the following year, during which time there were fifty-two baptisms and the church reported one hundred and two members. Eight more were added the following year. In June, 1851, Elder Ely closed his pastorate and was succeeded, in July of the same year, by Elder Joel Sweet, who preached at Trivoli one-half his time. Another revival followed in 1852, when twenty more were added. He was succeeded in 1855 by Elder John Edminster, who continued for some years.

Soon after the meetings of the Association in 1849, a house of worship, 30 by 35 feet, was erected at a cost of $1,000. The first deacons were William Maple and John McGee.

SCHOOLS.—The people of Hollis Township

were, at an early date, fully alive to the importance of having a system of public schools. An act having passed the Legislature of 1836-37 authorizing the people of any township to organize for school purposes, and having done that, to proceed to elect five Trustees, who should have charge of all school affairs of the township, examine and employ teachers, and make reports to the County School Commissioner, the voters of the township, pursuant to notice, held an election at Johnson's Mill on April 14, 1838, for the purpose of determining whether or not the township should organize under that law. Twelve votes were cast for and only one against the measure. On the same day poll-books were opened for the election of five Trustees, whereupon Aholiab Buck, John Dufield, Nathaniel Clifton, Andrew Tharp and Richard Hays were elected. On the 12th day of May of the same year the Trustees met and appointed Nelson Buck the first Township School Treasurer, and laid off the township into three school districts. This was the beginning of the public school system in Hollis Township.

Before this time, however, there were private schools in the township. Upon the authority of John Rahn it is learned that in 1836 a school was kept in a log house on the bluff on the east half of the northeast quarter of Section 11, the name of the teacher not being remembered, perhaps Israel I. Hurd. In 1837 Mr. Hurd taught a school in a new log house belonging to Moses Perdue, which was located on the northwest quarter of Section 11. This was the second house built by him and is still standing. It had two rooms, each one having a fire-place built of brick from the yards of Mr. Frank. Mr. Perdue gave the use of the larger room of the two for the school. In 1837 or 1838 Miss Mary McFarland taught school in a log house built for private use on the northwest corner of Section 4. There were others of which the particulars cannot now be given.

The first public school house in District No. 1 was built in 1839 on the east half of the northeast quarter of Section 10, owned by Andrew Tharp, one of the first Board of Trustees. At a meeting of that Board held July 8, 1839, it was "ordered that the school house already commenced on the north part of the east half of the northeast quarter of the 10th Section be and is hereby declared the school house for District No. 1, and that in District No. 2 the school house shall be placed on the west one-half of Section 8, and that in District No. 3 the school house shall be located on the northeast quarter of Section 20, provided in all the above cases the necessary land can be obtained of the owners." The school house in District No. 1 was burned in 1856, that in District No. 2, located on land owned by Aholiab Buck was burned about 1856; that in District No. 3 was built in 1841 by Cornelius Palmer on land owned by John Dufield, all as above described.

Besides the Reed Institute, there are now four district schools in the township; also one in union with Timber and one in union with

Laird R. Black

Limestone, Logan and Timber, each provided with good school houses.

GAIN ROBINSON BLACK.

Gifted with the mathematical and mechanical skill which has distinguished many of his ancestors, Gain Robinson Black has devoted many years of his life to building and joining and general carpenter work, finding therein a congenial and profitable means of livelihood. During the greater part of his residence in Illinois he has also engaged in farming and stock-raising, and for fourteen years was a Gauger in the Internal Revenue service in Peoria. In 1859 he purchased two hundred and thirty acres of land in Hollis Township, upon which he has since lived, and which constitutes one of the well equipped country properties in Peoria County. Besides erecting his own rural residence, and the barns and general buildings which are a part of the farm improvement, many other buildings of all kinds in Peoria and Fulton Counties are the result of his skill and ingenuity. In his varied capacities he has been thrown with many people, and is one of the most widely and favorably known of the upbuilders of Hollis Township. A Republican in National politics, he has held the office of Justice of the Peace for more than twenty-five years.

The ancestors of Mr. Black acknowledged allegiance to Irish rule and institutions, and are first represented in America by the paternal grandfather, Joseph, who settled in Virginia. Here he reared his family, and, in Hardin County, Virginia. April 16, 1793, was born Joseph Wayne Black, the father of Gain Robinson, who died in Guernsey County, Ohio, October 28, 1851. The elder Black was a farmer, stock-raiser and surveyor, being especially interested in mathematics. In his young manhood he married Ann Eliza Hutchinson, daughter of Wyatt Hutchinson, a native of Virginia, and Elizabeth (Majors) Hutchinson, who was born on the Island of Jamaica. His son, Gain Robinson, was educated in the public schools, and received special private instruction in mathematics. In 1844 he settled in Hollis Township, where he followed the trade of carpentering for twenty years, during a portion of this time, during the war, and for ten or twelve succeeding years, being a partner with T. J. McGrew, Thomas Neill, and D. C. Holcomb, in the stock business.

The marriage of Mr. Black and Susan M. Powell occurred in Peoria County, January 25, 1849. Mrs. Black being a native of Guernsey County, Ohio, born in 1828, and dying in Peoria County, January 17, 1892. Of this union six children have been born, and, owing to their father's appreciation of the benefits of fine educational training, each child had every opportunity to develop his or her talents, and each became a duly qualified teacher. Cora was born September 13, 1852. Lida, who developed a particularly brilliant intelligence, was born October 6, 1855, and graduated from Saint Joseph's Convent, South Saint Louis, and from the Peoria Normal School, in 1873, receiving two diplomas before she was eighteen years of age. She subsequently turned her education to good account as a teacher in the schools of Peoria for five or six years, after which she married Dr. J. L. Brown, of Peoria, and died in 1883. Corda Black was born June 16, 1858, married George Norwood, and died April 22, 1895, leaving one son, Roy R. Charles F., was born November 6, 1859, graduated from the Parrish Business College, of Peoria, December 12, 1881, and is now serving his third term as Supervisor of Hollis Township. Lincoln and Judson (twins) were born March 14, 1863, and of these, Lincoln early showed a commendable ambition to look out for himself, and while yet a small boy entered the employ of Mr. Cooper (now of the firm of Siegel, Cooper & Company, of Chicago), went with the firm to Chicago, and for ten years was a salesman in the large department store on State Street in that city. He is at present traveling for Godel & Sons, of Peoria. He married Flora Cluts, and has one child, James Bruce. Judson Black married Lida Maple, and lives with his father. His trade is that of an engineer, at which he worked for two years. To himself and wife have been born one child, Albert Gain.

FRANK NEWSAM.

It is doubtful if any man in Peoria County has a more exhaustive knowledge of the mining possibilities of Illinois, than has Frank Newsam, a resident since 1883 of a farm near Mapleton, Hollis Township. A native of Lancashire, England, he was born April 6, 1841, a son of John and Sarah (Blakely) Newsam, natives of England. John Newsam, who was a cotton spinner by trade, emigrated to America and settled in Peoria County in 1870; his death occurred in the city of Peoria in the spring of 1901. To himself and wife were born the following children. Sarah; Frank; Richard; Mary Ann, who is deceased; John; Thomas; Martha; and Margaret, also deceased.

Accompanied by James Southern, Frank Newsam came to America in 1863, and from the first became interested in mining in the vicinity of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. In August of 1864 he removed to Saint Clair County, Illinois, where, for about a year, he engaged in mining with Hamilton White. He came to Peoria County March 1, 1865, and walked to Peoria to hear the speech delivered by Robert G. Ingersoll, soon after the death of President Lincoln. He operated the mines at Lancaster until 1872, in which year his occupation was changed to that of hotel and boarding-house keeper in Mapleton. After the expiration of two years he became identified with mercantile enterprises in Mapleton, continuing in the same line of business for nine years. However, beginning with 1876, he spent one year in Fulton County, in partnership with James Frame, of Burlington, and during the preceding year opened the Walker mines. Other mines which have come under his able management include a mine in Fulton County and another at East Mapleton, in which latter connection he was for two years with the firm of Neill, McGrew & Company, but later operated these mines on his own account. At another time he entered into partnership with his brother, their mining affairs at Orchard Mines being conducted for seven years under the firm name of Newsam Brothers. He was for a time interested in gold-mining in California. The interests of Mr. Newsam have been by no means self-centered, for his activity in promoting the general growth of his township has extended in many directions. A Republican in National politics, he has been Supervisor of Hollis Township for one term, and has also served as School Director and Mine Inspector, and was for ten years Postmaster at Mapleton. In religious belief he is an Episcopalian. Fraternally he is associated with the Masons, having joined the Kingston Mine Lodge, Number 357, in 1867. He is also affiliated with the Chapter and Knights Templar, and became a Consistoryman in 1880, having attained the 33d degree. He attended the Conclave of Knights Templar in Chicago in 1883.

May 15, 1865, in Peoria, Mr. Newsam married Emma Harris, and of this union seven children have been born, three of whom are living: John T., William F., and Richard.

BOHLANDER, PETER: Farmer; born June 14, 1820. His paternal grandfather was Valentine Bohlander, a native of Rhinepfalz, Bavaria, better known as the Palatinate, where Peter and both his parents were born. Michael Bohlander, Peter's father, was born in 1803, and died in 1855, in Cincinnati, Ohio. He married Catherine Ullmer, who was born in 1804, and died in 1840. She was the daughter of Henry and Eva Emma (Steiner) Ullmer. Three children were born of this marriage in Germany: Peter, George M., and Henry. Michael came to America in 1845, and while a resident of Cincinnati, married Margaret, a sister of his first wife. She had one child, Margaret, who married Henry Ullmer, and lives in Greencastle, Ohio. George M. is a barber and musician, and lives in Peoria; Henry is a cook and resides in Pekin. Peter Bohlander's first marriage was on May 1, 1855, with Harriet Benner, who was born June 30, 1832, in Union County, Pennsylvania, and died May 3, 1862. Her parents were Henry and Mary (M.—) Benner, who came to Hollis Township in 1835. Three children were born of this marriage: two daughters, deceased, and one son, Frank, who resides in Monroe, Jasper County, Iowa. He has three children: Mary Ethel, Jesse and Frederick. September 7, 1863, Mr. Bohlander married Melissa Perdue, and they had three sons: Benjamin, born in 1864; Robert, born in 1868, and Herschel P., born in 1872. Benjamin married Birdie Lucille Shaw, and resides in Hollis Township on a farm. They have three children: Gordon Harold, born November 24, 1897; Chester Perdue, born August 28, 1899, and Benjamin, born July 22, 1901. CHAPTER VII.

JUBILEE TOWNSHIP.

By CECIL C. MOSS.

This township is described on surveyor's plat as Ten North, Six East, is about fifteen miles in a northwest direction from the county-seat and near the northwest corner of the county. The first settlers to locate and acquire permanent homes came in 1835, about fifteen years before the adoption of township organization, settling on or near what is now the west part of the township and at neighboring distance from the little hamlet of Charleston, now the village of Brimfield. A few others scattered themselves on the east side in anticipation of a college being founded by Bishop Chase. The first settlers at that date (1835-40) appeared to be of three classes: First, those who possessed a little money and wished to begin life and establish homes where property would appreciate in value with time and improvement; and others who, having failed in business, or at their first start in life for themselves in the older parts of the country, came to a new country to begin life and fortune again. A few of a third class were hunters and frontiersmen who keep in advance of civilization, and who, when game becomes scarce and neighbors too near their door, sell out and move further on.

Jubilee Township has as great variety of land and as many natural resources as any other part of Peoria County. There are a few sections of prairie land interspersed with what is rather a rough and broken township. Several tributaries of the Kickapoo Creek have their source in or pass through the township, also the east branch crosses the southeast corner and joins the main stream near the south line. A few white oak, black oak, burr oak and red oak trees, also several varieties of hickory, were scattered over the bluffs and points at that time called by the settlers "Oak Openings," skirting the streams, and on the bottom lands were a large variety of forest trees, including the oaks (black and white), walnut, sycamore, cottonwood, maples (both hard and soft), and different varieties of willow. As the timber on the upland was scattered or in small groves, and that on the bottoms and along the streams much below the general level, the view of the country was nearly unobstructed and presented to the observer a pleasing aspect.

Shrubs and small fruits were found on the open; also some varieties of berries, surpassing in sweetness and flavor those of the cultivated kind, grew in the thickets of timber. Many varieties of grasses covered the ground, furnishing food for the sustenance of numerous varieties of wild game that roved at will over the country, and which, in turn, furnished a large proportion of the provisions for the settlers and their families.

Some of the cabins or homes of the pioneers were of the most primitive kind and rude in construction, built in the usual style of the pioneer log cabin. Some of the frontiersmen, being skilled in woodcraft, or handy with an ax, built houses of a better class. They hewed the timber to a square, dove-tailed the ends at the corners, laid a stone foundation in lime mortar, erected upon it the walls composed of logs fitted together in dove-tail fashion at the corners of the building, and carrying walls, perpendicular and true as a wall of brick, to the height desired, usually one story and a fourth, or one and a half. The rafters, hewn smooth, were set at a good slant, with ribs fastened on crosswise, to which shingles, split and shaved by hand, were nailed. Fireplace and chimney were built of stone or brick filled with mortar, as were also the joints of the timber walls. The floors were often laid with boards taken from the boxes in which the people brought their goods, with a wide board for a door, one window of sash and glass for each room—and what more could human nature want?

The few vehicles, tools and agricultural implements were of the simplest design and construction, and were often made by those who used them. Teams of oxen were more generally used than horses or mules, being cheaper and easy to keep at that time. The first breaking of the prairie sod was done with four yoke of cattle, a large plow held in the proper position by axle-lever and wheels, cutting and turning over a sod of twenty inches in width. This work was usually performed in the months of June and July because the tough sod rotted sooner when broken up at that time, besides growing a crop of sod corn and pumpkins the same season. Cra-dies were used to harvest the small grain, while the hay and wild grasses were cut with a scythe and all stacked by hand. Small grain was threshed and corn shelled with flails or trodden out with horses, until the advent of the little threshing machine, a cylinder and concave set in a small frame and run by a four horse sweep power, the straw being raked off by hand. The grain was afterward cleaned up with a fanning mill. Possibly the hardest and most difficult labor which the early settlers had to perform was the construction and maintenance of their fences, the kind in general use being built with rails, the splitting of which would occupy the entire winter to make enough to fence a few acres for cultivation. Fenced pasture at that time was unknown, all stock running at large or in common.

The spinning wheel and hand loom were found in many of these cabin homes, where the women folks made the homespun cloth for clothing their families and a carpet for the floor. These primitive outfits and homes did not require much money, as that was scarce and hard to obtain. With the few things that were brought to the country, and such as human ingenuity could contrive, the pioneer had the necessaries and a few of the comforts of existence. Such was life in the log-cabin days.

Prominent among the pioneers of the township was the Rev. Philander Chase, Bishop of Illinois, who came to the then West to found what became known as Jubilee College. He settled permanently in 1836 on a part of Section thirty-six in the southeast corner of the township. Erecting a log cabin for himself and family, as did the other settlers, he set about the college work. Securing some funds, partly from friends in England and some from others in the Eastern States, and at times contributing from his own resources, a tract of land was secured, embracing about three thousand acres, more than two thousand of which was in Jubilee Township, and here was located the home chosen for himself. Procuring stones and timber near the site chosen for the buildings on Section twenty-six, the corner-stone of the chapel and school house was laid on the 3d day of April, 1839. The ceremonies on this occasion are thus described by Bishop Chase in his reminiscences or autobiography:

"On Tuesday evening came our dear Samuel, and the Rev. Mr. Douglass; with the latter, a Mr. Jones, from Tremont. On Wednesday, at nine, came the Charleston people; at ten the congregation began to gather; at eleven, came the Peoria folks. Robin's Nest more than full. Divine service at half-past eleven. The Rev. Mr. Douglass read prayers, and Mr. Chase preached. Music, the best in the world for us. Notice given that the Rev. Mr. Chase would preach at Lower Kickapoo next Sunday, and myself hold a confirmation at Pekin.

"At one o'clock the procession formed at the bottom of the hill. The Rev. Messrs. Chase and Douglass in front; then the foot train; then the Bishop and his son, Philander, in his carriage; then a sequence of carriages and wagons too long to be even conjectured by you. The course of the procession was directly through the fine lowlands, on dry and very pleasant grounds parallel with the stream, about midway between the bluff and the bank, pointing and aiming at the new bridge, which you know I built in the coldest weather last winter, now finished in the best order. When the procession turned to the right to cross the bridge, I could have a view of the vast extent of the train, and seldom have I been more elated at the goodness of God in giving us favor in the sight of all his people to gather such a multitude (for indeed, in this solitary country, a few hundred may be justly termed a multitude) together to praise His holy name at the laying of the corner-stone of Jubilee Chapel. As we passed over the bridge, now (on the night before) finished in the neatest order, and looked up and down that beautiful stream, and then went along in solemn pomp over the level and exceedingly fertile and dry bottom land, in full view of the rising grounds, covered with budding trees, under which we could see the vast pile of stone for the chapel, and people there waiting for our arrival, you may well fancy my feelings. The flush of joy, the throbbing of the grateful heart, ready at every vivid reflection of my painful life, now about to terminate in the accomplishment of this great design, to burst the very bands of its tenement. Oh, that you could have been with me at this moment! you, who have shared my woes, to share also in my joys. The day fine, the sky serene, and just enough to remind us of the breath of God in the gentle influence of His Holy Spirit, refreshing beyond the power of language to describe.

"We mounted the rising ground slowly, and at every step looked back on the cavalcade behind. What a sight for a lonely backwoodsman! What an effect it had on me, when I reflected on the purpose for which we were now gathering on the ground together. Philander drove my carriage round to a pile of stones, to give room for all to dismount in order. The whole of the foundation, I found, had been already laid, but the corner to the level of the first floor of the building. This enabled the eye to realize the plan, which you have seen, of the groundwork of this interesting building. We gathered round the southeast corner, where all was prepared for the present important solemnity. Before commencing I looked around me, and never was a sight more heart-cheering. The crowd were on the heaps of stones, and the friends and musicians were near me. Oh, how sweetly did they smile through tears of joy, as they saw my aged self among them. And when, after the address, we raised our souls in prayer and praise, may we not hope and believe that, unworthy as we were, the God of Mercy and Love looked down upon us through Jesus Christ, and gave us his blessing? It is this which crowns all, and makes the remembrance of yesterday's service and solemnities sweet unto my taste. It has, indeed, left a relish on my moral enjoyments, more exhilarating to my soul than any thing in the course of my whole life. The self-same thing was said by Samuel as we came home; nothing could exceed the expression of his joy."

The erection of the college, with the other necessary buildings, soon followed; residences for the teachers, boarding houses for the scholars and workmen, so that in a few years' time, not later than 1859, nearly all of the various industries of the times were represented in the little village of Jubilee and the near surroundings. A saw-mill was constructed on the Kickapoo Creek two miles south from the college, to which was soon added a flouring mill, with both steam and water power. A store building near at hand was filled with such goods as were used by the early settlers. A blacksmith shop and a shoemaker's shop were added for the convenience of all near by. A small hand printing press was operated in the college building, on which was printed, at short intervals, a small sheet entitled "The Motto." Farming and stock-raising were carried on extensively by the college, which introduced and operated the first agricultural machinery seen in the vicinity; such as McCormick's reaper, Allen's Mower, Emory's Tread Power and Thresher. Students soon filled the buildings and the college flourished for a number of years.

The first graduating exercises held at the college occurred on the 7th day of July, 1847, at which five persons received their degrees in the arts and sciences. A large booth was erected for the occasion, constructed of poles set in the ground and covered with branches from the trees. A band from Peoria City furnished the outdoor music. The exercises were attended by several hundred people, and it was indeed a happy and proud event to the founder of the college. A little knowledge of the work and the difficulties encountered in the building of such an institution, in those early days, may be obtained, when we realize that the stone was first dug from the quarry and shaped, the brick was burned within a few rods of where it was used, and nearly all the timbers were cut and hewed from the native forests by hand. On one occasion (in the year 1842) the father of the writer of this sketch made the journey to Chicago in the winter with a team, bringing from that place a barrel of salt for use at the college and a load of lumber with which to make sash for the buildings. A few of the settlers procured some of the materials for their first homes in the same way.

Township organization was adopted, April, 1850, and the usual township officers were elected. The formation of school and road districts was completed in a few years afterwards, the number of each at the present date being eight—the schools in each district continuing from six to eight months of each year.

Religious services and Sunday Schools were held at various times in several of the school houses, until the building of various edifices for public worship, of which Jubilee has three—The Episcopal at the College, German Methodist and Lutheran. Five cemeteries situated in different parts of the township, give the unwritten history that many have finished their labors and gone to the other shore. But few of those are now living who purchased their land directly from the Government, and, at this writing, but one is living on the land which was purchased in this way.

For a time elections were held at private houses or at the residence of the Town Clerk. Elections and town meetings are now held at the Town Hall in the center of the township. The number of legal voters in Jubilee at present is two hundred and twenty-five. Some changes of town officers have been made at every annual meeting, and but few have served the township many years in succession. Three members of the Illinois General Assembly have been chosen from the township, viz.: William Rowcliff, H. R. Chase, and Peter Cahill. As township officers, William Church, H. I. Chase, Gilbert Hathaway, James H. Forney, J. B. Slocum, John Moss, William Rowcliff, H. R. Chase, Richard Pacey, Peter Cahill and Cecil C. Moss, have served as Supervisors. Those having acted as Town Clerk are: David Sanborn, William M. Jenkins, George Radley, Noah Alden, George Paul, William H. Paul, S. S. Stewart, Chas. Hayes, F. E. Coulson, R. H. Van Renslar, George Stewart, F. T. Keefer, L. Hasselbacher, L. S. Barrett, S. P. Bower. Gilbert Hathaway held the office of Treasurer of school funds twenty-seven years, Thomas Pacey and Charles Hayes about twenty years, and L. Hasselbacher is the present incumbent of a few months.

CAHILL, PETER: Farmer, Stock-raiser and Ex-member of the State Legislature; born in County Meath, Ireland, February 12, 1843. When only four years old his father died, and, in the summer of 1847, his mother brought her three young sons to Peoria County, where they took up their residence. Mr. Cahill obtained a thorough common-school education and has since kept abreast of the times by systematic reading. He has an enviable record as a public servant, serving faithfully as School Director, Tax Collector and Highway Commissioner, and he has also represented Jubilee Township on the County Board of Supervisors for seventeen years, three of these being as Chairman of the Board. He served three terms in the State Legislature, being elected first, in 1892, and again in 1894. In 1896 he received a third nomination, but was defeated by a small majority. In 1898 he was favored with a fourth nomination by his party, and easily carried his district. Mr. Cahill is a Democrat, and belongs to the Catholic Church. He is a prominent and influential man in the County. He is unmarried, and resides one and three-quarter miles southeast of Brimfield, his estate containing about 500 acres of land.

CORNEY, MARY (FORD): Late Widow of Philip Corney, but now deceased; born in Devonshire, England, July 12, 1817. She received her education and grew to womanhood in her native land. Her husband was also a native of England. They came to the United States in 1850, remaining in Ohio for a year and a half, when they removed to Peoria County and rented a farm. They soon afterwards bought ten acres of land, and rented other land for a period of five years. Then having sold their land, with what means they had accumulated, they purchased a larger tract on which they carried on farming more extensively. Mrs. Corney's grandfather was John Ford, whose son, Samuel Ford, married Sarah Smallridge. Mr. Corney's parents were James and Mary Corney, born in England. Mr. and Mrs. Corney were married in Devonshire, England, and were the parents of seven children: Mary Ann, James, William, Sarah, Eliza, John and Frank P. Mrs. Corney took an active interest in the Baptist Church, of which she was a member for many years. She managed her own property, including an improved farm of one hundred and sixty acres. In later years this farm was managed by her son, Frank P. Corney, who married Mary Ann Koerner, whose parents were early residents of Peoria County. They have one child, Ruth. Mrs. Corney died in November, 1899, having survived her husband thirty-nine years. Her latter years were spent on the home farm with the family of her youngest son.

COULSON, FRANK E.; Postmaster and Merchant of Jubilee, in Jubilee Township; born in Colborne, Canada, May 1, 1855. His father, William Coulson, was born in Yorkshire England; his mother, Minerva (Crandall) Coulson, was a native of Canada. The elder Coulson left England when sixteen years of age for Canada, and after spending some years there, removed to Missouri, where he educated his family. He engaged in the flour and saw-mill business, at La Grange, Lewis County, which he followed on a large scale until his death, January 26, 1869. During his life there he held the offices of County Assessor and Alderman of the City of LaGrange. His widow died March 25, 1870. Frank E. Coulson began his business career with his father, and in 1875, he removed to Pekin, Illinois, and became identified with Myers & Wyrick, who conducted a header-works. After spending one year there he went to Jubilee Township, where he purchased a farm, which he worked until 1894, when he opened a mercantile house in Jubilee. Mr. Coulson married Anna Rosette Spaulding, of Quincy, Illinois, September 19, 1883, and they have two children: Stanley C. and Clara Louisa. Mrs. Coulson's father was Merritt Spaulding, a native of Vermont; her mother, Louisa (White) Spaulding, was born in Quincy. Mr. Coulson is a Methodist and a Republican, and was appointed Postmaster at Jubilee in 1895. Besides this political recognition, he has been Trustee for three years, Tax Collector five years, and School Director nine years, which office he now holds. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and Home Forum.

MARSHALL, ALBERT A. M.; Farmer; born at Cossackie, Greene County, New York, May 3, 1838; a son of Marvin and Lois (Bruce) Marshall and a grandson of Elijah and Mary (Percys) Marshall. His father was born in Vermont, and his grandfather in Massachusetts. John Marshall, his great-grandfather, came from England. His father and grandfather were members of the old Whig party and he is a Republican. Lois Bruce, the wife of Marvin Marshall, was the daughter of a Baptist minister, and was born in Vermont. Marvin Marshall, with his family, arrived at Peoria August 1, 1850, and the next day they went to Brimfield and settled where they have since lived on Section 30 in Jubilee Township. Albert A. M. Marshall is not active in politics and has refused all offices except that of School Director. He is an influential member of the Baptist church. He married Sophia Sweet, August, 1863, and she died leaving one son, R. H. Marshall, who lives in Nebraska. January, 1867, he married Abby R. Willard, in Jubilee Township. They have had eight children: Birdie A., a teacher; Cora, a teacher; Ernest W., of Jubilee Township; William A., of Brimfield; Harry E., a traveling salesman; Janie M., at school; Nellie M., who is dead, and Stella R., a school girl.

SMITH, GEORGE E.; Farmer and Stock-raiser; was born in Jubilee Township, July 21, 1863. His parents were natives of Germany. His father, John B. Smith, came to this county in 1852; the mother, who was Beronica Bootz, followed two years later, and, in 1856, they were married. After a short residence in Stark County, Illinois, they lived practically all their lives in Peoria County. They managed well and had accumulated over five hundred acres of land. George E. Smith was married to Emma J. Harrison, a native of Peoria County, December 12, 1888. Her grandfather was James Harrison, who early cast his fortunes in the West; her grandmother was Mary S. CHAPTER VIII.

KICKAPOO TOWNSHIP.*

This township, 9 North, Range 7 East, is centrally located, and, although somewhat broken by the Kickapoo Creek and its branches, is well adapted to agriculture. It derives its name from the creek which flows through it from west to east. This creek has had a variety of names. It seems to have been known to the English, when the country belonged to them, by the name of Cartineaux; to the early French by the name of de Arescy or Arcoury; to the later French by the name of Coteneau and Gatinan—which latter was probably a corruption—also by the name of Maillet's River; but, by the Indians, it was called "The Kickapoo," which is their name for the Red Bud or Judas tree, which grew in great abundance along its banks. This stream was considered of inestimable value to the early settlers on account of the water power it afforded. This water power was utilized at a very early day in the history of the township.

HALE'S MILL.—In 1834, William Hale visited the Kickapoo valley, and, being well pleased with the outlook, selected a mill-site on the northeast quarter of Section 35. Returning home to Oswego County, New York State, he resigned the office of Sheriff, which he then held, and returned again to Illinois in the spring of 1835, accompanied by George Greenwood, John Easton and Waldo Holmes. John L. Wakefield, late of Radnor Township, had arrived early in the year 1834, and, in the autumn of the same year, Francis P. and George O. Kingsley had arrived, also John Coyle and Israel Pinckney. The Kingsleys were from Vermont and Mr. Pinckney was from New York City. He built his cabin on the southeast quarter of Section 12. Samuel Dimon came from Connecticut in 1838 and settled on Section 10, where he resided until death. Joseph Vorhees came in 1839. Gideon Thomas came in 1844, and settled on a farm a short distance east of the Kickapoo Village.

Upon his arrival, William Hale, who had a brother, Asahel, erected a saw-mill on the mill-site he had selected the year before. It appears that, at some date prior to December, 1835, the Hale brothers had obtained from the County Commissioners' Court a writ for the assessment of damages for the erection of a mill-dam on the quarter selected, which writ was returned at the December Term of that year. The jury reported that they had been sworn by the Coroner, there being no Sheriff in the County; that they had been upon the land and, having viewed the site and the land above and below it, were of the opinion that Francis P. Kingsley and George O. Kingsley would sustain damages to the amount of $5.00; that they had located and set apart three acres of land beginning on the east side of the Kickapoo River, on the line dividing Sections 35 and 26, thence to the center of the river, taking three rods from said center east and west on both sides of the center of said river, following up the stream 80 rods; that no other persons would sustain any damage; that no dwelling house, out-house, garden or orchard would be overflowed, and that the health of the neighborhood would not be injuriously affected by said overflowing, said claims being made upon the presumption that the said dam should not be built more than ten feet high above the bed of the stream. This return, dated October 8, 1835, is signed by Horace P. Johnson, Foreman, and Thomas P. Phillips, Israel B. Tucker Henry G. McComsary, C. W. Stanton, Reuben Garley, Thomas Hardesty, Chris Hamlin, Isaac Underhill, Robert Cline, John Donelson and Fitch Meacham, Jurors. The prayer of the petitioners was granted and they were permitted to build their dam on payment of the damages.

The erection of the mill was then proceeded with and, in the spring of 1836, they had a "raising." No intoxicants were served either then or at any time during its erection. Mr. Hale, during that summer, brought his family by wagon from Albany New York, and, having procured the necessary machinery in the East, the mill was completed and set to running in the spring of 1837. It was finished in elegant style, the interior works being finished, as is said, equal to good cabinet furniture. It immediately secured an immense custom, being visited by settlers from a distance of thirty or more miles in every direction. It seems that both Asahel Hale and George Greenwood had joint interests in it with William Hale, and it was known as Hale & Greenwood's Mill.

On July 23, 1840, before this mill was completed, and doubtless in view of the numbers on people that would be attracted there, as well as from the fact that coal mines were then beginning to be operated on the adjoining land. Norman H. Purple and Andrew M. Hunt laid out a village of seventeen blocks with Washington Square in the center, on the east one-half of the northwest quarter of Section 35, which they named Hudson. This proposed village was very near the mill, and only a short distance from the present village of Pottstown. On the recorded plat the road to Knoxville, another road from Jones' to Hale & Greenwood's Mill, the mill itself and the location of extensive coal mines, in the immediate vicinity, plainly appear.

Mr. Hale, being a devoted Methodist, donated a tract of land for burial, religious and school purposes, and erected thereon a small house. Rev. Stephen R. Beggs was one of the first ministers to visit the place. He held services there and organized a Methodist congregation, which flourished for a number of years, and is said to have had at one time, one hundred and fifty members, but many years ago it became extinct.

The water supply having in a measure failed, steam power was introduced about the year 1848. Mr. Hale continued to own and control the mill until the time of his death, which occurred in the year 1859. The mill was subsequently converted into a distillery, which was destroyed by fire in the year 1867.

POTTSTOWN.—The coal-mining interests in the immediate neighborhood of Hale's Mill caused a large number of miners to become domiciled there. Samuel Potts was one of the principal operators and the settlement, in course of time, came to be known as Pottstown. On September 30, 1889, Mrs. Ann Potts, the widow of Samuel Potts, laid out a plat on part of the west one-half of the northwest quarter of Section 36, which has, since then, become a lively village of miners. A few years ago the Presbyterians established a church there, and erected a comfortable house of worship. It still maintains a feeble existence, but it has lately been greatly weakened by dismissals to other churches. It has a Sabbath School of about eighty members. The village has been greatly torn up, and many of the residents compelled to remove their houses, by the appropriation of their property by the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, which has lately been constructed through it.

KICKAPOO TOWN can boast of an age as great as that of almost any other village in the county. It was laid out by John Coyle on July 3, 1836, on the southwest quarter of Section 6. It occupied almost the whole of an eighty-acre tract, and had a public square in the center. The first house was erected by Mr. Jenkins on the site afterwards occupied by the Old Kickapoo House. It was at first used as a store, but additions were made and it was converted into a hotel, in which capacity it continued to be used for many years. As the village was on the great stage-route from Peoria to the west, a large amount of travel passed through it, and, as this was the first stopping place west of Peoria, the hotel became well known to travelers and did a flourishing business. The village was also the place where political conventions were held, until the coming of the rail-roads, as it was the nearest village to the center of the county. The last convention held there was probably the Democratic convention of 1855, when the Peoria delegates were taken by rail on flat cars to Edwards, and thence by farm-wagons to the village. The railroad was then finished only to that point, and passenger coaches had not yet been introduced. Until that time, and for some years later, the village enjoyed a large country trade, but it has become greatly diminished. There are now two retail stores of general merchandise, one kept by Nader & Son, the other by Dombaugh Brothers, the latter also dealing in agricultural implements. There are two blacksmiths, John T. Mitler and John Worstfold, each plying his trade.

THE CHURCHES.—There are now four churches in the village: Baptist, Methodist, German Catholic and Irish Catholic. It is doubtless true that the Irish Catholic Church is one of the oldest in the county, the precise date of its organization or of the erection of its first chapel not having been ascertained. It is said upon good authority, that "in the '30s, Black Partridge (now Lourds in Woodford County) and Kickapoo were more important places in the Catholic Church than Peoria. In those early days the priest, on Christmas morning, said mass at the stroke of twelve in Kickapoo, then hurrying on to Peoria, offered up the Holy Sacrifice as the sun was rising, only to take the road once more and finish his day's labor with a third mass, about noon, at Black Partridge." It is said the present chapel was erected in 1835, but this is not certain.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was the next in point of time. The first services were conducted by Rev. Whiteman at the house of William Young, about the year 1843. In 1854 Rev. Henry Somers was Presiding Elder in the Kickapoo Circuit, and Rev. P. F. Rhodes was preacher in charge. Under his pastorate the present church edifice was commenced in 1852 and completed in 1855, at a cost of $1,662.

Episcopal Church (now extinct).—This village being in the immediate vicinity of Jubilee, the residence of Bishop Chase and the headquarters of the Episcopal Church in Illinois, many of that denomination settled in this vicinity. They erected a house of worship in the year 1845, which continued in their possession until 1860, when it was partially destroyed by fire and never afterwards occupied by that denomination.

The German Catholic Church.—In 1801 the German Catholics bought the grounds and the standing walls of the Episcopal Church edifice for $324, and at once commenced to reconstruct the building. Father Fronenhofer was priest at the time and, under his management, the same was completed in the fall of 1862 at the cost of $842. In 1869 an addition was made to the building at a cost of $1,725. Adjoining the church is a parsonage, erected in 1876, at a cost, including lot, of near $2,000. Rev. Father Stewer is pastor of both the Catholic churches.

The Baptist Congregation was organized March 29, 1851, by Rev. Henry G. Weston, of Peoria, who preached a sermon on that occasion. Services had been held at several places in the vicinity for some time, as there were many of that faith settled near the village. The original members were Moses Smith, Evan Evans and wife, Thomas Fallyn and wife, Anthony Fallyn and wife, Joseph Fallyn, George H. Frye and wife, George W. Weston and wife, Elizabeth Bell and Fanny Huxtable. A subscription was started soon thereafter and a house of worship was completed in the year 1854, which is still in use. The congregation at present has no settled pastor.

EDWARDS STATION is on the extreme western boundary of the township where the State road crosses from the east to the west side of the Kickapoo Creek. It has always been considered an important point from the year 1836, when George Berry petitioned the County Commissioners' Court for permission to erect a mill-dam on the northeast quarter of Section 30. When the railroad was finished to that point it became, and continued to be, the principal shipping point until Oak Hill was reached. It has ever since been a place where considerable local trade has been carried on. Extensive coal mines are worked in the immediate vicinity, which fact has been the occasion of the growth of a miners' village at this point. The first settler at the place where the station was afterwards located was Isaac Jones, who died in 1840. The next was Conrad Beck in 1851. E. D. Edwards opened the first store in 1851, and, two years later, built a steam flouring-mill, which was successfully operated for three or four years, when it was destroyed by fire. It has never been re-built.

COAL MINING.—Coal mines had been opened near Hale's Mill as early as 1836, but they do not seem to have been operated extensively until the year 1849 or 1850, when Jacob Darst, of Peoria, began "stripping," which he continued for about five years. He then sold some bluff land to Frederick Ruprecht and John Woolenscraft, who commenced "drifting" into the hill-side. In 1851, Ruprecht sold out to his partner, who continued to operate the mines for about two years, when he sold to Anderson Grimes and Judge Thomas Bryant, of Peoria, who, in turn, sold to Samuel Potts. Mr. Potts became a very large operator, and continued to carry on the business during the remainder of his life. Other mines have, for many years, been carried on in the same vicinity and between that and Edwards Station.

In 1860 Dr. Justin H. Wilkinson commenced buying coal lands in the vicinity of Edwards Station, and continued to make purchases in Rosefield, as well as in Kickapoo, until at one time he owned about one thousand acres. In December, 1876, he associated with himself Mr. Isaac Wantling, an experienced miner, and together they developed very extensive mines.

These two points—Pottstown and Edwards—have in years become two of the most important mining points in the county.

SCHOOLS.—Prior to the adoption of the free school system there were very few public schools in the township. In 1840 Mr. Samuel Dimon, who had come to the township in 1838, hauled the logs for the first school house in what is now District No. 1. It was situated on the northeast quarter of Section 11, where the present school house now stands. In that house Miss Harriet Hitchcock is believed to have been the first teacher. Samuel Dimon afterwards taught there for two or three terms.

Prior to 1851 there was a school house some distance west of Hale's Mill, known as the Kingsley School House; but it is not known when or by whom it was built. In 1851 Miss Sarah Smith taught the first school at Hale's Mill, occupying a cooper shop for a school house. The school house, now located at Pottstown, is known as No. 4.

The first school house in District No. 5 was located on the northwest quarter of Section 9. It was a frame building erected in the spring of 1851, at a cost of $260. The first school taught there was by H. Gregory, commencing in the fall of that year. This school house was replaced in 1877, by a modern frame house which cost $570.

The first school house in District No. 6 was erected on the southeast quarter of Section 16, in August, 1860. It was a frame building costing $300. School was commenced there in the fall of 1860 by a teacher named H. M. Behmyer.

The first school house in District No. 7 was erected in the summer of 1867 on the northeast quarter of Section 33. Miss H. Pritchard was the first teacher there. She commenced in the winter of that year.

The first school house in District No. 8 was erected in the summer of 1867 on the northwest quarter of Section 13, at a cost of $528. The first school was taught there in the winter of that year by Miss Hattie C. Humison.

The township is now well supplied with school houses of modern style, and the schools are in a prosperous condition.

THE PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY at one time had a strong hold in this township, there having been two granges, No. 446 or South Kickapoo, now extinct, and Orange, having a Grange Hall on the northeast quarter of Section 11. It is one of the seven yet surviving in the county.

CHARLES H. KEACH.

During the many years of his residence in Illinois, Charles H. Keach was not only a successful and progressive farmer and stock-raiser, but a man whom all were glad to honor, because of his sterling worth and devotion to the public welfare. His death in Peoria, May 21, 1896, removed one of the developers of Kickapoo Township, deprived his friends of one upon whom they could invariably depend, and his family of a wise counselor and ever present help. A native of Hancock, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, he was born June 1, 1833, a son of Henry W. and Lucy (Hall) Keach, the former born in Cranston, Rensselaer County, New York, July 13, 1803, and the latter at Stevenstown, the same county, November 15, 1808. The parents came to Illinois in 1846, and settled in Radnor Township, subsequently removing to Hallock Township, where the father died August 27, 1888.

Charles H. Keach followed the fortunes of his parents from New York to Illinois, and naturally early determined upon the occupation to which those nearest him had devoted their lives. His first wife and helpmate was formerly Laura Jane Doty, who died in Radnor Township, in September of 1858, leaving one son, William E. Keach, who married May Sammis, of Peoria, Illinois, and lives in Kickapoo Township. The second marriage of Mr. Keach was solemnized in Peoria, March 25, 1862, with Marion A. Fash, who was born in Peoria February 4, 1842, a daughter of Abraham B. and Georgie E. (Smith) Fash, natives respectively of New York City and Baltimore, Maryland. The paternal grandmother, Anna Fash, was born in Holland, and the maternal grandfather, David M. Smith, was born in Baltimore, Maryland. Years ago, when Peoria County was yet a wilderness, Abraham B. Fash courageously assumed the responsibilities of the pioneer, and, having learned the trade of butchering, followed the same for many years. He was actively interested in his county's development up to the time of his death in 1886. His wife, who died January 27, 1901, at the age of eighty-three years, at the home of her youngest daughter, Mrs. Frances C. Miller, in Chicago, was the mother also of Helen M. Davis, Marion A. Keach, Olive V. Hammill, and Inez E. Johnston. To Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Keach were born the following children: Effie G., who is the wife of George Holmes, of Akron Township; Chester B., who married Emma Slough, and lives in Kickapoo Township; Jessie L., who is living with her mother, and Cora M., who is deceased.

WILLIAM TAYLOR.

The mining of coal, long acknowledged one of the important resources of Illinois, has opened up unexpected opportunities for the acquisition of revenue to many land-owners, who thought to spend their days solely in the pursuit of general agriculture. The opportunity presented by the chance-finding of this fast diminishing national commodity, has been utilized with satisfactory results by William Taylor, one of the best known farmers and mine owners in Kickapoo Township. The family, whose reputation for industry and success Mr. Taylor so well sustains, trace their ancestry to adherents of the British crown, and in Haywood, Lancashire, England. Mr. Taylor was born October 10, 1855. His father, James mother, Alice (Lee) Taylor, on January 29, 1820—both being natives of England, as were also the maternal grandparents, John and Alice Lee. James Taylor left the home of his forefathers and emigrated to America in 1873, reaching Elmwood, Illinois, May 4th of the same year. Subsequently he located upon a farm in Rice County, Kansas, which continued to be his home for the remainder of his life. Besides William, who was the third child in order of birth in the family, there were George, James, Daniel, Charles and Anna—the latter being now the wife of Mr. Wilkinson, of England.

In Kickapoo Township, April 12, 1876, Mr. Taylor married Martha E. Haworth, who was born in the same Township, December 24, 1851, a daughter of Richard and Alice Haworth. Mr. Haworth was also an Englishman, born, April 12, 1824, and married Alice Lonsdale, October 25, 1849. His parents, Richard and Martha (Greenwood) Haworth, emigrated from England at an early day, and were, for many years, farmers in Kickapoo Township. He is the owner of a large tract of land underlaid with coal deposits, the mining of which has yielded large returns, and it is with the mining works of this farm that Mr. Taylor has been connected since 1876. In political affiliation Mr. Taylor is a Republican, has filled the office of School Director for many years, and is at present serving his third term as Supervisor of Kickapoo Township. Fraternally he is associated with the Woodmen of the World. To Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have been born the following children: Alice A., Susannah, James Richard, Ella, Mabel and Walter William. The children have all received a common-school education, and Alice has traveled extensively in England.

He bought land on Section 29, Kickapoo Township. His family came to this country about two years subsequent to his arrival. He was killed by the caving of a well which he was digging on his farm. David (second) rented a farm of two hundred and thirty-six acres for several years, which he bought in 1891. He married Mary McKane, in Champaign County, Illinois, July 2, 1872. Mrs. Andrews was born in French Grove, Peoria County, in November, 1853, daughter of James McKane, a native of the Isle of Man, who was drowned in Spoon River and buried at Brimfield. The children of this marriage are: Susan, wife of Henry Doubet; Frank; Wesley; Edwin D.; James; Ruth; Jennie; George F.; Milton; Myrtle, deceased, and one who died in infancy. Mr. Andrews is a Democrat, has filled the offices of School Director and Assessor, and is now serving his third term as Township Clerk.

Later he also worked for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, and cut wood and hauled it to Peoria for seventy-five cents a load. He bought forty acres of land and settled in Kickapoo Township, where he already had three brothers. He added to this land from time to time, and now has several farms, one of fifty-four acres near Kickapoo Village. He married Christina Reed, in Kickapoo Township. Mrs. Heinz is also a native of Germany, a daughter of Morris Reed, and came to America with her elder sister when quite young. There are seven children of this marriage: Fred, Henry, Andrew, George, Katie, Anna and Theresa. Mr. and Mrs. Heinz are members of the Catholic Church. He is a Democrat. By his industry and thrift he has become a successful farmer.

HEINZ, ANDREW, JR.: born in Kickapoo Township, September 25, 1847; son of George and Katherine (Henlein) Heinz, natives of Germany. His grandfathers were Henry Heinz of Germany, and George Henlein. George Heinz came to America in 1839 and settled north of Mossville at a place called Rome. After working for Captain Moss several years, he purchased a small farm on Section 16, in Kickapoo Township. At the time of his death he owned three hundred and sixty acres of choice land. He served as Supervisor of Kickapoo Township. He died in 1890; his wife, in 1895. Andrew Heinz remained on his father's farm until he was twenty-four years old, and then rented land of his father. He now owns four hundred and eighty-nine acres of land in Kickapoo and other property near Peoria. Mr. Heinz married Anna Leibel in Kickapoo Township, November 3, 1875. She was born in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, January 12, 1855, daughter of Frank and Louisa Leibel, natives of Baden, Germany. The father served a year in the War of the Rebellion and died in 1880. The mother is still living. Mr. and Mrs. Heinz have five children: Joseph George, Bernard John, Richard John, David Sylvester and Leo Fritz. George Heinz came to Peoria in 1839, afterwards removing to Mossville, where he was employed by Mr. Moss until he went to farming on the Bradley place on the "Bluff." Subsequently he purchased and settled on a farm, near his brother Fred, in Kickapoo Township, where he lived till his death in 1890. Mrs. Heinz died in 1895. At twenty-three years of age, Frank Heinz rented a farm and, the following year, settled on his father's farm where he now resides. He now owns two hundred acres of land on Section 9; also owns building lots in the city of Peoria. He married Mary Heitter in Kickapoo Township in 1868. Mrs. Heinz was born in Jubilee Township March 18, 1850, daughter of Frank and Mary (Wolf) Heitter, natives of Germany, who came to Peoria in the early settlement of the country; the father is dead; the mother is still living. Mr. and Mrs. Heinz were the parents of ten children: Eliza K., Julius A., Emil Valentine, Frank Sylvester, and Etta Frederica, now living; the deceased are Willie Frank, Anna Katie, Ida Katie, Clarence Peter, and one who died in infancy. Frederick Heinz came to Kickapoo Township in 1848, where he joined his brother George, who had preceded him to this country. He purchased eighty acres of land, mostly timber, on Section 16, for which he paid five hundred dollars. He cleared off the timber, replaced the log cabin with a handsome brick house, and now owns the original place, which is in a good state of cultivation, besides fifty-three acres in Section 21. He married Eva Seibert in Kickapoo Township in October, 1852. Mrs. Heinz was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, and came to America alone to live with her sister in Kickapoo Township. She died July 6, 1894. One child was born of this marriage: Anna Margaret; she married John Blucher, who now cultivates Mr. Heinz's farm; they have four children: Fred, Eva, Anastasia and Etta. Mr. Heinz is a member of the Catholic Church. He has served as Supervisor and Road Commissioner of Kickapoo Township, and is now School Treasurer.

KOERNER, DAVID: Farmer; born in Hamilton County, Ohio, October 15, 1835; son of Jacob and Christina Koerner, and grandson of Jacob Koerner, natives of Germany. The second Jacob Koerner came to America and settled, first at Cincinnati and then near Columbus, Ohio, where he rented a farm and carried on farming and stock-raising. In 1848 he came to Peoria County and purchased a farm on Section 15, Kickapoo Township, where he passed the remainder of his life. He died in 1867, and his wife in 1877. They were buried on the old farm. At twenty-five years of age David Koerner left the parental roof-tree and bought a farm of eighty acres. After his father's death he bought the interests of the other heirs and became owner of the old homestead. He now has three hundred and twenty acres of land, and is a hard-working and successful farmer. He is a Democrat, and has served as School Director. In 1860 he married Louise Seibold in Kickapoo Township. She was born in Germany in 1837, daughter of Gottlieb Seibold, who came to America and was never afterward heard of. Subsequently the mother died in Germany. Mrs. Koerner came to America in company with friends when sixteen years old. There were born of this marriage six children: David (deceased), Jacob C., Caroline Rosina, Frederick W., Louisa C. and Mary Elizabeth.

LANDY, JAMES: Farmer; born in Ireland March 1, 1840, in which country all his ancestors, as far as he knows, were born. His parents were William and Margaret (Barry) Landy; his paternal grandparents, John and Mary Landy, and his maternal grandparents, Edward and Anastasia (Kelley) Barry. Mr. Landy came from County Kilkenny, Ireland, in 1856, direct to Peoria. He has eighty acres of land and is a farmer and stock-raiser. He has served as School Director. In religion he is a Catholic, and in politics a Democrat. He married Mary Holden, in Peoria. Mrs. Landy was born in Ireland in 1848, daughter of William and Ann (Cochran) Holden, natives of Ireland. They came to America in 1853, first locating in Ohio, after which they removed to Peoria County, settling first in Limestone, and afterwards in Kickapoo Township, where they owned land. Mr. and Mrs. Landy are the parents of nine children: William, John, Annie, May, Anastasia, Edward, Maggie, James, and one who died in infancy. William married Flora Marigold and lives in Kickapoo Township.

Henry Miller (second) brought his family to America and to Tazewell County, by the well-known water route and reached Pekin in March, 1842. The voyage across the ocean to New Orleans took seven weeks. After working on a farm for some time, Mr. Miller bought "an eighty" in Limestone Township, where he engaged in agriculture during the remainder of his life. In 1860 John F. Miller began to learn his trade, but was interrupted by the outbreak of the War in 1861, and enlisting in Company A, Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, served four years. Returning from the war, he resumed his trade, at which he has since labored. He has carried on the business of blacksmith and wagon-maker in Kickapoo Township twenty-five years. He owns a good house and shop and the ground on which they stand. He is politically independent, has been School Director many years, and is a member of the Methodist Church. May 20, 1862, he married Irene Toland, who was born in Pennsylvania February 23, 1847, the daughter of George D. and Lydia Ann Toland, then residents of Logan Township. ship on Sections 33 and 34, and afterwards added eighty acres. He married about two years after coming to America. He died while on a visit to Switzerland. After the death of his father, John P. Secretan, then eighteen years old, attended to the management of the farm for his mother, who died in 1894. He married Helen Y. Trigger in Radnor Township, where she was born June 1, 1860, daughter of William and Helen (Stewart) Trigger. Mr. Trigger was one of the earliest and wealthiest settlers of Radnor Township. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Secretan are: John L., Helen B. and Charlotte Ruth. Mr. Secretan has served as Supervisor and Collector of the Township. Mr. and Mrs. Secretan own about three hundred and ninety-five acres of land.

STAFFORD, JESSE; Miner and Farmer; born in Warwickshire, England, September 20, 1835. His parents were William and Mary (Benson) Stafford, natives of England, now deceased. Mr. Stafford came to America in April, 1860, and, after remaining for a time at Toronto, Canada, came to Detroit and thence to Peoria County, in the fall of 1862, where he has since been engaged in mining and farming. He married Mary Ann Williams in Peoria, September 8, 1881. Mrs. Stafford was born in Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, the daughter of Peter and Sarah Williams. Her father was Welsh, and the mother English. They came to America and settled, first in Pennsylvania, and later at Pottstown, Peoria County, Illinois, where he worked at mining. His death was caused by his being thrown from a buggy in Peoria. The mother is also dead. Mr. and Mrs. Stafford have four children: Jesse, born July 27, 1882; Fred, born April 29, 1885; Joseph, born February 12, 1888, died in infancy. Mr. Stafford is a member of the United Mine Workers. Politically he is a Republican.

VOORHEES, JOSEPH; Farmer; born at Hamilton, Ohio, February 2, 1814, is the son of Garrett and Jerusha (Rugg) Voorhees. The father was born in Somerset County, New Jersey, June 9, 1763, and died in his ninety-ninth year. The mother, a native of Long Island, was of English descent. The paternal grandfather was Abraham Voorhees. The family originated in Holland. Garrett Voorhees and wife came to Ohio, in the early settlement of that State, when there was but one shingle-roofed house in Cincinnati. He bought a farm in Hamilton County, and devoted the balance of his life to agriculture. Joseph Voorhees was the eldest of his father's second marriage, of which there were three sons. He came to Elmwood on a visit in 1835 and returned again in 1849, buying land in Kickapoo Township. In 1841 he moved to Peoria County and located on land in Section 6, in Kickapoo Township, where he has since been largely engaged in farming and stock-raising. His first dwelling was a log-house which has since given place to a large brick residence. He has a brick yard on his farm, and was for three years engaged in brick manufacture. He now has 800 acres of land, a part of which is in Nebraska. He married Sarah Rynearson in Peoria, Illinois, March 10, 1840. She was born in Franklin County, Indiana, August 19, 1823, and was the daughter of Miney and Sarah Rynearson, residents of Rosefield Township. The children of this marriage were twelve: Garrett H., who married Emily Cook; William M., who lives in Peoria, married Mary Simpson; Joseph M., who married Hadetta S. Bergquist, of Peoria, lives on the farm; John; Jerusha A.; Laura A.; Algernon A.; Martha A.; Elizabeth; Joseph R.; Mariah H.; Charles E. Only two of these are now living—William and Joseph M. Mrs. Voorhees was a member of the Baptist Church. She died October 14, 1889, aged seventy years. Mr. Voorhees is a Democrat, and has filled the offices of School Director and Township Assessor. He has never used tobacco or intoxicating liquors.

YATES, JOHN; County Mine Inspector and Postmaster; was born in Taylor County, West Virginia, September 8, 1847. His parents were Albert and Sarah (Fletcher) Yates, natives of West Virginia. His maternal grandfather was Harrison Fletcher, a native of Ireland. His paternal grandfather, Joseph Yates, a native of England, came to America in 1818, and settled in West Virginia. Albert Yates started for California by the overland route in 1851, and was never heard of after leaving Independence, Missouri. He is supposed to have been killed by Indians or Mormons. John Yates was a soldier in the War of the Rebellion, served in Company C, Fourth Regiment West Virginia Cavalry, and in Company H, First West Virginia Light Artillery. He enlisted when only fifteen years old and served from August 5, 1862, to July 14, 1865. He participated in thirteen battles and was a prisoner in the notorious Libby Prison. He came to Peoria, Illinois, in January, 1867. After working two years on a farm he went to mining, in which he was engaged till 1881. For a time, he was a road contractor and built roads about Peoria and in the country. In 1887, he opened a coal mine, which he managed for about three years. In 1899 he was appointed County Mine Inspector, and has served as such till the present time. He has also served five terms as Assessor, and has filled the office of Justice of the Peace. He is now Postmaster at Edwards Station. He is a Republican. On July 18, 1868, he was married in Peoria to Ellen Snyder, who was born in West Virginia, June 12, 1852, the daughter of Enoch and Elizabeth (Martin) Snyder, natives of West Virginia. They came to Illinois in 1865 and settled in Rosefield Township, where they lived four years, and then came to Kickapoo Township, and settled at Edwards Station, where Mr. Snyder was engaged in farming, and where he died. Mrs. Yates died May 26, 1897. The children of John and Ellen Yates are: Emily Ann, Elizabeth, Maggie May, and John Albert. Emily married Daniel Lauer. Mary married Robert Monroe.

CHAPTER IX.

LIMESTONE TOWNSHIP.

The settlement of Limestone Township was almost contemporaneous with that of Peoria. But, reaching back many years prior to the advent of the American settlers, it has a history of its own. As early as the year 1723, while yet a part of the French dominion, one Philip Francis Renault obtained a grant of a tract of land one league in front on the lake or river, and extending back five leagues on a stream claimed to have been the Kickapoo. If this claim has any solid foundation to rest upon, it may be inferred that Renault, whose principal business was the development of the mining interests of the country, and who had smelting furnaces not many miles from St. Louis had made an exploration of the Kickapoo Valley, and, finding the hills filled with coal, had procured this grant to himself. It has been claimed for him that he had also discovered lead in this vicinity, but this claim has not been verified by more recent researches.

At a later period, about the year 1765, we find Jean Baptiste Maillet obtaining a grant from the authorities of Great Britain of 1,400 acres at the mouth of the Kickapoo, one mile in front on the river and extending back two miles into the country. This grant took in part of Limestone Township. It was sold in 1801 to Isaac Darneille, the first lawyer who ever lived at Peoria, and by him to Col. William Russell, of the United States Army, who made an effort to have the claim confirmed by the Government, but failed.

At a still later period, about one hundred years ago, it is known that several of the inhabitants of La Ville de Maillet had lands in cultivation on the Kickapoo bottom in this township, or very near it in Peoria Township. Thomas Forsyth, who was an American, had a field of twenty arpens; Simon Roi, Antoine Roi and Francis Racine jointly had a field of 30 arpens, adjoining one of Antoine Cicare; Hypolite Maillet had one of 15 arpens adjoining one of Francis Montplaisier—all situated on or very near the Kickapoo, which was then called the Gatinan (or possibly the Coteneau). These farms were all vacated during the war of 1812, when the village was destroyed.

It is said that Abner Eads, one of the first settlers at Peoria, for a time resided in Limestone; but it seems that Joseph Moffatt and his three sons, Alva, Aquila and Benjamin, were the first settlers. They came in 1822. Alva and Aquila settled on Section 13, and continued to reside thereon, or in the immediate vicinity, during their lives. The Harker family came in 1829 and settled near the southwest corner of the township, giving the name of Harker's Corners to the vicinity where four townships met. Henry W. Jones came at an early day and settled in the north part of the township. From him, or members of his family, we have the name of Jones' Prairie and Jones' Spring situated on and along the Farmington Road. James Crowe also came about the same time as Jones; but, on account of Indian troubles in 1832, he went back to his home in Ohio, but returned in 1834 and settled in the north part of the township. James Heaton came in 1834 and Pleasant Hughes in 1837.

This township can boast of having had the first, if not the first two flouring-mills in the county. George Sharp, one of the County Commissioners and a prominent business man of Peoria, died about the close of the year 1830. He was, at the time of his death, a partner in business with John Hamlin. He had an interest in two mill-sites (then regarded as personal property), one across the river in Tazewell County and one on the Kickapoo. That in Tazewell County was sold to his widow for $50, from which circumstances it would appear that no mill had yet been erected. He also had a bolting cloth appraised at $35, which was sold to his son John for $20. No sale is reported of the mill-site on the Kickapoo, which evidently went to his partner, Mr. Hamlin. It is not certain that the mill had then been erected on the Kickapoo, but if not then erected, it is very certain that preparations had been made looking to that event. In a biographical sketch of Mr. Hamlin, published some years ago, it is said that he, in connection with two young men named Sharp, had erected the mill known as Hamlin & Sharp's Mill, and this would seem probable from the fact that George Sharp had two sons, John and Francis, the former having purchased the bolting cloth at the administrator's sale. Be this as it may, it is evident the mill was erected and had been put in operation as early as the year 1831, and continued in the hands of the same proprietors, Hamlin & Sharp, until the year 1833 or 1834. The exact location of this mill had apparently been forgotten for many years; for Mr. Ballance, who, in 1832, had been one of the viewers to lay out a road past the same, says in his "History," that "a stranger might almost as well seek for the site of Nineveh or Babylon, as the site of these mills." The road mentioned was one laid out by the County Commissioners from the Knox County line to Peoria and, having followed the route by courses and distances to the Kickapoo at the mill, it there struck a straight course north 79 degrees, east 865 poles (2.7 miles) to the north corner of block 13 (corner of Madison and Main Streets), Peoria. The point where it crossed the Kickapoo was a little north of the center of Section 12, about one-half mile north of the present Lincoln Avenue (formerly Plank Road) Bridge. This is further shown by the following facts:

About the year 1833, Joshua Aiken and Robert E. Little, both men of wealth, came to Peoria and engaged in the mercantile business in partnership. Together or singly, they obtained title to about 1,000 acres of land in Horse-shoe Bottom and its immediate vicinity. They also purchased the Hamlin and Sharp mill, and at once proceeded to enlarge and put it in perfect order, so that it became a mill of high standard, capable of producing fifty barrels of flour per day. It had a very large custom, its patrons coming from the whole country within a radius of sixty miles. Much of the flour here manufactured was shipped to St. Louis by flat-boat. Aiken & Little had become possessed of the mill as early as the spring of 1834, possibly a year before that time. In June of that year, Rev. Flavel Bascom, a Presbyterian missionary stationed in Tazewell County, took his grist there and found Joshua Aiken, from whom he obtained information which afterwards led to the organization of a church at Peoria. They paid cash for wheat and, it is said that more money was paid for wheat at that point than in the whole town of Peoria. The money issued was that of the Quinnebaug Bank, an Eastern institution, which the Peoria merchants denounced as unworthy of credit because its issue would not go at the Land Office, but the Secretary of the Treasury, being appealed to, issued an order that its money should be received in payment for land, and its credit was at once restored. They borrowed this money and secured its repayment by mortgage upon a large amount of real estate, four thousand dollars of it remaining unpaid at the time of Little's death in 1842. Mr. Aiken, seeing the importance of capital in a new country, went East and formed a co-partnership with George P. Shipman, and, together with Hervey Sanford, Charles Monson and Eli Goodwin, purchased the northwest quarter of Section 6, 8 N., R. 8 E., and proceeded to plat it as Monson & Sanford's Addition to Peoria. Although this plat was not recorded until August 15, 1836, yet it had been made, and lots had been deeded by it, as early as June 4 of the same year. First Street, on this plat, was afterwards adopted as part of a public road from Peoria to Aiken & Little's Mill. About the same time Robert E. Little, together with Orin Hamlin and Augustus Langworthy, laid out the town of Detroit above the Narrows. But that which most concerns the present narrative is, that on April 9, 1836, Joshua Aiken, George P. Shipman and Robert E. Little laid out a town on the southeast quarter of Section 12, and the northeast quarter of Section 13, Town 8 N., R. 7 E., which they named "Peoria Mills." It covered nearly, if not quite, all of the southeast quarter of Section 12, one tier of blocks extending southward on Section 13 and overlooking Horse-Shoe Bottom. The Main Street ran nearly east and west, and was located a few rods north of the present Lincoln Avenue road. Fifth Street crossed Main Street at right angles.

In September, 1836, a road was ordered to be laid out from Peoria to Aiken & Little's Mill. It was surveyed by George C. McFadden, who laid down the lines so accurately they can be easily followed. Commencing at the bridge at Aiken & Little's Mill, the line ran by different courses until it reached the center of Fifth Street, thence to the center of Main Street, following it to its eastern end; it was there deflected southeast, twenty rods, to the section line between Sections 7 and 18 in Township 8 N., R. 8 E., which is now known as Lincoln Avenue. Thence it ran east to the corner of Sections 7 and 9, now the intersection of Lincoln and Western Avenues, thence northeast to the west end of First Street in Monson & Sanford's Addition, following which it reached the lower end of Adams Street, which was then at Franklin Street. By following these lines we reach, unquestionably, the location of the mill near the center of Section 12, which was at or near the northwest corner of the Town of "Peoria Mills," not far from "Rocky Glen."

Joshua Aiken died in the year 1840. Robert E. Little died in 1842 at Peoria. What became of the mill, in the meantime, does not appear. Mr. Ballance says Mr. Aiken added a saw-mill to it and ran both for some time, but finally permitted the stream to undermine them and carry them away. In the files of the estate of Mr. Little in the Probate Court, there appears a lease for eighteen months, from him to Joshua and Henry S. Aiken, for the mill then in their possession, but from other data, it would seem this may have been only a saw-mill. One of the provisions of the lease was, that they should keep the dam and flume in good condition, but, if carried away by freshet, it should be optional with them to do so or not. It is probable the premises were soon afterwards abandoned, as Hale's Mill had been established above and Hamlin & Moffatt's below it; and these two, with others at Peoria, may have rendered it so as render it unprofitable.

At the March Term, 1838, of the County

Commissioners' Court, Orin Hamlin and Alva and Aquila Moffat obtained leave to erect a mill-dam on the southwest quarter of Section 13, past which a road was being laid out, which, on the old maps, bears the name of the "Middle Road." This was probably, at first, a saw-mill at which the lumber that went into the Court House was sawed, as Hamlin & Moffatt had a contract to supply it. A flouring mill was, however, erected at that place, which afterwards became known and still lingers in the recollection of many citizens, as Monroe's Mill.

In the "Peoria Register and North Western Gazetteer" of April 8, 1837, it is said: "Some years since a flouring mill (probably Hamlin & Sharp's.—Ed.) was erected on that stream (the Kickapoo), which is in successful operation still, within two and a half miles of Peoria Village. Two saw-mills in the vicinity of the flouring-mill are in profitable business. There are two saw-mills above and one grist-mill below." Here are two grist-mills spoken of, neither one of which could have been Hale's; for that mill was then in process of erection, and had not commenced grinding. These mills, and at least two of the saw-mills spoken of, must have been located within the present bounds of Limestone Township. From these facts we can judge of the importance of the Kickapoo Creek as a mill-stream at that time.

On June 10, 1837, Henry Jones laid out a town plat on the southwest quarter of Section 3 and the southeast quarter of Section 4, which he called "Summerville." It was located on what is now the Farmington road, just north of the County Farm. It has never become a place of importance, there being but a few scattered houses at that place, but a postoffice by that name is still maintained.

This township has also the credit of having had the first public bridge in the county—that erected by John Cameron on the Lewistown road. The bridge at Aiken & Little's mill was also erected at an early day: but it may have been erected by the proprietors, and not by the public. The township was also well supplied with both county and State roads—the State road running up the Kickapoo; that by the way of Farmington to Knoxville; that to Quincy by way of Canton, and that by Pekin—all passing through its territory.

It also had one of the first rail-roads—the Peoria and Oquawka having been finished as far as Edwards in 1855. It now has five railroads in operation: the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; The Toledo, Peoria & Western; The Iowa Central; The Peoria & Pekin Terminal, and The Chicago & North Western. These several roads, converging near the eastern line of the township, make that a point of great importance as a future suburb of the city.

This township also contains the County Poor Farm, of which a full account is given elsewhere. It has also an important State Institution, the Asylum for the Incurable Insane, which, after sundry reverses and delays, is now completed and received its first installment of patients on February 10, 1902.

The township contains no regularly organized village, but through sundry subdivisions of lands, especially along the Kickapoo Creek, divers centers of population have become known as villages, such as Bartonville, South Bartonville and Minersville, which may soon become suburbs of Peoria. The township also contains several manufacturing plants, the most important of which are the Acme Hay Harvesting Company and the Cellulose factory of the Marsden Company, at South Bartonville. As these factories are owned and operated by Peorians, they will receive further notice among the industries of the city.

Coal mining is one of the most important interests, the whole township being apparently underlaid with that mineral. The first coal mining was done at an early day, the first bank having been opened on the southeast corner of Section 24. The Moffatts also mined coal at the same place and shipped it by keel-boats to St. Louis. As at other places, the first mining was done either by "stripping" or drifting into the hill-sides, where the out-crop appeared. But, for some years, deep-mining has been carried on, not only along the river and creek bottoms, but on the up-lands. These mines give employment to a large number of laborers.

The population of this township is of a mixed character—there being many Germans, some Welsh among the miners, some Scotch, some Irish, an English community on the north side, and some Americans. Among the early German settlers were Conrad Bontz, who came in 1844, Christian Straesser and the Hallers and Beatty Johnson in 1848, George Ojeman in 1849, and the Roelfs in 1851. These men were, and their descendants are, among the very best and most prosperous citizens.

There being an extensive ledge of lime-stone rock in the north part of the township, the burning of lime for the Peoria market has, from an early day, been an important industry. There are also extensive quarries of sand-stone along the Kickapoo Creek, which yield a fairly good quality of stone for building purposes.

CHURCHES.—The people of Limestone Township, at a very early day, began to supply themselves with the preaching of the Gospel, and have always maintained several churches.

Christ Church (Episcopal) is located on the northwest quarter of Section 4, where there were a considerable number of people of English extraction. The first services were held at the house of the now venerable John Benton, and for some time meetings were held at the homes of some of the other settlers. Bishop Chase came to the county about the year 1836 and took the oversight of this incipient parish, after which regular services were held almost every Sabbath. After a time a house of worship was erected which still stands. It was at first a plain stone building, but in recent years, it has been enlarged and beautified by the addition of a tower and by putting stained glass into the windows.

James Jordan

John Pennington donated two acres for a church site and cemetery, and, in May, 1844, the corner-stone of the church was laid, but the building was not finished until the fall of 1845, nor consecrated until December of that year. The original cost was about $1,500. Of this sum $1,100 was contributed by friends in England, of which the sum of twenty pounds sterling was the gift of Dowager Queen Adelaide, and twenty pounds the gift of Lord Kenyon, the friend of Bishop Chase, after whom he named Kenyon College established by him in Ohio. Some years ago Rev. John Benson, James Clark and Isabella Douglas conveyed to this church twenty acres of ground, just across the public highway from the church, as a "glebe," for the use and benefit of the rector. Attached to the church is a small cemetery, in which the remains of Henry Wilson, who died September 17, 1838, were the first to be interred. A stroll through this cemetery, which many Peorians have enjoyed through the hospitality of Oliver J. Bailey, the proprietor of the adjoining Wild-wood dairy farm, bring to mind more reminiscences of by-gone days than probably any other spot in the county; for here are the stones which mark the final resting place of many of its prominent citizens.

Limestone Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1849 with twenty-seven members. Its first church building, located on Section 4, on the Farmington Road, was built in 1860 at a cost of $1,000. It was dedicated by the noted and venerable Peter Cartwright, D. D., on December 21, 1860. The preacher in charge, at that time, was Rev. John Borland. This church has always been supplied with the regular ministrations of Gospel services according to the mode prescribed by the denomination to which it belongs.

The Presbyterian Church was organized May 6, 1859, by a committee of the Presbytery consisting of Rev. Robert P. Farris, D. D., Pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Peoria, Rev. M. L. Wood, the minister in charge, and Ruling Elder James H. Patterson, of the Salem Church. There were fifteen members admitted, and John Cameron and William Jones were ordained and installed as Ruling Elders. This church has never been strong enough to support a pastor, but stated services have been regularly kept up by temporary supplies. Its present membership numbers about thirty, and it maintains a Sabbath-school of forty. Although numerically small, it contributes regularly to the benevolent work of the church. The church building is a neat frame structure erected on the northwest corner of Section 8, at a cost of $1,600. Rev. M. L. Wood, who was one of the committee to organize the church, was the first minister to this people, he having served as stated supply for two years. The church is at present without a pastor.

The German Evangelical Lutheran Church was organized in 1855 with eighteen members. The first house of worship was erected in the year 1856, at a cost of $1,000, but, after twenty years' occupancy, it became too small for the growing congregation, and a new one was erected in 1876, at the cost of $4,000. The church is located on the southwest quarter of Section 22, where it has three and a half acres of ground, in which is also located a cemetery. The first pastor was Rev. F. Warnke.

SCHOOLS.—Little is known of the schools prior to the introduction of the free school system. The first school was probably that taught in 1836 by Simeon Ward, in a log-house situated near the house where William C. H. Barton afterwards resided, at what is now South Bartonville. Since the adoption of the free school system, the township has maintained a creditable stand in the matter of public education. It is now divided into nine full districts, in each one of which is a good school house. There is also a union district at Harker's Corners.

JAMES W. JORDAN.

Commercially and agriculturally, James W. Jordan has impressed his worth upon the community of Peoria County. Of Gaelic ancestry, he was born in Zanesville, Ohio, December 10, 1851, his parents, Patrick and Catherine (Holden) Jordan, having been born in Ireland. Patrick Jordan was a farmer in his native land, and, upon emigrating to America in 1878, settled in Zanesville, Ohio, removing in the winter of 1851 to Section 3, Limestone Township, Peoria County. A progressive and industrious man, he soon became an integral part of the prosperity of his locality, and from a comparatively small beginning accumulated lands aggregating five hundred and twelve acres. Even greater gains were predicted as the result of his enterprise, had he not met with an accident on a bridge with a runaway team, which resulted in his death August 23, 1874. His wife survived him until February 5, 1896. James W. Jordan was reared on the home farm and educated in the public schools, graduating from the Peoria County Normal School in 1873, and, in response to a commendable independence, set forth at an early age to earn his own livelihood. After an absence of five years he returned to the surroundings of his boyhood, and to the hearth so soon to be desolated by the tragic calamity of his father's death. In the settlement of the large estate, James and Patrick Jordan, both sons of the sturdy pioneer, bought out the other heirs, and Mr. Jordan is now the possessor of a farm of two hundred and forty acres, upon a portion of which stands the memory-laden homestead.

While a successful farmer and stock-raiser, Mr. Jordan is perhaps more widely known because of his association with the Crescent Stone Company, one of the substantial enterprises of the county. The magnitude of the concern may be estimated when it is known that, during one year, the city of Peoria was furnished from their quarries thirty-three thousand tons of crushed stone. The average yearly output of the quarries is ten thousand tons, and the average price per cubic yard is $1.50. Although independent in politics, Mr. Jordan has filled many offices of trust within the gift of the people of his county, and has been Highway Commissioner for seven years, Supervisor for three years and School Director for several terms. With his family he is a member of the Catholic Church.

The marriage of Mr. Jordan and Mary Tighe occurred February 17, 1881, and of this union have been born eight children: Katie V., Josie, Martin D., Roger, Leo, Byron, James and Elizabeth. Mrs. Jordan was born in Medina Township, May 2, 1858, a daughter of John and Catherine Tighe, who were natives of Ireland. The parents came to America in 1853, and from New York State removed to Medina Township in 1856, where they farmed for the remainder of their days, and where the mother died, January 5, 1894.

Straesser came from Germany to New York at the age of thirty, and went thence to Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, where he married. In 1851 he made the journey from Martinsburg to Peoria on foot and returned in the same way, after having bought a farm in Section 35, Limestone Township, to which he soon afterward brought his family by way of the lakes. He was so successful as a farmer and as a business man that he owned, besides a two hundred-acre farm in Peoria County, three hundred acres of valuable land in McLean County. His sterling integrity was recognized by all who knew him, and it is worthy of record that, before coming to America, he served twelve years in the German army. William Straesser has had a successful career as a farmer since he attained his majority, and at one time he owned a farm of one hundred and eighty-four acres, forty acres of which he sold to the State of Illinois. He gives particular attention to fine Jersey stock. Independent in politics, he wields a recognized influence in township affairs and has served his fellow citizens two years as Tax Collector and twelve years as School Director. He is a Methodist. December 24, 1878, at Peoria, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Michael M. and Catharine (Haner) Powell, natives of Wales, and they have five children: William Eugene, Elmer Morgan, Harold Carter, Catherine E. and Christina. Mrs. Straesser was born in Limestone Township April 22, 1855. Her father, born at Radnor, South Wales, January 15, 1819, emigrated to New York City and removed thence to Jefferson County, New York, where he was Constable eight years and was twice elected Justice of the Peace. After his settlement in Peoria County he was Postmaster at Dowdallville, resigning to remove to Peoria to serve as Coroner, which office he occupied several terms. He was the first Notary Public in Limestone Township. In politics he was a Democrat.

SWORDS, WILLIAM A.; Farmer and Contractor; born in Limestone Township February 15, 1854; the son of William and Sarah (Jenkins) Swords. The father was born in Ohio in 1817 and the mother in Virginia in 1818. The paternal grandparents were Jotham and Elizabeth Swords. William Swords first visited Peoria County in 1834. At that time he says the site of the court house was open prairie for sale at four dollars an acre, but, on account of water and wood, he went eight miles away and took up land in Limestone Township. Returning to Ohio he brought his family to Peoria County the following year. He and his wife are still living in the old brick house which he built on his farm years ago, and where he raised his family of twelve children. William A. Swords remained a member of his father's family until he was married at the age of twenty-six. He now owns six hundred and eighty acres of land and good buildings. Besides farming he has been employed as a contractor in furnishing crushed stone for street work in Peoria, and also building stone for various structures. He married Clara J. Stevens in Limestone Township March 11, 1881. She was born in Limestone Township in 1863, the daughter of William and Mary Ann (Rogers) Stevens, natives of England. They came to the United States about 1860. The father first worked at mining coal, but later bought a farm upon which he now lives, nine miles south of Canton, Illinois. The mother died in 1899. Mr. and Mrs. Swords have fourteen children: William, Arthur, Albert, Chester, Elmer, Charles, George, Jessie, Clarence, Thomas Austin, John, one who died in infancy, Clara and Laura. Mr. Swords and wife are members of the Methodist Church. He is a Democrat.

CHAPTER X.

LOGAN TOWNSHIP.

By WM. S. McCULLOUGH AND WM. S. PARR.

Logan Township (8 N., 6 E.) is situated in the southwesterly portion of the county, the northern portion being high rolling prairie, the southern portion timber land somewhat broken by the small streams flowing into Copperas Creek. There are several limestone quarries in the township from which stone is procured in limited quantities for building purposes, the well water being impregnated with that mineral. Bituminous coal abounds, there being four veins in the township at the respective depths of forty, eighty, one hundred and twenty and two hundred and forty feet, the two latter being workable veins of four feet six inches. Thomas Forbes sunk the first coal shaft in 1870 on his farm, reaching a four foot six inch vein at the depth of forty feet. He hoisted the coal by horse power and burned some coke for the local market. A coal shaft costing $20,000 was put in operation in 1883 at Hanna City, a village on the Iowa Central Railroad, which is doing a successful business.

The larger portion of the township consists of rich farming lands, well improved and occupied principally by the owners, who form a highly intelligent, prosperous, moral and religious community. Eden is another village on the Iowa Central Railway, while Smithville, in the southern part, is one of the oldest towns in the county. As was usual in the early days, the first settlers sought this locality on account of its timber, its rich soil and abundance of water.

The first settler was an old Indian trader by the name of Triall, who came in 1830, to the south part of the township. Peter Maynard settled near him in 1831. Thomas Phillips settled on Section No. 2 in 1832, and in the same year came also John G. S. Bohanan, James Harker and Mr. Buck; John T. Runkle and Henry Heaton in 1833-4; Simon Reeves settled on Section No. 34 in 1834, and was followed in 1835 by many others, among whom were Thomas P. Smith, Richard Bourne, John Van Arsdall, Robert Kinney and George Sturgess.

Robert Reeves, the father of Simon Reeves, seems to have arrived in Peoria County in 1816, three years earlier than the party of Abner Eads, to look at the country, coming down the Ohio River as far as Cincinnati on a raft with one companion, thence on horseback to the northeast quarter of Section 6, 11 North, 7 East, thence back to Cincinnati on horseback, thence to his home in Plattsburgh, New York. The reason he did not stay in Peoria County was that there was no civilization anywhere near, and he did not want to take his family so far into the wilderness. He settled in Fulton County in 1824, and his son, Simon, in Peoria County in 1834. The Indians were then plenty in this part of the country, but they gave no trouble until about 1826, when the steamboats began to bring whiskey, after which until the Black Hawk war there was trouble. Mr. Reeves did not go to the war but loaned a horse to Bird Ellis of the Fulton County Company, who was killed at Stillman's Run. The horse was never returned. That Mr. Reeves kept well to the front in modern improvements appears from the fact that he brought the first cook stove to the neighborhood in 1844. To Frank Libby is due the introduction of the threshing machine in 1850 and to J. B. Miller and Alfred Reeves the first reaper. An old man-of-war sailor named John Milligan, who "kept bach" on Section 35, used to go around the neighborhood making and mending shoes, carrying his "kit" with him. The early settlers, by force of circumstances, were obliged to adopt the customs of the country, the log cabin, the primitive dress, the hominy block and other outfittings as elsewhere described.

The first school was taught by John L. Clark in the winter of 1836 in a log school house on Section 36, the land of Andrew Parr. Mr. Clark afterward kept school in his own house on Section 22. He continued to teach successfully for many years and was one of those in attendance at the first Teachers' Institute held in the county. The schools of Logan Township have always maintained a high standing for efficiency, there being now nine districts in the township, each one supplied with a comfortable modern school house.

Smithville early became the center of a community of Associate Reformed Presbyterians, who have faithfully maintained their distinctive principles until the present time. Being of industrious habits they were not at a loss for workmen sufficiently skilled to supply their own wants. In addition to the shoemaker, already mentioned, they had a blacksmith in the person of William H. Brooks, on his farm two miles southwest of the village, and a chair maker in the village in the person of John D. Smith. Thomas P. Smith, who for a time served as one of the County Commissioners, kept the postoffice at his private house, one mile east of the village. The first store was kept in Smithville by Nesbitt & Smith in the year 1847.

Prior to the adoption of township organizations, the territory now known as Logan Township, together with parts of Townships 8 North, 7 East and 9 North, 6 East and 9 North, 7 East, constituted a precinct called Middle Precinct. At the time of the adoption of township organization, Township 8 North, 6 East was organized as the Township of Logan. The first township election was held at Smithville April 2, 1850, John Lobaugh being Moderator and John Stewart, Clerk. Thomas P. Smith was elected Supervisor, John McCullough, James H. Patterson and Richard Bourne, Commissioners of Highways John Stewart, Town Clerk; William Dryden, Assessor; S. W. Brooks and John Smith, Justices of the Peace; Robert Smith and Merritt Tracy, Constables.

The route of the old State Railroad from Peoria to Warsaw was laid out through the northern part of this township, and, after being graded remained unoccupied until the Peoria & Farmington Railroad was laid upon the same right of way. On the line of this road have sprung up the towns of Hanna City, laid out in 1882 on part of the southwest quarter of Section 11 by Robert G. McCullough, and Eden, laid out in 1883 on part of the southwest quarter of Section 8 by Milo M. Long.

Logan Township was among the earliest in the county to organize churches. The first church to be organized was that of the Associate Reformed (now United) Presbyterian, called the Church of Harmony, in 1836. It was organized by Rev. John Wallace by appointment of his presbytery, there being ten constituent members; John McFadden, Thomas P. Smith and Thomas Smith being chosen and ordained as the first ruling elders. Rev. Andrew Fulton was the first pastor. Their first church was built in the timber in 1840, which was occupied until about the year 1852, when a commodious brick edifice was erected in Smithville at a cost of about $2,500, which they still occupy. The present pastor is Rev. John Harper, who has faithfully ministered to this people for twenty-seven years. The session of the church is at present composed of Lenox Norwood and James Stewart, elders.

The United Presbyterian Church of Bethel (near Hanna City) was organized on June 3, 1853, by Rev. William E. R. Erskine, the place then being called Cherry Fork; John McCullough and James Patterson being chosen and ordained the first ruling elders. The first church building was a frame structure 30x40 feet, erected in 1854. The present one, also of frame, 34x52 feet, was erected in 1874 at a cost of over $3,000. Rev. Philip H. Drenan was the first pastor, serving from 1855 to 1857; he being succeeded by Rev. Elijah McCoy, from 1858 to 1865, and Rev. T. P. Proudfit from autumn of 1867 to 1871. In the spring of 1876, this congregation was united in one pastoral charge with the Church of Harmony, under Rev. John Harper. The present pastor is Rev. J. E. McFadden, and Thomas E. Patton, Stewart Glasgow and William S. McCullough, ruling elders.

In 1858, by the uniting of two denominations called the Associate and the Associate Reformed Churches (both formerly called Seceders) the United Presbyterian denomination came into existence, since which time, both the above named churches have gone by that name.

The Pleasant Grove Methodist Episcopal Church was organized about the year 1840, with eighteen members. The first pastor was Rev. William Pitner. They first worshipped in the private houses and in a school house in the vicinity; afterward, in the year 1848, the first church was erected, which did good service until the year 1869, when it was replaced by a more commodious building which is still in use.

The Hanna City Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1880 with seven members, the first pastor being Rev. ——— Humphreys. Their first church building was erected at Smithville in 1854, but in 1888 the location was removed to Hanna City, where a new building was erected at a cost of $2,000, and a parsonage at a cost of $1,200. The present officers are Rev. W. H. Clark, pastor; John Tamplin, B. F. Holt, E. P. Yinger and A. J. White, Stewards, and A. J. Blandon, Luther Couch, Dr. David H. Herrel and B. F. Holt, Trustees.

Salem Presbyterian Church was organized May 9, 1840, by Rev. Samuel C. McCune and Rev. William McCandlish, with nine members; William Stewart and James H. Patterson being ordained and installed as ruling elders. Previous to this time there had been a Presbyterian Church called the La Marsh Church, in the same territory, organized in 1843 by Rev. Isaac Kellar and Rev. Samuel McCune with twelve members; David McKinner and Samuel W. Brooks being ruling elders. This church became extinct in 1848. The first pastor of the present church was Rev. J. C. Hanna, during whose ministry in 1856 the first church was erected. The place of preaching was changed to Hanna City in the year 1862, when a very pleasant new church was erected at a cost of $2,500, and later a parsonage was secured at a cost of $1,500.

THOMAS E. PATTON.

The present prosperity of Logan Township is traceable, in a large measure, to the efforts of the pioneers, who came here in the latter '40s, and with well trained muscles and intelligent management, tilled the un-prophecy of autumnal reward. From a small beginning, and with crude implements, these men from the East fostered a paternal interest in the latent resources of their surroundings, and planted and garnered with increasing largeness, as the experience of years laid bare the peculiarities of climate and soil. Through all these years Mr. Patton has labored faithfully and well, and his neighborhood knows no more enthusiastic advocate of Illinois as an agricultural region. He was born in Adams County, Ohio, August 14, 1822, and comes honestly by his special aptitude for farming, for his parents, Thomas and Jane (Glasgow) Patton, who were born in Virginia, spent the greater part of their lives on a farm. The younger Thomas became, while still young, a valuable assistant to his father, and during the summer months worked early and late, the small leisure permitted during the winter season being devoted to attendance at the old log school house down back of his father's orchard, on George's Creek. October 4, 1844, he married Martha A. Finley, who was born in Adams County, Ohio, January 22, 1823, and three years later, in 1847 removed from the familiar surroundings of his youth to Logan Township, Illinois, of which he is still one of the honored and also one of the most venerable members of the community. Politically he is a Prohibitionist, but has never allied himself with the official undertaking of his locality. With his wife and family he is associated with the United Presbyterian Church.

To Mr. and Mrs. Patton have been born the following children: Robert M., born June 27, 1845; Haddasah J., born in September, 1846; Thomas C., born March 14, 1850; William A., born June 22, 1852; John T., born April 4, 1854; James R., born February 1, 1856, and died January 26, 1858; Martin L., born November 8, 1857, and died May 29, 1860; and Ralph A., born January 12, 1867. Ralph A. Patton has charge of the old homestead, and is making a success of stock-raising and general farming. October 12, 1892, he married Jessie Bariga, who was born in Minonk, Woodford County, Illinois, June 7, 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph A. Patton are the parents of three children: Martha, who was born November 15, 1893; Lester T., born May 30, 1895; and J. Herrell, born March 24, 1897.

Mr. Blandin came from Canada in 1871 and settled at Harker's Corners, Timber Township, where he owned a farm, which he sold in 1880 in order to buy his present homestead. He married Florence Smardon, who bore him two daughters: Bertha Sophia, who is a student at the Young Ladies' Seminary at Aurora, and Ida Beatrice, who is completing her education at Bradley Polytechnic Institute, Peoria. He was again married at Harker's Corners April 4, 1889, to Sarah M. Parr, born August 14, 1860, and who has borne him two children—Myrtle Marie, born October 30, 1895, and Ernest Wilber, born October 31, 1899. Mr. Blandin is a Methodist and a Republican.

He came to Logan Township in 1846 with one hundred dollars in his pocket, with which he purchased forty acres of land, where he settled and where his widow now resides. He worked at his trade and cultivated his land and with his savings bought land. At his death he owned two hundred and sixty acres. He married Rosanna F. McCullough November 29, 1848, in Logan Township. She was born July 15, 1830, the daughter of John and Martha (Glasgow) McCullough. CHAPTER XI.

MEDINA TOWNSHIP.

This township can rightfully lay claim to having been one of the earliest in the county to be settled. It is divided into two distinct sections, one lying on the high prairie, the other on the river bottom, the two being divided by a strip of bluff about two miles wide. That on the river bottom was considered very desirable, not only from its contiguity to the river, but also from the fact that the soil, consisting in part of prairie and in part of timber land, was exceedingly productive. LaSalle Prairie, which, in early days, gave its name to a settlement, occupies a portion of this township. It had two State roads on the bottom, one leading through Northampton to Galena; the other, through Chillicothe, Henry and other towns, to Boyd's Grove, thence to Ottawa and Chicago. On the western, or high prairie side, it also had two State roads,—one from Peoria running north by Mt. Hawley, the other branching from that one at Mt. Hawley, and running diagonally through the sections to Princeville, and thence northwesterly to the present city of Rock Island.

The first settler was George Love, who came with his family from Park County, Indiana, and, on November 10, 1824, settled near the present village of Mossville. His name, as seen elsewhere, is prominently connected with the affairs of the county. At the time of his location here, and for eight or ten years later, Indians were numerous in the vicinity, they having a village on Section 4. It is said that Mr. Love had no nearer neighbors than those at Fort Clark, nine miles distant in one direction, and those at Fox River (now Ottawa), in the other. There was, however, an early settlement at Ten Mile Creek, on the opposite side of the river, which may have been nearer in miles than Fort Clark; but there being no ferry nearer than the latter point, it was not so accessible.

John Ridgeway was the next to arrive. He came in time to assist Mr. Love in building his cabin. The Ridgeway farm is frequently mentioned in connection with the early highways, and election and school districts. Edmund Weed Briarly, Abner Cooper, Henry Thomas and Samuel Clifton came next. Several other families settled near them within the next few years; but, being mostly transients, they soon disappeared.

Another settlement sprang up in the northerly part of the township in the year 1825. This consisted of the Averys, Stephen French, Stephen Carl and Resolved Cleveland. These, with their families, at first occupied the abandoned bark cabins of the Indians. In the spring of 1831, Mr. Linus Scoville, with his family, came from Vermilion County, Indiana, and settled on a claim on Section 22, which he had previously bought from one of the Love family. Gershom Silliman, a Baptist minister, came in 1831, John E. Bristol and Nicholas Sturm in 1832. Thomas Mooney and his sons, James and William, in 1835. Jerome H. and Imri W. Case in 1836. William Robinson in 1837, and John P. Neal and Jonathan W. Rice in 1838.

In these early days a ready market for the surplus products of the farms was found in the trade with emigrants to the Lead Mines, many of whom passed through this township on the old Kellogg trail, afterwards the Galena State Road. Much was also sold to voyageurs on the river, and, as seen elsewhere, some was taken on flat-boats to New Orleans or sold to the planters on the way.

Among the early settlers whose names are prominently mentioned in connection with the affairs of the county are: George Love, Henry Thomas, Moses Clifton, Stephen French, Resolved Cleveland, John E. Bristol, Thomas Mooney, Simon Reed and Hiram Currey. The first marriage was that of Abner Cooper and Sally Sheldon (called Chilton in the record), in February, 1826, by Rivers Cormack, a Baptist preacher.

Prior to the adoption of township organization, this township was subject to frequent changes in respect to its election precincts, which will be found in detail elsewhere in this work. In 1844, the Rome Precinct embraced a portion of its territory, the remainder being called LaSalle Precinct. In 1850 township organization was adopted, when this township was named Medina, and its territorial limits made to correspond with congressional township Ten North, Eight East. The origin of the name seems to be veiled in mystery.

The Peoria & Bureau Valley Railroad, now operated under a lease by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Company, extends through the eastern portion of the township so far as it borders on the Illinois River. This road was opened for the public travel on November 9, 1854. About that time the village of Mossville was laid out and established as a way-station on the southeast quarter of Section 21. It was named after William S. Moss, one of the proprietors of the land, who at that time resided in Peoria and was operating one of the leading distilleries. He soon afterwards became a member of the firm of Kellogg, Moss & Co., in the building of the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad westerly from Peoria. In 1859 he removed to California, where he amassed a fortune and died in the year 1882.

This village has been well supplied with churches. Its Baptist Church was organized at a meeting held in the school house, April 9, 1868. George F. Prunk was chairman and Thomas Hough, Clerk. On November 16, 1868, a Presbyterian church was organized by a committee of Peoria Presbytery, consisting of Rev. John H. Morron and Ruling Elders Jonathan K. Cooper, of the First Church of Peoria, and H. Hery, of the Prospect Church, Radnor. Through the assistance of the citizens a neat and comfortable church edifice was erected at a cost of about $2,600, capable of seating about two hundred persons. As a large percentage of the members resided on the high prairie in the vicinity of Alta, the location of the congregation was, on October 9, 1875, removed to that place, and its name changed to the Church of Alta. The house of worship was sold and the proceeds placed in trust for the erection of a church at its new location, and the old one has since then been used by the Methodists.

The most prominent church on the river bottom is St. Joseph's Catholic Church, situated on Section No. 2. This church was organized in 1855, under the leadership of Thomas Mooney, Sr., who, besides his subscription of $500 towards the erection of a church edifice, donated five acres of land for the church and burying-ground attached. Several other liberal subscriptions having been made, the church was completed, in the same year, at a cost of $1,000. It is well seated, well furnished, is supplied with an organ and its services are well sustained. The church was dedicated by Father Halligan of Chicago.

The village of Alta is situated on the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad on the northwest quarter of Section 31. It was laid out in March, 1873, by Imri Case, Thomas Hanson and Lorin Wilder—three prominent citizens of the township. It received its name from the fact—which may appear strange—of its being the most elevated point on the railroad between Peoria and Rock Island. It is situated only a short distance north of the celebrated Prospect Hill, which rises to an altitude of near 500 feet above low water in the river.

SCHOOLS.—The first school in the township was taught by Jesse McGee, who, having secured the necessary number of scholars, turned it over, in January, 1827, to Moses Clifton, and he, after teaching three months, was succeeded by Zelotes Marks. It was situated near the present site of Mossville, in a building erected especially for that purpose. As this was in one of the earliest districts formed in the county, it is possible this house was erected under the peculiar provisions of the law of 1825, elsewhere noted. It was a log cabin, 16x18 feet, with puncheon floor, paper windows, a clap-board door and was daubed with mud. The cost of tuition was $2.00 per scholar for a period of three months. In 1836 a school was taught by Hiram Curry, which was afterwards removed to the northeast quarter of Section 27, where it remained until the public school was located in Mossville, where a fine school house, costing $4,000, was erected in 1868. In the northwestern portion of the township the first public school was located on the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 7, and was taught by Joseph M. Batchelder as early as 1840. Prior to that time, and about 1836, a private school had been taught by Mr. John Benjamin in a little log cabin used as a dwelling. A public school house was erected in 1852 and was located on the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of Section 3, where it remained until 1866, when it was determined by a vote of the district, to change the site and build a new school house on the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of Section 2. A school house was built on the farm of John E. Bristol in 1853, but it was removed in the fall of 1856 to its present site, where subsequently, in 1872, a school house costing $2,500 was erected.

When the free school system went into operation the township had several school houses, which have been gradually superseded by others; the township has been redistricted into six districts, in all of which there are fairly good school houses.

There are no incorporated villages in the township. The first election under township organization was held, April 2, 1850, at which time the following officers were elected: Supervisor, John Jacobs; Assessor, Linus Scoville; Town Clerk, Thomas Mooney, Jr.; Collector, C. B. Pierce; Overseer of the Poor, Isaac Wideman; Commissioners of Highways, Harvey Stillman, Samuel C. Neal, and Alanson Vantassel; Justices of the Peace, Thomas P. Reed, and Phineas Crouch; Constables, William Porter and G. W. Hargadine.

The following are the present township officers: Supervisor, Zealy M. Holmes; Town Clerk, Jacob Rensch; Collector, John Graham; Assessor, John Mallen; Commissioners of Highways, Edward Schaffner, William Thorne and D. M. Waite; Trustees of Schools, Edward Matthews, James F. Mooney and William Clark; Township Treasurer, Zealy M. Holmes.

WILLIAM H. ALLEN.

On both sides of the family William H. Allen, farmer and brick-maker of Medina Township, is descended from great-grandparents who courageously espoused the cause of Liberty during the Revolutionary War. He was born in Thompson, Connecticut, June 23, 1831, and is a grandson of Simeon Allen, and a son of Hollis Allen, the latter of whom was born in Connecticut, May 9, 1805, and died February 2, 1887. The mother of Mr. Allen, formerly Catherine G. Searles, daughter of Benjamin and Mary (Arnold) Searles, of Massachusetts, was born in Connecticut, September 5, 1810, and died in 1896. Hollis Allen, his wife and four children, removed from Connecticut to Bureau County, Illinois, in 1837, and identified themselves with the then thinly settled agricultural region. In 1846 their fortunes were shifted to Peoria County, and two years later, to Medina Township, where for two years the elder Allen operated a brickyard on Section 17. For a few years after his death, his sons, emulating their father's example, continued to carry on the affairs of the manufactory. Of the children born to Hollis Allen and his wife, the following accompanied their parents on the journey from Connecticut: Alfred R., deceased; William H.; Hannah E., who married George Devault, and is deceased; and Martin V. B., who is also deceased. In Bureau County, Illinois, were born Catharine Lucinda, who married William Truesdale, and lives in Peoria, and Priscilla Searles, who is deceased. Simeon Hiram, who lives near Vilisca, Iowa, and Oscar, who is deceased, were born in Peoria County.

William H. Allen.

In Bureau and Peoria Counties, William H. Allen was reared to an appreciation of his best capabilities, and not only learned to be a model farmer, but acquired, as well, a minute knowledge of the brick-making business. At Lacon, October 30, 1858, he married Sarah E. Nuttall, who was born in Yorkshire, England, March 18, 1836, and is a daughter of Richard and Elizabeth (Whitman) Nuttall, natives of England. Of the five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Allen, Varina T., born August 9, 1859, is a graduate of the Academy of the Sacred Heart, in Peoria, and married Austin Shaw; Walter H., born November 22, 1860, graduated from the Veterinary College of Chicago, and the Barnes Medical College of Saint Louis, and is now practicing medicine at Neponset, Bureau County, Illinois; Cora was born April 17, 1862, and is the wife of B. C. Dunlap; Oscar was born November 20, 1867, is a graduate of the Keokuk Medical College, and is practicing his profession at Dunlap; and Albert, born June 19, 1872, graduated from the Barnes Medical College of Saint Louis, and is engaged in practice in Oklahoma. In Medina Township Mr. Allen is successful as a farmer and brick-manufacturer, and he is prominently identified with the most intelligent growth of his locality. Politically a Democrat, he has held the office of Collector and Assessor of Medina Township.

THOMAS F. STRINGER.

The deeds, accomplishments and character of that fine old pioneer, John Stringer, are reflected in no small degree in the life of his son, Thomas F. Stringer, who was born in Kickapoo Township, May 12, 1847. His great-grandfather was named Edward Stringer, and his grandparents were Reuben and Delilah (Owen) Stringer. John Stringer, who marked out his career after plans suggested by his own common sense and indomitable energy, unaided by the faintest smile from Dame Fortune, was born in Bullitt County, Kentucky, November 3, 1806. With a fair idea of what constituted hard work, he arrived in Medina Township in 1829, his available assets being the clothes on his back, a stout heart and good constitution, and fifty cents in change. He was soon in a position to take up one hundred and seventy acres of Government land, upon which he settled, but which, being bottom-lands in Medina Township, were unhealthful. He therefore removed to Kickapoo Township, and took up three hundred and seventy acres of land, which he improved into a splendid farm, and upon which he died, May 15, 1885. He was a strong and self-reliant man, with pronounced moral courage and business integrity, and, in spite of his up-hill exertions in the very early days, was never sued at law and never allowed his taxes to become delinquent. By wise investment, his fifty cents and industry netted him five hundred acres of paid up farm land, besides various property in the township. During the Black Hawk War, in 1832, he cheerfully tendered his services and was a Corporal in Captain Eads' Company. His son Thomas has the rifle which was used in his encounters with the fighting red-men. At the time of the war there were only seventy-five men in Peoria County who were eligible for military duty.

John Stringer was an uncompromising Democrat, but it is not recorded that he took an active interest in political affairs. June 28, 1837, he married Elizabeth Harris, at the old Stringer home, and of the seven children born of this union, two only are now living. Nancy Ann Koerner was born August 24, 1839, and died April 7, 1877; John H. was born February 21, 1843, and died March 5, 1866; Evaline was born February 21, 1845, and died October 1, 1854; Thomas F. was born April 20, 1847; and Mary Eliza was born May 12, 1852. She is the widow of William Finck, and is living with her brother Thomas. Elizabeth (Harris) Stringer was born June 17, 1818, and died in Kickapoo Township, February 2, 1882. Mrs. Stringer was of French ancestry, while her husband was of English descent.

The farm of Thomas F. Stringer is located about a mile south of Mossville, and consists of one hundred and seventy acres of fine bottom land, including the portion of the paternal farm upon which is situated the old homestead. The Chicago, Rock Island & Peoria Railroad runs through a portion of the farm.

Mr. Stringer is a man of liberal views and unquestioned integrity, and is well posted on current events. Unlike his father, he is a stanch Republican, and is now serving his second term as Justice of the Peace. Travel and extended observation are among the pleasures which his good management have made possible, and he recalls with satisfaction a trip made to the Pacific slope in 1875.

DAVID FRANKLIN THORNE.

Regardless of the political color of the prevailing administration, David Franklin Thorne has, for sixteen years, held the office of Postmaster of Mossville. It were therefore superfluous to say that his service has been a satisfactory one, or that he is indebted to his devotion to Republican institutions for the long-continued confidence of those in high places. It may be said, also, that all worthy efforts to improve the township may be sure of the substantial support of Mr. Thorne, and that he has, during all the years of his residence here, been regarded as one of the advanced and liberal acquisitions of a promising community. From a business standpoint the general mercantile establishment owned and managed by him—and which is one of the landmarks of the town—receives a deservedly large patronage, and is the center of an ever increasing popularity and activity. Here may be found, in their best quality, the commodities most in demand in expanding localities, and the inducements to purchase at this particular store are enhanced by the prevailing air of neatness, thrift, good management and never failing consideration and courtesy.

A native Illinoisan, Mr. Thorne was born in Radnor Township April 20, 1860, his parents, William and Deborah (Passmore) Thorne, having been born in England. William Thorne correctly anticipated the agricultural possibilities of Illinois and, in 1857, removed hither with one of his sons, his wife and seven children following him to the West the next year. From the first his expectations received an impetus toward realization, and, from farming on a comparatively small scale, he was enabled, through industry and saving, to continually increase his possession until at the close of his well directed life, he owned four hundred acres of land in Mossville and vicinity. To William and Deborah Thorne were born the following children: John, who died while serving his country during the Civil war; Charity, deceased; Mary, the wife of John Kingdon; George; Annie; Richard Edward; D. Frank; and John W.

David Franklin Thorne was reared on his father's farm and educated in the public schools. April 25, 1899, in Peoria, he married Isabel Daily, who was born in Peoria May 19, 1864, a daughter of John and Hannah (Murphy) Daily, the former of whom was born in North Adams, Massachusetts, in 1828, and the latter in Parish Water-Grass Hill, County Cork, Ireland, in 1839. Mrs. Thorne, whose parents still live in Peoria, is a graduate of the Peoria High School and for thirteen years was engaged in educational work in the city and county. Besides Mrs. Thorne, the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Daily are as follows: Mary, wife of John G. Meister, who was born in 1865; John, born in 1867, and at present a lawyer and ex-State's Attorney; Hannah, born in 1869; Joseph, born in 1871; Clara, born in 1873; and Eva B., born in 1879, and a graduate of Vassar College, class of 1900. Mr. Thorne is a member of Camp No. 6793, Modern Woodmen of America.

BRISTOL, JOHN E.; Farmer; born at Volney, Oswego County, New York, April 26, 1812, is a son of John Bristol and his wife, Sarah Eno, daughter of John Eno, who lived and died at Mossville, Illinois. John Bristol was born at New Haven, Connecticut, April 1, 1777, and died at Peoria June 1, 1844; Sarah Eno was born at Whitestown, New York, in 1789, and died September 21, 1871. Mr. Bristol, who had been a soldier in the war of 1812-14, left Oswego County with his family July 25, 1830, and settled at Harker's Corners, Peoria County. In 1831 he bought and moved on a quarter of Section 22 in Medina Township. John and Sarah (Eno) Bristol had four children, of whom John E. is the only one now living: Nelson, John, Mary Ann and John E. The latter enlisted, at Peoria, April 23, 1832, under Captain Abner Eads, in Stillman's battalion, and served in the Black Hawk War until honorably discharged, June 28, following, and he is in receipt of a pension of eight dollars a month. He married, in Medina Township, May 3, 1835, Anna Martin, who was born November 9, 1817, and died January 16, 1863, and who bore him the following named children: George, born July 29, 1836, lives in Colorado; Emeline Swiger, born February 12, 1838; Sarah, born December 3, 1839, died September 10, 1846; John, born September 16, 1841, lives in Texas; Cyrus, born September 17, 1843, lives in Jefferson County, Illinois; Richard and Davis, born October 17, 1845, live in Radnor Township; James, born October 20, 1847, died May 30, 1899; Mary, born August 28, 1850, died January 10, 1863; Alvin and Almond, born March 25, 1853, live in Hallock Township; Martin, born November 21, 1857, lives in Nebraska; Ida Clark, born March 25, 1860, lives in Medina Township; Medora, born June 29, 1862, died May 6, 1864. Almond has been a member of the Illinois Legislature. Mr. Bristol married a second wife, Augusta Penny, who was born at Sackett's Harbor, New York, February 10, 1817, and died January 20, 1900. He is a member of the People's party and has been Justice of the Peace twelve years, Assessor four years and Township Treasurer twelve terms.

NASH, ROSWELL M.; Farmer; born at Norwalk, Connecticut, March 28, 1828, is the great-grandson of Micajah Nash, a native of England, who migrated to America and bought Patchogue Township on Long Island, New York, and erected on the Patchogue River mills, where he made flour and cloth and sawed lumber. George, the son of Micajah, was born at Norwalk, Connecticut, as were his son and grandson. He married Hattie Marvin, and they were the parents of Henry Nash, who was born March 20, 1805, and died in 1855. Henry Nash married Rebecca Raymond, born in Norwalk in 1809, and died in 1866. Her grandfather was George Raymond, a native of England. His son, George, of Norwalk, married Pamela Banks, and they were the parents of Rebecca Raymond. Roswell M. Nash left Connecticut in February, 1851, and went west by way of Philadelphia to Pittsburg, and thence by steamer Fleetwood to St. Louis, and up the Illinois to Naples. There he stayed four years, and then went to Springfield, where he was one of four men who began the development of a farm of three thousand acres. In 1855 he came to Medina Township, Peoria County. The Toalsons and Goslins are of English, and the Cowdens and Stebbins of German descent. After reading medicine a year under the preceptorship of Dr. G. F. Toalson, at Mexico, Missouri, Dr. Toalson took a preparatory course at the Missouri State University, Columbia, and on March 17, 1897, was graduated with the degree of M. D. from the St. Louis College of Physicians and Surgeons. CHAPTER XII.

MILLBROOK TOWNSHIP.

By WILLIAM H. ADAMS.

Millbrook Township is located in the northwest corner of Peoria County. The south two-thirds is a rich prairie soil, raising abundant crops of small grain; the north part, along Spoon River, being an argillaceous loam, produces also the finest of blue grass. Owing to the presence of quantities of lime and iron in the soil, the pastures impart a strength, elasticity and firmness to the horses, rivaling the celebrated stock of Kentucky.

Underneath the surface is a porous subsoil varying in depth from one to two feet, which is succeeded by the glacial drift, and this by the coal measures. Vein No. 6, usually about four feet in thickness, occupies an area equal to twelve sections; while No. 3 probably underlies the whole township. The first is reached by drift along Plum Hollow, the latter by a shaft on Section 6 on Walnut Creek. Fine beds of gravel suitable for making roads are found along Spoon River, and shale, suitable for the manufacture of fire-brick, is found in several localities.

The Township is rich in evidence of the dwellings of a prehistoric race. At the confluence of Walnut Creek and Spoon River there appears to have been a large village, which is shown by the finding of a number of stone and flint implements, the presence of funeral mounds, and other usual accompanying evidences of the presence of a large population. On a high bluff between the two streams are traces of an old fort, octagonal in form, the outlines of which are nearly obliterated by the lapse of time. In the northwest angle is an oblong elevation, sixty-four by forty-seven feet, and six feet in height. An exploration has disclosed the presence of small pieces of galena, copper beads and awls, leaf-shaped flint implements, red ochre, charcoal and faint traces of human bones, all of great antiquity. Twenty rods west of this is a low mound sixty-two by nineteen feet. On Section 4 is an important group of mounds, the first of which is a small round one from the center of which to the center of the second is a distance of thirty-nine feet; thence to the center of the third, thirty feet; thence to the south end of the fourth is fifty feet. The fourth measures eighty feet from south to north, with a cross at the center, thirty-three by twelve feet and two feet high. From the west end of this one to the center of the fifth is one hundred and twenty-three feet. This is a common round mound forty feet in diameter and three feet high; thence to number six is fifty-eight feet. This one is ninety-eight by eighteen feet and two feet high. Thence in a northwesterly direction it is seventy-five feet to still another one hundred and four feet by eighteen feet and two and a half feet high, from the north end of which it is one hundred feet to another one hundred and forty by twenty feet and three feet high. On the top of this grows an oak tree three feet in diameter. An immense number of flint or hornstone chips are found scattered through the materials of which the mound is constructed, the nearest known out-cropping of which is at Burlington, Iowa. This group commences in the valley just above high water mark and extends northwesterly, terminating on a bluff sixty feet above high water.

FIRST SETTLERS.—William Metcalf was the first white settler. In the spring of 1833 he, with his wife, two children and a boy named Amos McRill, came by wagon from Richland County, Ohio, camping out at night and arriving at French's Grove. That fall he made some improvements on the east half of the southeast quarter of Section 9, 11 N., 5 E., by erecting a cabin and fencing a small field, and in the spring of 1834 moved on to the land. John Sutherland, a native of Pittsburg, Pa. came to Peoria in the year 1834 and bought the lots on which the National Hotel now stands and was one of the original members of the Presbyterian Church, known as the Lowry Church. In August, 1835, he located on Section 32, 11 N., 5 E. He was a man of high moral principles, of unquestioned probity and business integrity, and inflexible in his determination to do right. It is said that, after leaving Peoria, he frequently walked from his home in Millbrook to Peoria to attend church. He, of course, sided with Lowry in his controversy with the adverse party. He died September 30, 1845, leaving numerous descendants, who still reside in that part of the county.

Mr. Sutherland and his family formed the ered a community noted for its high moral and religious character. Among others, who, by precept and example, added much to the reputation of the settlement for enterprise and thrift, were Daniel and John A. McCoy. John Smith, Sr., John Smith, Jr., and Therrygood Smith, from Richland County, Ohio, settled where Rochester now stands in October, 1835, a young man named John White cutting down the first tree where the village afterward grew up. The first settlers were mostly from Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia, New York, Scotland and Ireland, and, as a rule, were industrious, enterprising and ambitious to earn homes for themselves and their families. Their influence in the community has given it a character which will distinguish it for generations yet to come.

ROCHESTER.—The site of Rochester was chosen for its excellent water power furnished by Spoon River. It was surveyed on the 13th of July, 1836, by George C. McFadden, deputy under Thomas Phillips, County Surveyor. On the 29th of the same month the plat was acknowledged by John Smith, Jr., before James P. Harkness and recorded in the Recorder's office.

About this time Clark W. Stanton, a carpenter from Rochester, New York, arrived and bought from Smith a half interest in the town site and mill-seat, and in the following spring, bought Smith's entire interest for the sum of $3,200. The first store to be opened was that of Thomas J. Hurd, of Peoria, who, in the summer of 1836, brought a small stock of goods to the place and opened out in a small log building on the river bank. He was succeeded in a few months by Stacey & Holmes. In the winter of 1836-37 John Smith, Jr., opened a stock of goods, but the ensuing spring sold out to Hon. David Marklev, of Canton, in Fulton County, then a prominent politician of the State.

MILLS.—As might have been expected, the utilizing of the water power of Spoon River was one of the enterprises first to attract the attention of early settlers. In those early days the owner of a mill, if a good one, had a real bonanza. Flour and lumber were two of the essentials of life; and people would travel many miles and await their turn in patience to get a supply of either. It was in the fall of 1836, after the enterprising Clark W. Stanton had purchased one-half of the interest of John Smith, Jr., in the mill-seat, that they, in company, erected the first saw-mill; and so great was the demand for lumber that the mill was kept running night and day. After Stanton had purchased Smith's remaining interest he erected a grist-mill, which began to grind some time in the summer of 1837. People came to it from Prince's Grove, Slackwater, Massillon, Scotland Prairie, Newburg, French's Creek, French's Grove and Lafayette. By adding improvements from time to time, it became one of the most complete and best equipped flouring mills in Central Illinois. Benjamin Huber, who had an interest in it, says that, late in the 'fifties, the mill would grind two hundred and fifty to three hundred bushels of wheat per day and one hundred bushels of chop feed or corn, and that it was crowded with business. But the march of improvements, with the coming of railroads to other points, sapped it of its business, and it is now going to ruin, part of it having already tumbled into the river.

About 1839 or 1840, Gilbert Arnold built a saw-mill on Section 6 on the bank of Walnut Creek; but this, too, has long since gone out of sight.

In 1856 John Carter, a wealthy farmer, residing in the eastern part of the township, undertook the erection of a grist-mill on Spoon River on Section 3, but being unskilled in mechanical engineering, he was at the mercy of any charlatan that came along calling himself a millwright. Through floods, law suits and ignorance, he was ruined financially. The mill, however, was finally finished and did a fair business, but, for the past few years, it has been abandoned.

EDUCATION.—The first school house in the township was in Rochester, and built by Dr. Jehn L. Fifield, Clark W. Stanton, Russell Stanton and Jonah Lewis, without the assistance of public funds. It remained until 1867, when it was replaced by a large and commodious brick structure, which still remains. The first school in the township was taught in the winter of 1836-7 by Caleb North in a log house on the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of Section 20, for which he received $10 per month. Elisha J. Sutherland is probably the only pupil of that school now living. The township is now divided into eight full and two fractional union districts, in all of which public schools are regularly taught. The zealous interest taken by the people in the cause of popular education, is manifested by the flourishing condition of these schools and the liberal taxes, voluntarily imposed upon themselves by the tax-payers, for their support. The school houses are, as a rule, of the most improved pattern and furnished with all modern appliances to secure the comfort, health and advancement in study of the pupil, the cost varying from $600 to $4,500. They compare very favorably with those of any other township in the county. Some of the districts, notably No. 2, have fine school libraries.

In the year 1845 Rev. Robert Breese and his accomplished wife, who was a graduate of the celebrated Holyoke Seminary, established a school of high grade in Rochester called the "Breese Seminary." Mrs. Breese was the real principal, her husband devoting his time principally to ministerial work.

RELIGION.—Constituted as the early communities were, it could not be supposed otherwise than that the promotion of religion would be their first and chief concern. Accordingly we find that in the summer of 1836 Rev. George G. Sill, a missionary, preached the first Presbyterian sermon in the house of John Sutherland. A church of that denomination was organized at Rochester in the summer of 1838, with sixteen members, Joseph Warne, ruling elder, which was taken under the care of Presbytery in October of the same year. Rev. Robert B. Dobbin succeeded Rev. Sill, but how long he preached does not appear. In 1815 Rev. Robert F. Breese was installed pastor of the churches of Rochester and Prince's Grove, which he continued to serve until his death, September 2, 1851. The Rochester church was dissolved by Presbytery sitting at Brimfield September 20, 1854, in consequence of the division between Old and New School, the New School members having withdrawn and formed another church in Stark County.

The French Grove Presbyterian Church was organized October 20 1851, by Rev. Addison Coffey, Rev. William McCandlish and Ruling Elder John Reynolds, a committee previously appointed by Presbytery. There were fifteen members and William Reed and George S. Purselle were ordained and installed as the first Ruling Elders; Rev. John C. Hanna, a licentiate, was appointed to supply the church one-half of his time and the church at Rochester as often as consistent with his other engagements. Rev. Charles McLuer is now pastor of the church, which is in a prosperous condition, having a good Sunday-school, of which Mr. W. H. Todd is Superintendent.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, of Rochester, organized in the year 1816, was the first church organization in the township. Rev. William Cummings preached the first sermon in the house of John Smith. The original members were John Smith and wife, Therrygood Smith and wife, William Metcalf and an unmarried daughter of John Smith, and John Smith, Sr., was chosen first class-leader. A house of worship was commenced in 1838, which was blown to fragments by a cyclone on May 8th of that year. Through removals and death, the church at one time became almost extinct, but there are now houses of worship at Rochester and Laura, the former being the legitimate successor of the first church, and worshipping in a building formerly belonging to the Congregationalists.

The Methodist Church, of Laura, was built in the summer of 1889 at a cost of $1,300 and furnished at a further cost of $200. The first pastor was Rev. D. D. McComen. The church is connected with the Monica charge, its members numbering about sixty.

The Christian Church, at Rochester, was organized December 18, 1844, by John W. Underwood, with four members, the first meeting of seven persons having been held in the old school house in November and conducted by Milton King. They began building a house of worship in 1858, but it was blown down by the cyclone of May 8th of that year. In the summer of 1864 they erected another, which cost between $3,000 and $4,000. In course of time, in consequence of deaths and removals, the membership became too feeble to maintain an organization and, a few years since, Jonathan Pratz, the only remaining Trustee, deeded the church building to the Directors of Glendale Cemetery Association, by whom it was repaired, renovated and placed in good condition. It is now used for moral and religious entertainments, and is free to all approved ministers of the Gospel. From here, after the last sad rites have been performed, the dead are carried forth for interment in the beautiful Glendale Cemetery. A flourishing Sunday-school, under the superintendence of Mrs. M. Stevenson, meets here weekly. The present directors of the Association are William H. Adams, President; W. Winchester, Secretary; S. H. Winchester, Treasurer; and Elder Aley, W. H. Wilcox and Henry Sweat.

The Congregational Church, Rochester, was organized June 30, 1841, at the house of Elias Wycoff, in Stark County, with nine members, the ministers present being Rev. S. S. Miles and Rev. S. G. Wright. After entering into covenant, Messrs. William Webster and N. Wycoff, were duly elected and installed Ruling Elders, and Rev. S. G. Wright designated as Moderator of the Session. In 1854 the meetings were held at Rochester, at which time Rev. Charles B. Donaldson was acting as pastor, and at a meeting held April 14th of that year, the name was changed from Spoon River Congregational Church to Elmore Congregational Church of Rochester. During the summer and fall of 1866 was erected a house of worship costing $2,300, which was dedicated January 22, 1867. The dedication sermon was preached by Rev. W. G. Pierce, of Elmwood, who was assisted in the services by Rev. James Wycoff and Rev. B. F. Haskins, the last named continuing to be the pastor for twelve years. From a variety of causes the society ceased to maintain its organization, and the church edifice is now owned and used as a place of worship by the Methodist Episcopal Church of Elmore.

The Church of New Jerusalem (Swedenborgian) once had an organization in Rochester, the first meeting having been held at the house of John Smith, Jr., on Section 18. At this meeting Rev. John R. Hibbard, an eminent divine of Chicago, made an address. The society consisted of John Smith and wife, Gilbert Arnold, Caleb North, G. P. Wycoff and the Adams and Pulsipher families of Southport. The numbers having been depleted by deaths and removals, meetings are no longer held.

The First Sunday-school was organized in the spring of 1844. Mrs. Breese, wife of Rev. Robert Breese, being the first Superintendent. She was a woman of fine attainments and great force of character, and made the school a success in every respect. Of those who attended this school the following survive: E. J. Sutherland James Sutherland, Miss Columbia Duim, of Galesburg; Sarah Smith, nee Bodine, Kansas; M. A. Dooley, nee Bodine, Missouri; Mahala Hurd, nee Bodine, West Jersey, Stark County; Acenath Neal, nee Matthews, Peoria, and Irene Abby, nee Stan-

CHURCHES.—PEORIA.—The first church in the market for Millbrook Township. The wheat, corn, oats and dressed pork were hauled there in wagons. Some of the cattle were driven to Chicago. After 1856 Elmwood and Oak Hill, on the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad, became its principal shipping points. After the building of the Buda branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, the village of Monica became a market for the eastern part, and Brimfield for a part of the south side of the township. In the year 1887 the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad was located across the township and, in the following year, an elevator was erected at the village of Laura on the line of that road. There are now two large and well equipped elevators at that place, besides cribs of 15,000 bushels capacity.

THE VILLAGE OF LAURA is located on the southwest quarter of Section 22. It was laid out in 1888 by James M. Kellar, who was the first Postmaster. John Shaw brought the first stock of goods to the village. There are now three dry goods stores, one hardware and implement store, a blacksmith shop, a chop-mill, a millinery bazaar, a Methodist Episcopal Church, two elevators, a lumber yard, two hotels, the postoffice and a very fine, commodious and well-equipped public school building. The inhabitants are a religious and church-going people. The population numbers about 150.

The elevators are operated by C. C. Davis & Co., who shipped from this point in the year 1898, 51,800 bushels of oats; 101,600 bushels of corn; 790 bushels of wheat and 500 bushels of rye. During the same year there were shipped from this station five cars of horses, thirty-five of cattle, thirty-nine of hogs and five of sheep. This statement does not represent all the corn and oats grown in the township, as some from the west side went to Elmwood.

Chase Station is located on the line of the same railway on Section 19, in the midst of a fine agricultural section, inhabited by an intelligent, enterprising and thrifty community of farmers and raisers of stock. There is here a general store, a postoffice and other evidences of an incipient village.

BIOGRAPHICAL.—The first child born in the township was a son to Clark W. Stanton, July 6, 1836. It lived only twelve days. This was the first interment in what is now Glendale Cemetery, and the first in the township. The first marriage in the township took place at the house of Clark W. Stanton, December 15, 1837, the contracting parties being Mr. T. Greeley, a native of Salisbury, New Hampshire, and Miss Chloe A. Barnes, a native of New York. The first physician was John L. Fifield, a native of Salisbury, Hillsborough County, New Hampshire, who came to Peoria March 10, 1838, and soon after located at Rochester. Here he remained practicing his profession until 1845, when he removed to Victoria. He was an eminent and able physician and a gentleman of the courtly manners of the olden times.

The first blacksmith in the township was Jacob Roland, who came in 1836. The first postoffice was located at Rochester in 1845, but was named Elmore, Therrygood Smith being first Postmaster.

On account of its desirability as a site for mills, Rochester, at an early day, attracted the attention of immigrants, and soon gave promise of becoming an important point for business. Before the days of railroads its grist and saw mills, its wagon-maker and blacksmith shops, its packing house and hotels made it one of the liveliest business places in Central Illinois. Its great misfortune was to have been so located that the railroads did not find it, and being remote from the county-seat, it became, in a measure, isolated from the rest of the world, and its business has gradually died out.

ADAMS, WILLIAM H.; Farmer; was born in Holmes County, Ohio, August 30, 1835. His great-grandfather, Thomas Adams, a native of County Armagh, Ireland, married _____, a native of the north of Ireland. His grandfather, Henry Adams, a schoolmaster, was born in Armagh and came, in 1795, to Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, where he married Mary McKeehan, born there, and where their son, John Adams, father of William H., was born also. The latter married Sarah D. Funk, a native of Adams County, Pennsylvania, daughter of Moses and Rachel (Deardorff) Funk, natives of the same county. The first Funks in America were Menonites, who, in 1683, came from Switzerland to London and, in 1717, from London to Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. William H. Adams was educated in the common schools of Ohio and Illinois, came to Peoria County in 1861, studied law and was admitted to the bar, but has never practiced his profession. As an expert geologist, he has made valuable discoveries of fossils, notably in West Jersey Township, Stark County. Certain fossil fruits have been named in his honor, and the list of his correspondents embraces many names well known in America and Europe. A Democrat, he is not active in political work, but has been Supervisor, School Director, Commissioner of Highways, Justice of the Peace and Notary Public. He married Sarah J. Anthony, of West Jersey, Stark County, February 25, 1858, and they have had four children: Sarah E., who married Jacob Jennings, of Dallas Center, Iowa; Ida R.; John F., a farmer near Hanna City, who married Minnie Aiken; and Fred W., who graduated from the Medical Department of Iowa University and took a post-graduate course at Bellevue Medical College, New York, and is practicing medicine and surgery in Iowa.

DAVIS, CHARLES C.; Farmer and Stock Raiser; born in Millbrook Township May 13, 1869; educated in the district schools of Peoria County and at Sterling, Illinois. His parents, Isaac W. and Amanda V. (Reed) Davis, were natives of West Virginia, and removed to this county with their parents. After marriage they located on the farm where Mrs. Davis lived with her son until May, 1900, when she removed to Galesburg. Mr. Davis died May 17, 1876. Charles C. Davis began life by working on his father's farm. At the age of eleven years the responsibility of the entire homestead property was placed upon him. He managed economically, conducting general farming and stock-raising. In 1880-90 he took a course in a business college at Sterling. At twenty-one years of age he bought and shipped stock, and three years later began dealing in grain and produce, taking charge of the elevators at Williamsfield, Laura and Monica, and later had charge of the elevator at Dahinda, January 1, 1900, he established the business of the Davis Lumber Company at Laura. His success in all these enterprises is a sufficient endorsement of his ability and integrity. Mr. Davis married Mabel Needham in Brimfield October 24, 1894. Mrs. Davis died April 29, 1898. Mr. Davis is a Republican and has been School Director. He is a member of the Masonic Order, affiliating with Princeville Lodge, No. 360, A. F. & A. M.

JOHNSON, JAMES K.; Farmer and Stock Raiser; formerly of Laura, Millbrook Township; born in West Virginia October 17, 1853; educated in Ohio. His grandfathers were John Johnson and Jacob Keller. His parents were John M. and Elizabeth (Keller) Johnson, the former born in Maryland and the latter in Virginia. They were of old Virginia ancestry, members of whose families were farmers. James K. Johnson was four years old when his parents removed to Ohio, where his grandfather, Jacob Keller, gave his mother one hundred acres of timber land in Union County, which they cleared and put under cultivation. Young Johnson commenced work upon this land with axe and grub-hoe, remaining there until he was twenty-one years of age. He assisted his parents in clearing the land and making a comfortable home. He then started out for himself and came to Peoria County in 1875, locating in Millbrook Township, where he worked on a farm for one year. Having saved his earnings he rented a farm of his uncle, James M. Keller, an old and honored resident of the county. He continues to rent the land; was engaged in farming and stock raising, and for five years operated a corn-sheller. In 1899 he formed a partnership with Henry Brooks, the firm name being Brooks & Johnson, and they conduct a hardware and implement business in Laura. Mr. Johnson was married to Lauretta Emery in Princeville, March 16, 1892. Mrs. Johnson's parents, Henry and Lucy (Reed) Emery, were born in Illinois. In March, 1901, Mr. Johnson removed to Corwith, Iowa, which is now his home.

McMANUS, HENRY; Merchant; was born at Laura, Millbrook Township, January 14, 1863, and educated in the township schools. His parents, Bernard and Sarah (O'Neal) McManus, were born in Ireland. They came to the United States early in life and settled in Peoria, where they were married. Bernard McManus was a poor man and accented whatever employment promised a fair return for his labor. He purchased a farm in this township and became a prosperous farmer. They had a family of ten children, seven of whom are living. Mr. McManus died in 1892 and his wife February 17, 1897. He left a farm of two hundred and forty acres. Henry McManus started in life by working on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years of age. Having a desire to enter the mercantile business, he secured employment as a clerk in the store of J. E. Kidder, in Monica, where he remained three years. With the money he had saved and some assistance from his father, he went into business for himself at Laura, being the second merchant in that village. He married Agatha M. Ottern in Galesburg, October 8, 1895. Mrs. McManus was engaged in teaching for seven years before their marriage. They are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. McManus is a Democrat. He was appointed Postmaster at Laura in 1894, serving with satisfaction to the people four years. He is a popular and highly esteemed citizen.

SCOTT, CHARLES; Blacksmith and Wagon-maker; born in Yorkshire, England, July 11, 1843, where he was educated. His paternal grandfather, John Scott, his maternal great-grandparents, Philip and Catherine Evington, and his grandparents, Richard and Catherine Evington, were born in England. His parents, Charles and Annie (Evington) Scott, came from York. His great-grandfather was a wealthy fish merchant and removed from Barney Castle to Petersfield, where he owned and occupied a mansion. Richard Scott was a blacksmith and died August 5, 1873, in County Durham, England. Charles Scott began life serving an apprenticeship in blacksmithing and boilermaking at Renton Medus, in his native country, where he served fourteen years, and then went to London and engaged for a three years' sea voyage as boiler-smith. He afterwards resumed his occupation on land, engaging in the Armstrong shop at Sunderland. He next went to Newcastle and worked in Hawk's boiler and bridge shop, from which place he was sent to the Highlands of Scotland as manager of iron bridge-work there, and directed bridge building for two years, when he returned to Edinboro to continue the same business. He then took up contract work in blacksmithing at Spennymoor, England, and three years later came to America, landing in this country, June 1, 1880, and settling at Braceville, Illinois. Here he worked as night miner in the coal mines for three days, and then resumed his old trade as a blacksmith. His family followed him to the United States three months later and he met them in Chicago. They went to Jasper County, Iowa, where, a month later he took up locomotive engineering for the Jasper Coal Company, which he followed for five years. He then came to Edwards Station, Peoria County, and later located at Kickapoo, where he carried on his trade to which he added wagon-making. A year later he removed to Laura, Millbrook Township, where he has added to his other interests a steam feed-mill, and has established a successful business. His first wife was Elizabeth Stevenson, who died August 15, 1886. They had five children: Jane (deceased), Anthony, Charles W., Richard and John. In 1888 he married Mary Jane McCune, in Newton, Iowa. They have three children: Samuel, Oscar and Nettie. Mr. Scott is a member of the Episcopal Church. He is independent in politics.

SLOAN, ALBERT J.; Farmer; born in Millbrook Township, May 17, 1870; educated in the township schools. His paternal grandparents, James and Mary (Linden) Sloan, and his maternal grandparents, Henry and Jane (Englishby) Cluskey, were natives of Ireland. James, the father of Albert J., was born in Ireland, and Ann (Cluskey), the mother, in St. Louis, Missouri. He emigrated to the United States when eighteen years old, and settled at French Grove, Peoria County, where he worked on a farm for six years. He then bought a farm in Stark County, where he remained only a few years, when he removed to Peoria County and purchased a farm in Millbrook Township. In November, 1894, he retired, and with his wife removed to Peoria. Albert J. Sloan worked for his father until 1894, when he assumed the active management of the farm. He married Ella Ryan in Brimfield, December 25, 1894. They have two children: Maria G. and Fred J. Mrs. Sloan's father was John Ryan, a native of New York. Her mother, Mary (Carroll), was born in Millbrook Township. Her grandparents, Thomas and Ellen (McManus) Carroll, were natives of Ireland. Mr. Sloan is a popular citizen, a Democrat in politics and holds the office of Tax Collector.

SLYGH, HENRY S.: Farmer; born in Knox County, Illinois, October 16, 1840; educated in Peoria County. His paternal grandfather, George, and his father, John D., were born in Ireland. His mother was Mara E. Potts, a native of Norfolk, Virginia. George Slygh came to America when eleven years old, and settled in Virginia, where he was married. He was a carpenter and upholsterer; he came to Tazewell County, Illinois, in 1835 and remained two years, when he removed to Knox County. He next went to St. Louis, where he worked at his trade for seven years, and then returned to Knox County to engage in farming. In 1853 he came to Rochester, Peoria County, and took charge of a hotel which he managed for five years, and soon retired from active business life. He held the office of Justice of the Peace for thirty-five years, missing but one term. He also held the office of Assessor for several years. He died February 24, 1882, and his wife in 1875. Henry S. Slygh worked on his father's farm until 1861, when he enlisted in Company H, Fifty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until discharged in 1865. He was in the following battles: Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Siege of Corinth, Town Creek (Alabama), Rome and Kingston, Altoona Pass, Resaca, Atlanta, Savannah, Bentonville, and in Sherman's "March to the sea." In 1862 he had a severe attack of typhoid fever, but soon recovered and resumed his place at the front. He was promoted to Sergeant and carried the colors the last year of the war. He took part in the grand review in Washington. When mustered out in Chicago he returned home and began farming. Mr. Slygh was elected Justice of the Peace in March, 1882, to fill a vacancy, and held the office without interruption for over eleven years; he was again elected in 1897. For nineteen years he has been Assessor in Millbrook Township; is also a member of the School Board. He married Evelyn Winchester September 19, 1878. They had two children, Edna and one who died in infancy. Mrs. Slygh's father was William Winchester. Mr. Slygh is a Democrat.

WHITE, RUSSELL M.: Farmer and Stock-raiser; Elmore, Millbrook Township, where he was born March 4, 1861; educated at Hawthorne, Illinois. His father, John White, was born in Frederick County, Maryland. His mother, Eliza (Brigg) White, was born in Ohio. They came to Illinois in 1836 and settled on a farm near Elmore. Russell M. White began farming for his father, and at the age of twenty-two years, rented a farm which he worked for three years, afterwards purchasing the tract of land his father had previously owned. He has continued farming and stockraising ever since, and has been very successful, having added eighty acres to the one hundred and forty which he originally held. He married Lucy Sweat, in Toulon, Stark County, in October, 1886. They have had two children: Elmer L. and Roy. Mrs. White's parents were Henry and Sarah Summerson, natives of Illinois. Mr. White is a Democrat, and has held the office of School Director. He is an enterprising citizen and has had a useful and successful business career.

CHAPTER XIII.

PRINCEVILLE TOWNSHIP.

BY EDWARD AUTEN AND PETER AUTEN, 2D.

(The writers acknowledge obligations to "Atlas Map of Peoria County: A. T. Andreas, Chicago, 1873," and to "History of Peoria County: Johnson & Co., Chicago, 1880," but much more to friends who have kindly given the benefit of their recollections. Wherever in the following pages certain individuals are named, they may or may not be the only ones or the most important ones who might have been named. They are such as have come to memory or have been brought to notice. The writers request additions, corrections and suggestions, which they will carefully preserve for possible future use.)

Seeking a free and open country, Daniel Prince came from Indiana, and, in 1822, was the first white man to live among the Indians in what, three years later, was the northern part of Peoria County. In a few years other white men, some of them friends or employes of Mr. Prince, gathered around the attractive timber, and the settlement became known as Prince's Grove. Mr. Prince, as he drove into Peoria market in the winter of 1832-33, is thus described by Mr. John Z. Slane, then a small boy living in Peoria: "The men shouted that Prince was coming, and he was a nabob. Clad in a home-spun and home-wove blue-jeans overcoat reaching to his ankles, with an old felt hat, a comforter over his hat, brought down over ears and neck and tied in front, with long, large whiskers, and chewing tobacco, Prince came up with his three-yoke team of oxen. His load was hogs, dressed. Mounting his wagon he slung off, first the hay for the cattle, then quilt after quilt, and then hurried the unloading of the meat. After feeding his oxen in the rail-fence enclosure, and perhaps eating his own lunch there, and perhaps lying on the floor at the Indian store over night, Mr. Prince returned to his home." Mr. Prince is described as a modest man, tall, but stooping, with brown curly hair, red cheeks, and light eyes, probably blue. At home he was more easy-going than when seen in the Peoria market. He was a farmer on a large scale, furnishing employment to all who needed it, and very generous. Different men, who were then boys, tell of his butchering a steer or a hog and giving a quarter here and a quarter there. If any neighbor needed something to eat and had nothing, Mr. Prince furnished it; payment was to be made whenever that neighbor found it convenient, and if it was never made, Mr. Prince did not complain. It is needless to say that it was for Daniel Prince that Princeville Township and Princeville Village were later named. His brother, Myron Prince, was an early settler a few miles to the northwest, later keeping a hotel in Princeville, and Myron Prince's son, George W. Prince, is now Congressman from the Galesburg District.

Mr. Prince's log cabin was on Section 24, a few rods west of Sylvester and Elizabeth Slane's present residence (1902). This was "on the edge of the timber," and the next three cabins, remembered at this time, were "along the hollow" to the north of Prince's. One was very near Higbee's present coal-shaft, on Mrs. Jacob Fast's land, one double cabin was at a fork in the ravine a few rods south, and another a few rods east of that. All these cabins—and, in fact, the entire west half of Section 24—belonged to Mr. Prince. The cabin near Higbee's coal-shaft was occupied by Dr. Oscar Fitzalen Mott, of the old "Thomsonian" school. The double cabin had an ox-mill in one end of it for grinding corn.

This was the country in the early day, up to about 1835 or 1836. The Indians had left immediately after the Black Hawk War of 1832. The prairies grew prairie grass, rosin-weed, "red-root," and "shoe-string." Near the timber and in the timber were often patches of hazel brush, sumach, black-berry bushes and goose-berry bushes. Now and then eight or ten, or a dozen deer could be seen in the edge of the hills. Along Spoon River, tradition says, there were droves of deer with sometimes as many as 150 head together. There were also wild cats "as large as lynxes," and plenty of wolves, both the coyotes or prairie wolves and the gray timber wolves. The timber was of large growth, and had very few small trees. Daniel Prince appreciated the timber, and took means to preserve it. He plowed two sets of furrows and burned the grass between them around both the "North Grove" and "South Grove" to protect from prairie fires.

By 1839 the country was too thickly settled to suit Mr. Prince. His cattle, roaming around, found neighbors' hay stacks to hook. The neighbors, in turn, "sicked the dogs" on Prince's cattle, and he would have no more of it. He moved in that year, 1839, (or 1840) to Missouri, where the country was free.

Sometime prior to 1837, Mr. William C. Stevens was riding from his home at the forks of the Kickapoo in Rosefield Township, on horseback toward Rock Island, and admired the present site of Princeville. It was level and high rolling ground, between the two groves. Later he purchased the southeast quarter of Section 13. This, joined on the north the northeast quarter of Section 24, which was owned by Benjamin Clark and Jesse M. McCutchen, land speculators. Mr. Stevens and Clark & McCutchen on June 22, 1837, acknowledged and filed for record the plat of original Princeville. The streets received their names in the following manner: North and South Streets, from their location on the plat; Main, because Mr. Stevens thought it would be the principal street, as is evidenced by his choosing it to build on; Spring, from the spring near its east end; Walnut, from the fine trees below its south terminus; French Street, or Stephen French, toward whose farm this street led; Clark, for Mr. Clark of Clark & McCutchen, as he wanted each of the three partners to have a street named for himself. Mr. McCutchen and Mr. Stevens, however, did not want their names to appear as streets; so Mr. McCutchen named his street Canton, in honor of the town where he lived. Mr. Stevens named High and Tremont Streets to commemorate a pleasant stay with a cousin of his, Simeon Short by name, whose residence, the finest in the place, occupied the corner of High and Tremont streets, at Thetford, Vermont. Sumner and Stanton Streets, in the later Stevens' addition, were named for the statesmen of whom Mr. Stevens was a great admirer.

The village grew slowly. John Z. Slane says (1902) that, when he came on January 13, 1841, the families in town numbered nine, as follows: His father, Benjamin Slane, William Coburn, Peter Auten, Samuel Alexander, George McMillen, Moses R. Sherman, Jonathan Nixon, Seth Fulton and William C. Stevens. Mr. Prince, Elisha Morrow, Lawrence McKown and John F. Garrison had just left. Stephen French lived northwest of the village. He was the first man to bring his family to the township, which was in 1828, and his son, Dimmick, was acknowledged to be the first white male child born in the county. Thomas Morrow, a settler since 1831, lived southeast of the village, and George I. McGinnis, a settler since 1835, northeast. The two last named, although living in Akron, belong in Princeville history.

Over the line in Akron Township, about fifteen or twenty rods southeast of the present Rock Island & Peoria Railway station, on the northwest corner of Section 19, was a log school house, very famous in its day. It accommodated as many as sixty scholars, children coming from all directions, as far as Spoon River to the northwest, and the center of Jubilee Township on the southwest. The first teacher here was Miss Esther Stoddard, and later ones were Miss Phoebe Stoddard, Mrs. Olive L. Cutter, Jane Hull, Theodore F. Hurd, Peter Auten, B. F. Hilliard, S. S. Cornwell, ——— Newell, Isaac Moss, and Daniel B. Allen. This cabin was also used as a "meeting house" for different church denominations, and as a polling place for all voters in "Prince's Grove Precinct." It was burned about 1849.

Democratic and Whig politics waxed warm in the National election of 1840, and one old settler tells of the string of men going all day from the school house to Seth Fulton's tavern. The "bell-wether" of one party carried a jug of whiskey in plain sight, leading the men on with his shouts, and voting them in a body. William P. Blanchard and Stephen French had been elected the first Justices of the Peace in 1838, and they, with the help of the three County Commissioners, furnished the government for the precinct.

Princeville Township was organized in 1850, the voting population then numbering 100. The first officials were: Supervisor, Leonard B. Cornwell; Town Clerk, Jonathan Nixon; Assessor, Seth Fulton; Collector, William C. Stevens; Justices of the Peace, William C. Stevens and Solomon S. Cornwell; Constables, John Fulton and John E. Seery; Commissioners of Highways, Wm. P. Blanchard, Wm. P. Smith and Ira Moody; Overseer of the Poor, Solomon Bliss. Benjamin Slane, who lived over the line in Akron, was elected the first Supervisor of that township in the same year.

The township was now rapidly filling up. "Congress land" on the prairie was unlimited at $1.25 per acre. Military claims or "patent lands" had been allotted in the timber. Land with timber near Princeville Village sold around 1840 for $200 up to $800 for a quarter section. The open prairie was, by 1850-55, selling for $400 to $800 per quarter. The greater rise in values did not come until after the Civil War and the days of tiling. The early "blind ditches," made with a "mole" drain machine, were not satisfactory. The mole was a wedge-shaped iron, fastened to the bottom end of a flat and sharp bar of steel, which was fastened to a frame. This implement was drawn through the ground by several yoke of oxen or a capstan. Fences, earliest, were of the worm-rail variety, then of post and rail; on the prairie, later, a machine was used to cut and pile rows of sod, making ditches alongside. Above the sod was sometimes placed a low fence, "staked and ridged," or stakes were driven in the sod and boards or wire attached. The sod fence was not a marked success, and smooth wire was also a failure. After pine lumber came within easy reach, fences were very largely, especially away from the timber, built of posts and boards. Before many years the osage orange tree was introduced as a fence; then came barbed wire, and very recently woven wire. As the prairie was fenced, the town records show a gradual squaring of the old Rock Island and Peoria State Road, and other angling roads, to north and south and east and west roads, mostly on section lines. It was when the Illinois and Michigan canal was opened, allowing lumber to come from Chicago via LaSalle and the Illinois River, that building began on the open prairie.

In the fall of 1847 the school was removed from the old log cabin in Akron to the new stone school house, which still stands, with a frame part added to it, on lot 5, block 13, on Canton Street. This was built by public donations of stone, lime, timber, labor and money, the only way in which it could be afforded, and was then given and owned as a public school house. B. F. Slane taught the first winter here (1847-48) and John M. Henry the next. Women teachers were hired for the summer months. This house was used until the completion, in 1873 or 1874, of the present brick school house. The records show three school districts in the township in 1847, which were gradually increased in number by subdivision, until the present number, nine, was attained in 1871.

Before the days of "district schools" supported by public funds, were four or five "subscription schools," for which each family "signed money." The log school house on Section 19, Akron Township, was run on this plan at first. Another was located in the William P. Blanchard neighborhood on Section 22; another on the northwest quarter of Section 16; one on Section 5; and one on section 8. All of these schools, except the one in Princeville village, were held in cabins built for dwellings. One father paid for a year's schooling for his children, the total sum of nine dollars and thought this a large sum to pay. He had ten children. After a few years the cabin on Section 8 was superseded by a frame school house, built from lumber sawed at Prince's saw-mill, and having nothing but the thin siding to keep out the cold. This was moved to the present site of the "Moody" or District No. 2 (new No. 94) School.

In this same northwest corner of the township, along the belt of timber bordering Spoon River, settlements had been made almost as early as at Prince's Grove. Hugh White, Christian Miller, Sr., and his sons, Christian, Henry, Dan, James and John, Ira Moody and Robert Colwell were among the earliest residents. James Morrow went from Prince's Grove to Spoon River in 1832, but the Indians, during the Black Hawk War, molested the settlers there, and he returned to Prince's Grove. The foregoing are mentioned by Mrs. Jane Smith (widow of John Smith), as residents when she came with her parents, Walter and Rachel Payne, in 1842, to Section 7. Between them and Princeville, a distance of six miles, the only house on the prairie was that of John Miller on Section 16. On a line farther south were the houses of B. S. Scott, Oliver Moody, John Dukes, Boling Hare and James Debord. Coal was not yet known to be here, and some did not know what it was when found a few years later. Timber was held high by those who owned it and was frequently stolen. Cutting from land of non-residents, and from Government lands, was common. Fifty cents was charged for a small load of wood on the ground, and one dollar for a walnut which would split into four posts for the corners of a small shed.

On the northern side of "White Oak," the timber which extends into Princeville from Jubilee Township and the region of the Kickapoo, and on the prairie adjoining in the central and southwestern parts of the township, the early settlers were Solomon S. Cornwell, Wm. P. Blanchard, John McKune, Wm. Parnell, Joseph Mendel, John Hill; and, a little later, Wm. Lynch, Wm. Cummins, John Nelson and Lawrence Seery, Reuben Deal, Roger Cook and John O'Brien.

"West Princeville" may be said to have started with the building of the O'Brien wagon and blacksmith shops, in 1856 or '57. They were located on the south side of the road between Sections 19 and 30, about one-fourth mile east of the Millbrook line. Here John O'Brien and his sons, James, Joseph and "Billy," manufactured wagons, cultivators and harrows. Billy O'Brien invented and got a patent on a three-winged iron harrow, which they made in large quantities and shipped far and wide, the famous "O'Brien harrow." The cultivators were without wheels and their manufacture was soon discontinued on account of the appearance of wheeled cultivators. The O'Briens sold out to Jesse Carey and moved to Kewanee, where they continued to make the O'Brien wagons and harrows on a much more extensive scale. William P. Hawver kept, in one building, a grocery and shop for making and repairing boots and shoes. He was succeeded by McElhose, who conducted the grocery only. Robert Lovett, father of our present County Judge, was a blacksmith at West Princeville.

In 1858 the Mt. Zion Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in this same neighborhood, meeting in the Nelson School House, now District No. 8 (new No. 100). In 1867 this society built a church on the southwest corner of Section 20, a little east of West Princeville. This was a frame building, 32x45 feet, costing about $2,200. The starting of Cornwell, soon called Monica, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, was the quitting of West Princeville. Nearly all of the buildings, the church included, were moved to the new town. But we must go back to the '50s again to tell of the old "oil works," and then describe the days of the war.

The oil factory was located on the southwest quarter of Section 27, the farm now owned by Joseph E. Hill, and the "oil company" owned, in addition, the square 40-acre tract cornering with this land on the northeast. The refinery was a large stone building in the hollow, with six or eight retorts close by. The company had a house called the hotel, an office and store combined, and many small buildings. Out of the 18-inch vein of cannel coal they made a "coal oil" similar to kerosene, and sometimes had as many as 30 or 40 workmen. The 18 to 24 inches of bituminous coal on top of the cannel, was of poor quality and brought little or no return. The oil, barreled and hauled to Chillicothe, although sold at $1.00 or $1.10 per gallon, did not pay for the cost of production, and the discovery of oil fields in Pennsylvania killed the industry at once. This was about the year 1859. The buildings were gradually torn down or removed.

In the northeast part of the township early names were the following: Wm. P. Smith, Moses and Carlos Alford, George Andrews, Henry Adams, Ezra Adams, Frederick Griswold, Joseph Nickerson, James Jackson, Dr. Harlan, John M. Henry and Godfrey Fritz. In the southeast part of the township were the Boutons, Wears, Slanes, Wilsons, Woodbury, Little, Harrisons and Mansfield.

William C. Stevens, the founder of Princeville Village, and Dr. Charles Cutter were, perhaps, the strongest Free Soilers in the township. They voted for Van Buren, the first Free Soil candidate for President in 1848, and often stood ill treatment for their principles. Their fences were burned, their trees girdled, their houses egged, and their persons sometimes threatened. Ichabod Codding was an Abolition evangelist. When objection was made to his speaking any more in the Presbyterian Church, Mr. Stevens said, "Thank God, I have a place of my own where he may speak," and after that the speeches were in Mr. Stevens' yard. Many runaway slaves were harbored by Mr. Stevens and Dr. Cutter and sped on toward freedom. Dr. Cutter at one time had as many as six black men hidden in the cellar of his house, and, on a certain occasion, one such refugee was scarcely half an hour away, under a wagon load of fodder, when his pursuers fiercely demanded him of Mrs. Cutter, only to be told there was "no such man in the house."

When the war broke out, the "Lucky Thirteen," who all came back, went from Princeville and joined the "Peoria Battery," Battery A of the Second Illinois Artillery. In the fall of 1861 two Princeville men joined Col. Ingersoll's regiment, the Eleventh Cavalry. These two men, Stephen A. Andrews and John Sheelor, immediately came back from Peoria on a furlough and, in two weeks, took down twelve more men with them.

The distinctively Princeville company was started in August, 1862. On that date Congressman Ebon Clark Ingersoll (brother to Bob) came out from Peoria to hold a "war meeting." Julius S. Starr accompanied him in the hope of getting recruits for a Peoria company, and recruit hunters were present also from Chillicothe and other places. The meeting was held in the old Methodist Episcopal Church, then on the corner southwest of the public square. The crowd was so large that the windows were taken out to enable men to hear on the outside. After the speaking the crowd gathered on the public square, when Clark Ingersoll got on a wagon and proposed a Princeville company. John McGinnis began fifeing, indicating that he was going, and led a march around the "liberty pole." Others fell in, a few at a time, until there were fifty men marching around and around the "liberty pole." Then they paraded to Dr. Charles's office, got out a table in the center of the room, and signed the muster roll. Within forty-eight hours the roll was increased to 96 men. This was Company

K of the Eighty-sixth Regiment, Illinois Infantry. John F. French was elected Captain, James B. Peet, First Lieutenant, and H. F. Irwin, Second Lieutenant. The company was soon ordered into camp at the Peoria Fair Grounds and saw, in all, twenty-one engagements, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, and Kenesaw Mountain being among the number. The company was in "Sherman's March to the Sea." Somewhere near one half of the company still survive (1902), and those residing at Princeville are organized, with their comrades, in J. F. French Post, No. 153, G. A. R. On Decoration Day, 1900, John McGinnis dedicated in Princeville Cemetery, a monument "In Memory of all Soldiers and Sailors who, on Land or Sea, periled Life for Liberty and Law—1861-65." Princeville always honors her soldiers, and Decoration Day sees the gathering of several townships in memory of the dead and in honor of the living.

An outgrowth of civil war conditions was the organization, in August, 1863, of the Thief Detective and Mutual Aid Association. The demand for horses and resultant high prices caused horse-stealing to flourish to an unpleasant extent, and this society was organized to stop the stealing around Princeville, and to catch the thieves. It accomplished its purpose well at the time, and has continued a strong society to the present. Wm. P. Smith, Solomon Bliss, Charles Beach, Vaughn Williams and S. S. Slane were the originators of the society. Wm. P. Smith was the first captain, followed by H. F. Irwin, John G. Corbet, Solomon Bliss, J. D. Hammer and S. S. Slane, who is now serving his sixteenth year in that capacity.

Before railroads were built, Princeville was one of the stopping places on the stage routes running from Peoria and Chillicothe, through Southampton to Princeville and to the West and Northwest. The stage, which carried the mail as well as passengers, came at first once a week, then twice, and later three times a week, stopping at the Bliss-McMillen Hotel.

The public square, now covered with growing trees and familiarly called the Park, was given to the village by its founder, Mr. Stevens. In 1874 an attempt was made by the officials to mar the square by locating on it the village hall and, as was reputed, a calaboose. Injunction proceedings were started by Peter Auten, in company with Mr. Stevens and other citizens, to block the intended purpose, and, on the testimony of the donor that he had given the square to be an open space, park or square, "for light and air, and to be for the beauty of the village and the health of its inhabitants," a perpetual injunction was granted.

Mr. Stevens was also generous with his land for church and school sites. He gave the lot for the stone school house so long as used for a school site, and the right of reversion he gave up on condition that the new brick school house, then building, should have a front on the north, architecturally equal to the front as planned for the south of the building. He wanted the front on the north side, but the directors insisted on the south front. Main Street, he said, would have no front, and the other and only front would look out on "Mosquito Swale" and "Carrion Hollow;" his reference was to a swampy place suitable for breeding mosquitoes, and a hollow where the dead horses of the neighborhood had formerly been deposited—each of which was south of and not far distant from the new school site.

Princeville's markets in the early day had been Peoria, Lacon and Chillicothe. The price of hogs in the Peoria market varied a great deal; sometimes the buyers would say, "Seventy-five cents for a hog, big or little—tumble them off." Ox teams sometimes drove to Chicago with wheat, bringing back lumber, salt and clothing. The windows, doors and casings for Dr. Charles Cutter's house were thus carted from Chicago, and also the shingles for the first Presbyterian Church. Other lumber was obtained at saw-mills on Spoon River and Kickapoo Creek. Grist-mills familiar to all old settlers were Cox's Mill and the Rochester Mill on Spoon River, the Spring Valley Mill, Evans's Mill in Radnor Township and Miles's Mill at Southport, Elmwood Township.

Mills closer to Princeville were "Jimmie" Jackson's "whip-saw" mill, Erastus and Thompson Peet's saw-mill, James Harrison's saw and grist-mill, and Hawn's mill, all in Akron Township, and Hawn's mill within the village limits. Hitchcock, Voorhees & Seed erected a large grist-mill in 1867 or '68, in the northwest corner of Section 19, Akron Township, which was operated later by Hitchcock & Voorhees, and by Daniel Hitchcock alone. It burned about 1884. John Bowman operated a saw-mill for several years in the triangular piece of ground east of the railroad, north of Block One.

The first railroad assured Princeville Township was the Peoria & Rock Island, now called the Rock Island & Peoria. It was built between 1868 and 1870, the township giving it $50,000 in bonds. The Buda Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, projected a little later, was, however, completed first, and it received no bonus from the township. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad crossed the township from east to west in 1887, making a junction with the Rock Island & Peoria at Princeville, and with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy at Monica.

Monica was platted first under the name of Cornwell, in honor of Solomon S. Cornwell. The name was soon after changed to Monica. It is located on Section 21, on the divide between Spoon River and Kickapoo Creek, giving it a good drainage. The "Q" Road had been built two years before this station was given. One theory is that the company were angry because no bonds had been voted them, and they gave the township no depot until the competition of the Peoria & Rock Island forced them to it. The postmasters in succession have been W. W. Hurd, L. L. Campbell, P. R. Ford, Etta Lincoln, Jane Ford and G. R. Campbell, the present incumbent. The first general store was built and started by Andrew D. Rogers, on the southwest corner of block 9. This building was burned in 1890, and the same corner burned again in 1896. The third building is the present large store of Mrs. Wilts. In 1897 one of the three grain elevators burned. But one strange thing in the history of Monica is that no dwelling detached from stores, has ever been burned. The boarding house at the oil factory was moved to Monica and used as a hotel, and still stands, remodeled, on the northeast corner of block 14, the residence of Lemuel Auten. The next hotel was P. R. Ford's, which burned in 1884. The next was R. M. Todd's, built in 1888, now managed by G. A. Keith as "The Empire." W. P. Hawver moved from West Princeville when Monica was only surveyed in the oats field, and has been a merchant there ever since.

The Mt. Zion Methodist Episcopal Church building was moved from West Princeville in 1877, and enlarged and repaired at a cost of about $1,300. The church was a part of the Princeville M. E. charge prior to 1894. In September, 1894, it was organized and, with Laura (of Millbrook Township), became the Monica charge. Rev. Thos. J. Wood was the first pastor, followed in succession by Revs. P. S. Garretson, 1895; O. M. Dunlevy, 1896; H. C. Birch, 1898; H. C. Gibson, 1900; James G. Blair, 1901. The Monica Blue Ribbon Club, in the '70s, was a very large and enthusiastic Temperance Society. Monica's population now is about 225, with the following men in business, besides those already mentioned: W. W. Day, grain and lumber; J. D. Rathbun and J. F. Kidder, general merchandise; Alice Wilts, general merchandise and hardware; Auten & Auten, bankers (Lemuel Auten in charge); William Saunders, restaurant; D. W. Gross and W. P. Jones, physicians; George Conover, blacksmith; Walter Byrnes, barber; Wm. George, harness; R. M. Todd, livery; J. Duffy, agent Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad; James Curren, agent, Santa Fe R. R.; A. J. Hayes and Miss Jennie Burns, principal and assistant, Monica schools.

"White's Grove," to the west and north of Monica (named from Hugh White), may be said to have settled rapidly after the coming of Esq. Joseph Armstrong in 1856. The White's Grove Baptist Church was organized December 9, 1871, with fourteen members. The pastors have been in succession: A. D. Bump, 1872; J. M. Stickney, 1873; E. M. Armstrong, 1876; J. M. Bruce, 1882; E. M. Armstrong, 1883-85; A. R. Morgan, 1886-90; T. Phillips, 1891; S. Gray, 1894-98; E. Quick, 1901. Jackson Leaverton has been Superintendent of the Sunday-school. The church now numbers 22 members.

The early Princeville community seems to have been more orderly and law-abiding than the average frontier town. The "Atlas Map of Peoria County" says of Princeville Township: "It is settled mostly by high-toned, moral and religious people, who came from the Eastern and Southern States. Of the nineteen townships in Peoria County, its people rank first in education, religion and public spirit." It is not known now who may have been the author of this sketch, but his remarks were not far out of the way, even including Peoria Township among the nineteen.

Taking the Civil War as a dividing line between early and present Princeville history, no question of greater import—even to Princeville's welfare to-day—could be raised, than the personal character for godliness, integrity and learning of the quiet, determined teachers. They, from time to time, settled and taught, labored and made homes, and left their impress on the young in this now thriving town. Among these teachers there are still remembered the names of Andrews, Aldrich, Allen, Auten, Breese (the first Presbyterian pastor), Burnham, Carlisle, Clussman, Cooper, Cunningham (pastor and teacher), Cutter, Cutler, Egbert, Foster, Farwell, Goodale, Hinman, Kimball, Means, Munson, Noyes, Page, Julia Rogers, Ann Rogers, Stanley, Stone, White, Wright, and others, no doubt as significant but not now recurring to memory. Private schools were conducted at different times by Mrs. Hannah Breese, first in a little building on lot 6 or 7 block 9—conceded to be the first frame building in Princeville, and near the west end of the large Hitchcock building—and later, in her home, now the residence property owned by Mrs. Willard Bennett, on the Princeville-Akron township line about 80 rods north of Canton Street; by Mrs. Lydia Auten at her home; by Miss Julia Rogers in the little house occupied by Guy Bouton on North Street, north of lot 3, block 1; by Mrs. Ann Rogers at the home of her brother-in-law, Peter Auten; by Miss Lizzie Farwell, at the home of Wm. C. Stevens; and perhaps by others. Mr. Wm. C. Stevens, already mentioned as the founder of Princeville Village, was a gentleman of education, culture and public spirit, and was prominent in all educational and public matters.

It was in the fall of 1856 that the demand for higher education encouraged Mr. Milton S. Kimball to start a school in the Presbyterian church, which later developed into the first Princeville Academy. A two-story frame building was erected on the south side of Main Street on lots 3 and 4, block 14, just east of the present public school square. Rev. Jared M. Stone and Rev. William Cunningham were other successful principals. The academy flourished with a large attendance, drawn from wide territory. The war, however, virtually killed the school. The building was sold and moved to Canton Street for store purposes, it being the building long occupied by E. C. Fuller, now by J. L. Searl's grocery, located on the west side of lot 7, block 12.

A number of the pupils of this old academy, with other citizens, some of whom had gone East to college, in later life desired a similar academy for their children. As a result, another Princeville Academy was started in 1887, being conducted until 1900 by changing Boards of Management, who bore the responsibility and constant expense of the school. Sessions were held the first year in the old Seventh Day Adventist church; the next two years in the new chapel rooms of the Presbyterian church, and from 1890 on, in the Second M. E. church building, purchased by Edward Auten for the purpose. A still greater number of young people from the later academy were fitted for college study. The principals of the later academy were, in succession, James Stevens, 1887; C. F. Brusie, '88; B. M. Southgate, '90; Edwin B. Cushing, '91; H. W. Ecklëy, '93; T. H. Rhodes, '94; Ernest W. Cushing, '96; Royal B. Cushing, '97; J. E. Armstrong, '99-1900.

The Princeville public schools have grown and improved. A high school course is offered, including Latin and twelfth grade work, under the principalship of William M. Beale. The four large assembly rooms of the brick building are taxed by the ten upper grades, and the primary grades occupy Edward Auten's academy building, under the able instruction of Miss M. E. Edwards. Miss Mina Edwards, Miss Etta Powell and Mr. Harry O'Brien are the teachers of the intermediate and grammar grades. The Board of Directors is as follows: H. J. Cheesman, President; E. D. Minkler, Secretary; and David Kinnah.

The Presbyterian Church, organized August 16, 1834, as Prince's Grove church, was the first to have a house of worship. The log school house became too small for the meetings, and a frame structure was built in 1844 in the southeast corner of block 12. This was built at a great sacrifice on the part of Mr. Stevens, Thomas Morrow, Dr. Cutter, Erastus Peet and others. Thomas Morrow, E. Peet and William Clussman each hauled a load of the lumber from Chicago. It was a great day when the church building was "raised." The entire community assembled, the men and boys to aid in the raising, and the women and girls to provide the refreshments. This house was used by the church society until September 6, 1866, when the main part of the present church was dedicated. The chapel rooms were added in 1888 and $1,000, bequeathed by Miss Mary C. Clussman, was expended for installing new seats, furnaces and other repairs in 1899. The ministers in succession have been: Calvin W. Babbitt, 1835-38; George G. Sill, 1838; Robert F. Breese (first pastor) 1843-51; Robert Cameron, 1851-57; Geo. Cairns, 1857-58; Jared M. Stone, 1858-64; Wm. Cunningham, 1864-71; Arthur Rose, 1871-77; Samuel R. Belville, 1877-86; Charles M. Taylor, 1887-95; D. A. K. Preston, 1896-97; Charles T. Phillips, 1897—The Sunday-school Superintendent at present is C. J. Cheesman.

Rt. Rev. Philander Chase, Episcopal Bishop of Illinois, preached occasionally in the stone school house. A Congregational organization existed for a short time with the Rev. B. F. Worrell as pastor, sometime in the '50s.

The Christian Church society flourished in the '50s, with a building on Canton Street (lots 5 and 6, block 14, just east of the present public school square), the building later being removed and used as the old village hall. The membership of this church was largely merged, early in the '60s, into the Seventh Day Adventist Church, which was starting new. The latter society purchased the first M. E. church building in 1866 and used it until about 1888. Since then the society has most of the time met at the home of Elder L. D. Santee. Familiar names in this church were the Blanchards, Blisses, Vancils, Merritts and others.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has had services in Princeville almost from the beginning of the settlement. The "circuit riders" preached first in Aunt Jane Morrow's fine log cabin (a palace among log houses), on the northwest quarter of Section 30, Akron Township; then in the old log school house, and later in the stone school house. They came once a month and later twice a month, as their circuits were shortened. The first M. E. church building was begun in 1853 and finished in 1854, on lots 1 and 2, block 16, the building later sold to the Seventh Day Adventist Church, and now a barn on the south side of South Street, south of lot 5, block 24. The next church was built about 1867, on lots 7 and 8, block 24, (Edward Auten's Academy building) and was used until the erection of the present edifice, corner of South and Clark Streets, in 1889. The early preachers up to 1856, some of them circuit riders, were, Revs. Pitner, Whitman, Cummins, Hill, Beggs, Chandler, Luccock, Royal (Sr.), Royal (Jr.), Stogdell, Jesse Craig, Gregg, Grundy, Gaddis, Reack, Morse, Appelby, Dodge, Giddings, Rhodes and Mills. The list, from 1856 on, is as follows, the date after each man's name being that of his coming: Revs. J. S. Millsap, '56; E. Keller, '59; W. J. Beck, '60; G. W. Brown, '62; S. B. Smith, '64; S. Cavet, '66; G. W. Havermale, '68; M. Spurlock, '69; E. Wasmuth, '70; J. Collins, '73; W. B. Carithers, '74; W. D. H. Young, '77; S. Brink, '78; I. S. Millsap, '81; M. V. B. White, '82; H. M. Laney, '83; F. W. Merrell, '85; Alex. Smith, '88; R. B. Seaman, '93; J. D. Smith, '96; J. E. Conner, '97; John Rogers, '99; R. L. Vivian, 1901.

Catholicity came to Princeville with the early Irish and German settlers. At that time there was no Catholic church nearer than Kickapoo or Peoria, to which places they were accustomed to drive. While the present Peoria Diocese was part of the Archdiocese of Chicago, the Catholic people of Princeville Township were ministered to by priests from Peoria City. On September 7, 1867, the Rev. J. Murphy was appointed first Rector of the Princeville Parish, and his successors have been in turn, Father Albrecht, Rev. Chas. Wenserski, Rev. Father Moore, Very Rev. J. Canon Moynihan, Rev. H. Sreiber (1881), Rev. P. A. McGair (1884), Rev. C. A. Hausser (1891), Rev. C. P. O'Neill (1901) to the present time. It was in Father Murphy's time that the old Presbyterian church was purchased and made into a Catholic house of worship. Father Albrecht built the present rectory, and, during Father McGair's time, was erected the present beautiful brick church for "St. Mary's of the Woods."

The first paper published in Princeville was the "Princeville Weekly Citizen," by G. T. Gillman, which started in the summer of 1868 and lasted six months. The next was the "Princeville Times," by C. A. Pratt, established in July, 1874, and run four months. The next was the "Princeville Independent," the beginning of the present "Princeville Telephone." Editors in succession have been J. E. Knapp, March 10, 1877; J. G. Corbet, September 29, 1877; J. G. Corbet and H. E. Charles, October 13, 1877; J. G. Corbet and P. C. Hull, October 18, 1878; J. E. Charles and P. C. Hull (P. C. Hull, Editor), October 3, 1879; J. S. Barnum, B. J. Beardsley, Beardsley Bros. (B. J. and G. L.) and the present owners, Addison Dart, Harry D. Fast and Keith C. Andrews. The "Princeville Republican" was started February 2, 1898, by George I. McGinnis, and has continued a prosperous weekly under his direction to the present time. The "Princeville Academy Sol" ran as a school monthly from 1893 to 1900.

After the platting of original Princeville in 1837, additions were made and subdivisions surveyed adjoining, as occasion required. The original village is five blocks square, with the park in the center. W. C. Stevens' subdivision on the south and west was platted in 1864 (plat filed in 1869); lot 27 of this subdivision was re-subdivided into several smaller lots in 1877, and some of them, in turn, were included in 1887 in McGinnis & Russell's addition. Lots 15 and 16 of the first subdivision were platted in 1897 into Hoag & Ward's addition. On the east of the village, in Akron, Day & Hitchcock's addition was laid off in 1869. This was at the time of building the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad, and the lots were disposed of at a great auction. People thought that Princeville, having a railroad, was destined to be a city, and paid prices far in advance of values thirty-three years later, in 1902. The promoters of the addition reserved some of the best lots that they might themselves "get the benefit of the rise," but they missed it in not selling all out at first. W. C. Stevens' addition on the west (including the school house square) was platted in 1871, and part of it vacated in 1877.

"Timber Subdivisions" of two and one-half and five-acre lots, were made by Stephen French on the northwest quarter of Section 13 in 1854 and 1857; by heirs of Thomas Morrow on the southeast quarter of Section 12 in 1869; and by William Morrow on Section 19, Akron Township, in 1876. The lots in all of these subdivisions were disposed of at public auctions. Farmers found it more necessary then to have timber to use than they do now in the days of lumber yards and wire fences.

The first burying ground in Prince's Grove was on Section 25, near its north line, and about sixty-four to seventy-one rods west of the northeast corner of the section, where a few sunken graves may still be distinguished. The number of people buried here is variously estimated at from ten to twenty-five. In the White's Grove district a burying ground was located on the northwest quarter of Section 8, about fourteen rods from the north line (twelve rods from the road) and thirty-five rods west of the east line of said quarter section. Thirteen graves may now be distinguished. The present cemetery in the northwest part of the incorporated village was first used in 1834, the first burial being that of a daughter of George I. McGinnis, named Temperance, who died September 14th of that year. For many years graves were placed at random, when, in 1864, the survey into lots, paths and driveways was made. The original cemetery has been enlarged by three or four successive additions. The Catholic cemetery on Section 7, Akron, was laid out in 1875.

Early stone quarries were those of B. F. and J. Z. Slane, on the southeast quarter of Section 24; of Austin and T. P. Bouton, on Section 25, and the smaller one of Thomas Morrow on Section 12. The Slane brothers quarried both sandstone and limestone, burning the latter into lime. This was a grey lime, suitable for everything but a white finish. Limestone was also used in Princeville from the quarry of James Byrnes in White Oak, Jubilee Township.

During the first few years of the settling of the township, coal was not known to be here, and when it was first dug up or seen lying on top of the ground, its utility was not known. Mr. Archibald Smith remembers very distinctly the first load hauled to the school house on Section 8—he thinks in the year 1847—hauled by Sam White from the James Morrow farm on Section 18. It was then called "stone-coal." Charles Plummer later operated a bank on the same farm and Wm. Hughes had a famous bank on Section 7. At some of the coal banks the settlers would go and dig for their own use as they pleased. In the later years coal has been mined in various parts of the township, shafts being the thickest north of Princeville Village. The banks now operating (1902) are those of Jackson Leaverton, on Section 18; of Graves Bros., on Section 10; of W. C. Ricker and of Robert Taylor (on the Alford farm) on Section 11; and of Higbee & Cutler, on Section 24—the last mentioned being within the corporate limits of Princeville, and employing the largest number of men.

Brick yards were operated by Erastus Peet and George I. McGinnis in the early days on Sections 30 and 7, respectively, both in Akron. James Byrnes, of Jubilee Township, James Rice and W. H. Gray furnished brick for some of the stores now standing. Gray's yard was in the northwest corner of the village, northwest of the cemetery, where an excavation in the hillside may still be seen. It was brick made by Gray that went into the present school building. E. Keeling started a brick yard in the southeast corner of Section 12 in 1887. He sold out in 1892 to Edward Hill, who has ever since manufactured and sold a large quantity of brick.

Princeville Village was incorporated first as "The Town of Princeville," under a special charter, April 15, 1869, and again as "The Village of Princeville," under the general law, March 24, 1874. The incorporation was started by the temperance people to enable the village to control its own liquor traffic, and as they hoped, to eradicate the saloons. The anti-license party carried the first election, but failed from 1870 to 1878, when they again came into power, this time for a term of two years. The license party ruled from 1880 to 1883, the anti-license from 1883 to 1885, and then it was a constant struggle, with varying results, until 1895. Beginning with May 1 of that year the anti-license party has been in control continuously to the present time. R. F. Henry, F. B. Blanchard, J. B. Ferguson, Edward Auten, John F. Bliss and Milton Hammer, in the President's chair, and others, have been "war horses" in the fight against saloons. In the later years there have been different citizens' leagues furnishing money and moral support for prosecutions. The temperance people, from the beginning of their efforts to prohibit the sale of liquors, up to the present time, have always found in Frank C. Hitchcock, entrenched in the castle which his father built and denominated "Almost a new Jerusalem," a foeman worthy of their steel. Affable, gentlemanly and self-contained, he has combatted the advance of temperance reform both at the elections and as a salesman at his place of business. Often when the temperance people felt sure of success as to an election, or as to the result of a prosecution brought against him for selling, have they found his success complete. But notwithstanding his ability and prowess, he has a number of times met defeat. If he has sold in the last few years, it has been without legal sanction and to a very limited patronage of men believed to have been long ago confirmed in their habits. It is believed that not many drunkards are now being made from clean young men in the village. For a time some of the highly respected business men not only voted against the anti-license party, but ran on the other ticket, and served as license councilmen. Later many changed, and even of the few highly respected ones still voting for license, very rarely is one found to allow his name on that ticket.

The anti-license administrations since 1894 and 1895 have carried on the policy of making permanent improvements in the shape of brick sidewalks and graveled roads. The community has felt satisfied with this method of government, and has given the anti-license party a steadily increasing majority, until in 1901 there was not even any license ticket nominated. The present village officers (May, 1902) are F. H. Cutler, President; S. A. Andrews, F. M. Beall, Geo. Corbet, A. C. Moffit, Peter Auten (2d), and William Berv. Trustees; F. W. Cutler, Clerk; R. J. Benjamin, Magistrate; and the following appointive officers: J. H. Russell, Treasurer; James Walkington, Marshal; James Cornish, Street Commissioner. The first town hall was the old Christian Church, previously mentioned in this article, purchased by the village in 1873. The present brick hall, consisting of council room, fire engine room, calaboose and upper hall, was erected in 1891, at a cost of about $5,000. The $4,400 of bonds issued for this hall are now paid off, and the village has an outstanding bonded indebtedness at the present time of $3,300, incurred for part of the cost of brick sidewalks. The old plank walks are being replaced as they wear out by brick, until now there are about 50 blocks of brick walk, and an equal amount of plank walk, kept in a fair state of repair. An effort has been made each year to gravel some of the roads leading out of town. In 1901 the last of them were completed, in that year about $600 being appropriated by the Village Council, and an equal amount being donated by the business men and the farmers who were benefited. A local telephone exchange was installed in 1901 by W. M. Keck. It is likely that the building of permanent sidewalks will continue, and that electric lights and waterworks will only be questions of time.

Just as this article is prepared for the press it is announced that temperance parties have procured a six years' lease of the Hitchcock "castle" and made other arrangements which, it is believed, will end a part of the liquor selling in town. Another item of latest news is that parties are now asking for an electric light franchise and contract from the village board.

The village has issued two editions of revised ordinances, one in the winter of 1877-78, when J. B. Ferguson was President, J. G. Corbet, E. C. Fuller, J. F. Carman and V. Weber, Trustees, and H. E. Burgess, Clerk; the other, in 1899-1900, when Milton Hammer was President, N. E. Adams, C. J. Cheesman, Peter Auten (2d), A. C. Sutherland, Thos. Blakewell, and W. S. Weaver, Trustees, and F. D. Goodman and F. W. Cutler, Clerks (Goodman resigning and Cutler succeeding). The first fire company was organized in the winter of 1875-76, and continued until 1899. Its first members were John G. Corbet, C. F. Beach, A. D. Edwards, Robert Pfeiffer, William Russell, J. B. Ferguson, Charles Blanchard, C. N. Pratt, H. E. Burgess, William McDowell, H. A. Simpson, H. E. Charles. It had in its charge, first, a chemical extinguisher; and, later, a chemical and hand rail force pump, which is still in use by the new fire company organized in 1900. The large fires that are remembered now are: The Rowley & Hitchcock hotel, about 1854, located on the site of the Krebsbach property, lot 8, block 2, recently purchased by Mrs. R. E. Dickinson; of the Alter store building, probably in the fall of 1874, on the present site of J. B. Ferguson's store, and that of June, 1875, which burned Thomas Allwood's store buildings, Hammer & May's double building and V. Weber's shoe store on, and south of the present site of German & Friedman's large store; the burning of Daniel Hitchcock's steam mill in 1884; of A. C. Sutherland's grain elevator in 1893; and of the Rock Island & Peoria depot on March 11, 1902.

The first store in Princeville was kept by Elisha Morrow on block 9, probably lot 8, in a little red frame building. This was the first frame in the village, and was covered with siding cut from native logs with a cross-cut saw. William C. Stevens and his brother, Amos, were in a hurry to have the store started, and spent three weeks making the siding. Elisha Morrow was no relation to the other well known Morrows, but was a brother of Amos Stevens' wife. The next store-keeper was William Coburn, in a small building on lot 7 block 2. He sold out his goods to one Ellsworth, who, in turn, sold to W. C. Stevens. Mr. Stevens—to "hold the village together," as he said—kept store in the front room of his residence. He would take orders for handkerchiefs and various articles, and then drive to Peoria, getting the goods that were ordered and only a few others. Other very early merchants in the Coburn store building were Grenleaf Woodbury, Myron Prince, Rowley & Hitchcock and J. W. Gue. Mr. Gue died May 21, 1852, from Asiatic cholera, the only death ever known to have occurred from that disease in this neighborhood. His wife, Jerusha T. Gue, continued his business in the east one of the store rooms on lot 1, block 18, now occupied by Blanchard & Sons.

About 1851 a man by the name of Gray commenced a grocery and notion trade, but soon abandoned it. In the summer of the same year Eldridge & Parker built an up-and-down board store building on lot 1, block 17, where the Park Hotel now stands. Among the business men during the decades of 1850, 1860 and 1870, were Thomas Allwood, John T. Lindsay, A. G. Henry, D. W. Herron and George W. Emery, drugs; Hiel Bronson and John H. Russell, groceries; Bohrer & Ferguson and Charles and Joseph German, hardware; Hammer & May, furniture; Isaac Behrer, grower of Osage Orange hedge plants; John Alter, A. G. Persons, G. W. Hitchcock, Day & Hitchcock, A. D. Sloan, Cecil Moss, Wm. Simpson and Solomon Godfrey, general stores; William DeBolt, shoemaker; Henry Clussman, Weber & Bachtold, shoes; John E. Henseler and J. L. Blanchard, lumber.

The hotel business started in Princeville with Seth Fulton's tavern, a log building on block 9, probably lot 3, built in the '30's. He kept the first tavern in Peoria and came from there to Princeville. His Princeville tavern, "The Traveler's Home," was a "two-roomed log house—one of the rooms above the other," with a lean-to, also of logs. William Coburn, in 1840, built a part of the "Rowley & Hitchcock" hotel on block 2, and called it "The Rising Sun." Myron Prince, Thomas Myers, G. Woodbury, Cyrus Beach, a man named Blue, John Moore, Rowley & Hitchcock and Ashford Nixon all kept tavern here—Rowley & Hitchcock erecting a large addition, with hall above, the building having burned when occupied by Ashford Nixon. A few years later Sanford M. Whittington erected the present building, a much smaller one, on the same site, for hotel purposes but, so far as learned, it has never been used for a hotel.

The site of the present Arlington House, lot 5, block 11, has been used for hotel purposes ever since 1848. Captain John Williams kept tavern in the E. Russell house from that year to 1855. In the latter year William Owens bought the entire south half of the block and replaced the dwelling by a larger hotel building. After conducting the hotel for eight years he sold to John Baldwin in 1863. James Rice became landlord in 1865, and continued until 1889, except such times as he leased to John G. Corbet, Thomas Painter, Lucius Wilkington and James Rice, Jr. Mr. Rice sold out in 1889 to Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Washburn. On the corner to the south, the present site of Conklin's store, was a hotel run at different times by Solomon Bliss and G. W. McMillen. R. P. Cooper built, for a hotel, the house now owned by Mrs. Elizabeth Bigg, which was then on lot 3, block 17, the site of David Kinah's present residence. W. G. Selby, about 1869, built the two-story part to the building on lot 1, setting the Eldridge & Parker store to the south of its old location for an "L." He first conducted an implement store and later, with Mrs. Selby, operated the Eureka Hotel. After Mr. Selby's death, Mrs. Selby conducted the business, recently as the "Park House," until the spring of 1902, when she leased the building for the same purpose to Miss Katie Schneider.

One industry that flourished in Princeville before the days of steam factories and cheap machinery elsewhere was wagon-making. When Daniel Prince came back from Missouri in 1842, to collect some old debts, he took home with him a wagon made by John Lewis and ironed by Ebenezer Russell. Later wagon-makers and wood-workers were Beach & Benton (possibly before Lewis), McMillen & Persons, J. T. & J. H. Russell, Williamson Vancil, Wayne Dixon, Joseph German and Aaron Moffit. The Russells and J. L. Blanchard (part of the time in partnership), occupied a large three-story factory built by McMillen & Persons, on the site of the present village hall, with blacksmith or iron shop to the east, and large warehouse to the north. Later, J. A. & O. S. Pratt conducted the blacksmithing part, and Moffit & Dixon made the woodwork of wagons.

Blacksmiths, worthy of mention as old settlers, are Ebenezer Russell, Wm. Owens, Allen & Griffin, Davis Bristol and Nathaniel Mitchell. Ebenezer Russell was the first blacksmith and secured a free lot from Mr. Stevens as the "first artisan" of his trade to come to the town. William Owens spent his life in this village from 1844 to 1902, in his prime playing an important part in the material advancement of the village, and, in his venerable age, wielding the sledge vigorously and industriously—always highly respected. Nathaniel Mitchell was a fine workman of iron and steel, and had a passion for gunsmithing—so much so that he "would make horse-shoeing wait any time to repair a gun." Other early mechanics were Jonathan Nixon, cabinet and coffin maker, ——— Armstrong, Jehiel Bouton and John Dale, carpenters, John Taylor, mason, and James McDowell, painter.

Princeville's first doctors were Mott, Morrow and Waters. The first two would hardly be called practicing physicians, but would go and attend a neighbor. Waters was a "water and herb doctor—chiefly water." Dr. ——— Moss was the first regular physician, and Dr. Charles Cutter the next. Dr. Cutter's son writes: "His practice sometimes extended from Lawn Ridge, in one direction, to French Grove in the other; and his meager remuneration, when there was pay at all, sometimes taking the bulky form of corn in the ear, and even of labor in his own fields, as return for successfully ushering into the world infant Princevillians, and for other professional services." The next to come, in order, were Israel G. Harlan, Robert F. Henry, L. M. Andrews, George W. Emery, Watkins Warren, T. E. Alyea, M. S. Marcy, C. H. Wilcox and W. J. Price.

The Postmasters from the earliest time to the present have been as follows, very nearly in the order given, and perhaps with some omitted: Stephen French, William Coburn, W. C. Stevens (at various times), George W. Hitchcock, L. B. Day, John W. Auten, Mrs. Mattie Snediker, M. M. Blanchard, L. A. Blanchard, J. M. Sabin, H. E. Burgess, A. D. Edwards, J. S. Barnum, A. Cowan, Frank Bouton, Marie Henry, H. J. Cheesman.

Peter Auten and George W. Alter established a bank in 1872, under the firm name of Auten & Alter. Mr. Alter dying the same year, Edward Auten became a partner, and the firm has remained Auten & Auten, with no change of partners to the present time. Peter Auten was aged ninety years and seven months on the first day of May, 1902, and is yet clear in mind, though feeble in body. He is the oldest resident of the village, and it is believed of the township.

The People's Bank was conducted by R. C. Henry and W. B. Kaiser from 1892 to 1893 or '94.

The grain and live stock businesses are those which have been an index to the material prosperity of the farmers of Princeville and Akron Townships, and consequently of the business men of Princeville. As is the case with many prairie towns, Princeville's commercial life depends on the farmers' corn, oats, hogs and cattle, and Princeville is in the midst of splendid territory. Shipments from Princeville in the year 1901 were 344 cars of grain and 107 cars of live stock, and the Village of Monica, four miles distant, near the center of the township, probably about the same amount of produce. This, too, is with other shipping towns as close as Wady Petra and Stark, 4 and 5 miles respectively, Duncan 5½ miles, Edelstein 7 miles, and Dunlap 8 miles. The poultry and egg business in Princeville in one year amounts to $15,000 to $20,000. Besides the farmers' produce, which many towns rely on for their prosperity, Princeville has a set of enterprising merchants. The general stores agreed in 1896, perhaps forced to do so by the stringent times, to sell for cash only. The resulting low prices, combined with the healthy rivalry and hearty spirit of co-operation, have built up a trade for Princeville that draws from the former territory of Toulon, Wyoming, Elmwood, Peoria and Chillicothe.

The brief article on Princeville Township in History of Peoria County (Johnson & Co., 1880) gives a partial list of Princeville business men in 1880 as follows: F. B. Blanchard, Wm. Simpson and Otto Davison, dry goods; J. H. Russell, Princeville Village we have given thus fully because it is the center of township life. The township has grown in population from 1,335 in 1870, 1,682 in 1880, and 1,663 in 1890, to 1,717 in 1900. The total voting population is nearly 500, and, the required number of 450 having been passed prior to 1896, in that year the township was divided into two precincts. No. 1 embracing a strip two miles in width off the east side of the township, with polling place at Princeville, and No. 2 the west four miles of the township, with polling place at Monica. Princeville was raised to be a third class post-office in 1900, and from it two rural free delivery routes are covered daily, with prospect of more routes in the future.

There are several miles of graveled road, with more gravel being placed each year, largely by donation of hauling, and partly by county and township appropriations. A few steel bridges have been put in each year, as the timber ones have worn out, until now a large proportion of the bridges are permanent ones. In the earlier day the population is said to have been nearly all Democratic. The Republican party started in 1856, when Fremont was candidate for President, but the Democrats were overpoweringly strong then. The recollection now is that the Republicans carried the township by 15 majority in 1860, again in 1864 and at one of the U. S. Grant elections. They also carried it by three majority when McKinley was elected for his first term. The Republicans might carry the township now if they would all vote together, but they are split up, and the result is that the Democrats hold their old time supremacy. The political complexion of the officials, however, has made very little difference with the conduct of town affairs. There have been no disturbing elements in local elections, and the officials, as well as the remainder of the citizens, have bent their energies to looking after the material interests of the township.

The township officers after the spring election of 1902 are as follows: M. V. Conklin, Supervisor; J. A. Pratt, Clerk; Henry Debord, Assessor; J. Y. Mendenhall, Collector; Archibald Smith, Frank Harrison and Ezra B. Calhoun, Road Commissioners; George Coon and James Walkington, Constables; F. W. Cutler, Justice of the Peace; Sherman T. Henry, R. M. Todd, and A. B. Debord, School Trustees; Edward Auten, School Treasurer.

The township is busy at its farms, its trades, and its shops. It is attending to business, although not following the pace for gold. It cares not for the turmoil, knows nothing of the poverty and thinks little of the sorrow of the city. Here the open-hearted, frank American citizen, the bulwark of our nation, is at home. He may be clad in modest clothes, but he is educated, and has a mind of his own. He appreciates the gentleman in his visitors, and, to such, his hospitality is open; to affectation and insincerity he says, "You are in the wrong place."

With her religion and education, her industry and honesty, her energy and judgment, and her thrift, coupled with her fertile soil, her blue sky, her springs and streams, her gentle rains and protecting forests, with all the beauties of trees and flowers, the singing birds and contented beasts, Princeville is a fair specimen, six miles square, of "The great, the free, the open, rolling West."

MARTHA J. ADAMS.

Mrs. Adams is related, through the families of her husband and mother, to former President of the United States. Her father, David C. Little, was a native of West Virginia, and married Ann Harrison, who was born in England, and died July 25, 1888. Mrs. Little was the mother of five children: John W., Benjamin F., Martha J., James H., and Henry N. (deceased). David C. Little was a mechanic by occupation. He died October 1, 1856. Mrs. Adams' brother, Henry N., is entitled to more than passing notice, and is enrolled among the brave men who uncomplainingly sacrificed their lives while fighting for the emancipation of the Southern slaves during the Civil War. With the declaration of the war he was one of the first in his locality to tender his services to the Union cause, and the very confidence which he inspired in his superior officers resulted in irreparable loss to his family and friends. Entrusted with dispatches to be delivered at the headquarters of General Hastings, at Goldsboro, North Carolina, he was shot in the discharge of his duty, the ball passing through his watch and entering his right side, from the effects of which wound he soon after expired.

The marriage of Martha J. Little and Ezra Adams occurred in Princeville, Illinois, October 23, 1856. Mr. Adams was a native of Pennsylvania, and was born January 11, 1828. He was educated in the public schools, and under his father's able instruction learned to be a practical farmer, to which occupation he devoted his active life. He represented a family which furnished brave soldiers for the War of 1812, and who ever maintained their reputation for industry, integrity, and all-round good citizenship. His death in Princeville, May 21, 1890, signalized the passing of a man of sterling worth, whose place in the old familiar haunts would not be readily filled. He was a strict advocate of Prohibition principles, and adopted this as his national platform. In religion he was a Methodist, and contributed to the extent of his ability towards the charities and support of his church. To Mr. and Mrs. Adams were born six children: F. Marion, a farmer in Princeville Township who married Leoria M. Kackley of Stark County, and has two children, Leota E. and P. Gilbert; Jane O., who became the wife of John Hoag of Akron Township, and who died January 25, 1896, leaving two daughters, Beulah M. and Elva L.; Newton E., a business man at Princeville, and who, through his marriage with Annie French, is the father of four children: Florence E., Lois F., Blanche Marie and Ralph E.; Augustus H., a music salesman of Buffalo, New York, and whose wife, formerly Hattie Colgrove, of Painesville, Ohio, died May 8, 1899; her one child, Robert Lingard, died March 7, 1899; Rowena A., who is the wife of Augustus H. Sloan, of Akron Township, and has four children, Lowell J., Leland E., Jennie (deceased), Hobart D., and Eldridge, who was born March 14, 1891; and Della E., who became the wife of Willis M. Hoag, of Princeville, March 5, 1901, and has one child, Eugene Ezra, born January 28, 1902. The Adams and Harrison families are of German and English descent.

PETER AUTEN.

Peter Auten, banker of Princeville, was born at Chili, near Rochester, New York, October 1, 1811; attended select schools in Rochester and Geneva, and began life as clerk in a general store at Penfield, New York. He also taught school. On October 13, 1836, he was married to Lydia Chapman, of Westport, Connecticut, who was then teaching school at Chili. They had seven children, only three of whom grew to maturity: Lemuel, Edward and Andrew. Hanford, born December 2, 1842, crippled by an accident, died September 30, 1845; Emily Ann, born November 12, 1844, lived to about the same age. Two later children, a boy and a girl, died in infancy without being named. These four all rest in a cemetery used by all the neighbors, but still remaining (June, 1902) in Mr. Auten's private ownership, in the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of Section 19, Radnor Township. Lemuel and Edward are mentioned in personal paragraphs. Andrew, born March 9, 1841, attended the public schools and Princeville Academy, and also the State Agricultural College of Pennsylvania. When Southern invasion was threatened at the breaking out of the Civil War, he was a member of the Home Guards of Pennsylvania. Returning to Princeville, he engaged in the nursery business, furnishing many of the evergreens and other fine shade-trees that now adorn the village and surrounding country. He was married, in 1863, to Alice Smith, and died of typhoid fever, October 4, 1864; they had one daughter—Tula Rose, now Mrs. Russell E. Chaplin, who resides at Navajo, Oklahoma.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Auten started, soon after they were married, on a trip by sailing vessel from New York City to Cuba, and thence to New Orleans, and then up the Mississippi River by boat to the mouth of the Arkansas. From Arkansas City they traveled as far as they could by coach, and after that on horseback to the Choctaw Indian Mission. They made the trip overland with great difficulty and danger. They were often stuck in the mud and had to leave their baggage and send back for it. The settlers implored them not to go farther, fearing the dangers of the wilderness and of the Indians, and it was only at fabulous prices that horses and men could be obtained for the journey.

Finally reaching the Choctaw Mission, Mr. Auten taught among the Indians for two years. There were three divisions of the Choctaw nation, one of which had never consented to allow Government schools in its territory. Mr. Auten was employed by the United States Government to negotiate a treaty with the Chief of this division, looking to the establishment of schools. In this others had failed. Mr. Auten was successful, partly—perhaps wholly—on account of the high personal regard in which he was held by the Chief. The Chief was very grateful for medical aid given his wife. He took up with the idea of the schools, honored Mr. Auten at the Indian "Pole Pullings," and other public occasions, often protected him, and the Indians made a pet of baby Lemuel. They would borrow the baby, take him away, and bring him back, dressed in Indian baby clothes and decorated with beads. The Government sent Mr. Auten $500 as evidence of special appreciation of his services.

Unable to endure the climate after a serious illness, Mr. Auten left, with his wife, and came to Radnor Township, Peoria County, in 1838 or early in 1839. He moved to Princeville, teaching school the winter of 1840-41. He lived in a log cabin just southwest of the southwest corner of the original village plat (between N. E. Adams' and the Misses Edwards' present residence); the school house was the old log one so famous in early Princeville history. Moving back to Radnor Township, he farmed there until 1849, when he again took up his residence in Princeville, to continue until the present time (June, 1902). He bought the Samuel Alexander house, believed to be the second oldest frame dwelling in the village (on the northeast corner of Block 13, facing west side of the public square), which he occupied until 1887, then moving diagonally across the street to his present residence on the southwest corner of Block 8, fronting the north side of the square.

In Radnor Township he was School Treasurer, 1842-50, opening the first set of Treasurer's books. In Princeville Township he was Commissioner of Highways, 1851-53; Moderator of town meetings, 1852, '53 and '56; Justice of the Peace, 1854-58; Overseer of Road District, 1857-58 and 1859-61; Town Clerk, 1859-63. He was one of the committee of five appointed at town meeting April 2, 1867, to circulate a petition to raise money to refund to soldiers their taxes paid toward the bounty fund.

For a number of years, after moving to Princeville, Mr. Auten was actively engaged in farming on land one or two miles out from town. He always did a great deal of writing for other people, especially during and after war times.

In 1872, at an age when many men consider themselves old, he started in the banking business to remain in it actively for twenty-five years, and still to be able to walk to and from the bank after a period of thirty years. His first partner, George W. Alter, was fast failing in health before the close of the year 1872, and the firm name of Auten & Alter was changed to Auten & Auten. Mr. Auten's son Edward was the new partner, in place of Mr. Alter, and the partnership and firm name have remained the same ever since. The business has grown, and a branch bank was established at Monica in 1893, which is conducted by Mr. Auten's other surviving son, Lemuel.

Beginning with his first school in New York

State, continuing through his years with the Indians, and all through his later life, Mr. Auten has been of a decided missionary and philanthropic character. When teaching his first school he got nearly the entire district to sign the temperance pledge—something difficult in those days—and was instrumental in having seventy of his pupils and young people join the church. It was as a missionary teacher of the American Board that he went to the Indians. Until his eightieth year he enjoyed singing hymns in the Choctaw language. He has always been active in temperance and in church and Sunday school work, both in the village and going out into the country. Mrs. Auten was always his equal helper. They both assisted their neighbors in spiritual, intellectual and material ways. Mrs. Auten at times taught school in her own home, and she is remembered by many, even yet, for her kind deeds. She died April 11, 1891, aged 84 years, 1 month and 7 days, having been born March 4, 1807.

Mr. Auten was, in many ways, the mainstay of his family; that is, of all his uncles and cousins who came West, as well as his mother and sister. He was liberal to them, as he has also been to his own children and grandchildren. He has not only favored the right and just, but has fought for right and justice at all times. He has been a part of the building up of Princeville; many strong men of the community often speak of him as one to whom they owe their success. He has been a helper and adviser of many people.

On June 1, 1902, he was 91 years and 8 months old, still clear in mind. Although feeble, and soon fatigued, he persists in taking exercise by walking about at home and occasionally going to the business part of town. He is the oldest citizen in the township. His pure white hair is an indication of his clean life and noble character. His thought is of Heaven, and when time is heavy, he sings of Heaven's hymns that he learned in his youth. His interest in the soul's welfare and his dignity and kindness, are an inspiration to his children and grandchildren, and to others.

JOHN FRIEDMAN.

One of the largest landowners and most practical and successful farmers in Princeville Township, is John Friedman, who was born in Hamburg, Erie County, New York, June 7, 1849, and educated in Stark County, Illinois. His father was also a farmer on a large scale, and reared his son to an appreciation of the dignity and usefulness of an agricultural life—a lesson well learned, judging from his abundant harvests and growing stock interests, and the general excellent management of his property. John Friedman's share in the paternal estate was two hundred and fifty acres of land, which formed but the nucleus of his later possessions, for, by thrift, industry and sobriety, he has added six hundred and fifty acres thereto, making in all nine hundred acres of farm land. It is assumed that the fortunate owner and successful manipulator of so large a property must possess business, as well as agricultural knowledge, and it is to this particular ability that much of his success is due.

In Peoria, Illinois, December 31, 1876, Mr. Friedman married Emma E. Winkelmeyer, daughter of Frederick Winkelmeyer, who was born in Saxony, Germany, July 1, 1834. Mr. Winkelmeyer was educated in Germany, as far as preliminary training was concerned, and, in 1848, when fourteen years of age, accompanied his parents to America, locating for the time-being in Wisconsin. He afterward removed to Peoria and for several months followed the trade of carpenter, later turning his attention to the mercantile business. He married Amelia Illig, also a native of Germany, the ceremony being performed in Wisconsin September 22, 1855. CHAPTER XIV.

RADNOR TOWNSHIP.

BY NAPOLEON DUNLAP.

Looking over the past for a period of sixty years we are filled with amazement at the changes that have taken place. Then the deer and wolves were plenty and prairie chickens were common game. Steam power was in its infancy, the telegraph and the telephone were unknown, electricity as a mechanical power had not been dreamed of, and weeks, or even months, were consumed in traveling a distance now accomplished in a few hours or days at the farthest. Of this the early settlers of Radnor, who came mostly from New York, Massachusetts, Ohio, and other Eastern States, had a rich experience, many of them coming overland by emigrant wagons, consuming weeks in making the journey.

One of the earliest, if not the first settler in the township, was Erastus Peet, who came in 1834. His little daughter of four years, having become lost, and a fire having swept over the prairie in the night time, she perished in the flames and her body was discovered the next day. Robert Cline came in 1835, from Oswego County, New York, and, after remaining two years at Hale's Mill, settled on Section 35, and two years later on Section 13. He was killed by lightning on April 21, 1849. William Gifford, who came from Barnstable, Massachusetts, in 1836, erected the first frame house, on the south half of Section 28. Moses Harlan settled on Section 22 in the same year. He was County Commissioner in 1838, and two years in the Legislature, 1838-40. His son, George B. Harlan, settled on Section 2 in 1836. He was a Justice of the Peace for some years and a member of the Board of Supervisors for one or two years, besides holding other local offices. William Knott settled on Section 26 in the same year; also John L. Wakefield, who came from Butler County, Ohio, to Peoria County in 1834, but settled on Section 18 in Radnor in 1836. Aaron G. Wilkinson and his brother, Abner Russell, Calvin Blake, Charles, Richard and George Wilkins, Anson Rushnell and his brothers, Horace and Alvin, Thomas Shaw,, James ——— and his brother-in-law, Griffith Dickinson, all came about the year 1837.

About the same time Alva Dunlap came on a prospecting tour from Sandy Creek, Oneida County, New York, and, having become satisfied with the place, returned the next season (1838) with his family. Leaving his home on the 11th day of August, with his father and mother, five children and a sister, he, with his brother, the writer, embarked at Sackett's Harbor on a little schooner of about one hundred tons for Chicago. Leaving his mother and sister, with a daughter residing at Chicago, for another trip, the rest of the party proceeded in wagons, which had been previously engaged, arriving at their destination on the northwest quarter of Section 14 on the 11th day of October, and took up quarters in a frame house, 16x24 feet, which Alva had erected the preceding summer from lumber hauled from Hale's Mill, then recently erected. Their nearest neighbor was an Englishman named John Jackson, a bachelor of about thirty years, with a lad of about fourteen years named George Scholes, "keeping back" on the northeast quarter of Section 15. Jackson had arrived in 1837 and had broken part of his land, on which he raised a crop in 1838. Ira Smith, a native of Hampden, Maine, who had been a sea captain, had also come in 1837, and had paid Chloe Case $50 for a claim on the northeast quarter of Section 3, which he entered and afterwards, in 1849, sold to Adam Yates for $3,000. He was a very worthy man, an old-line Abolitionist, and believed in the Golden Rule. He removed to Peoria and went into the lumber trade.

J. J. Hitchcock, with his aged parents, had also settled on the northwest quarter of Section 3 in 1837. In the winter of 1838 he went with Alva Dunlap to Chicago, and assisted him in bringing the remainder of the goods, together with his mother and sister, to the new house.

The country, at that time, was an unbroken prairie, and what houses there were were scattered along the streams and in the edges of the timber. On the larger prairies one could travel a whole day without seeing a house. The scarcity of timber for fuel, fencing and building purposes was a serious matter with the early settlers, and, if one could get hold of a piece of timber land, he was considered fortunate; and woe to him who having secured one would go off without leaving some one to guard it, for on his return he would likely find it all stumps. No one thought lumber could be shipped here in sufficient quantities to supply the needs of these vast prairies. Coal had not yet been developed to any considerable extent. Saw mills were erected along the streams, where there was timber and water with sufficient fall to obtain power. But the lumber secured in that way was very unsatisfactory for building purposes. When the Osage Orange was introduced for hedges, it was thought to be a great advance in the matter of fencing; but now, since the introduction of barbed wire, the Osage Orange is no longer planted and farmers would be glad to be rid of what they have. Jonathan Brassfield took two loads of wheat to Chicago and brought back finishing lumber. Several others tried the same experiment, but no one went the second time. When the canal was opened in 1848 it brought great relief to those living within reach of the river. Timber is much more plentiful now than it was sixty years ago. Then it was short and scrubby on account of the fires; after that was cut off and the fires kept away from the new growth it became thrifty. Coal became the principal fuel and the inhabitants ceased, in a great measure, the use of wood for either fuel or fencing. But for the last few years many prefer to have the land for farming purposes, and are cutting off the timber, selling the wood so cheaply that the people are again using it for fuel.

As the population increased the deer disappeared, but the wolves remained and are not yet entirely extinct, an occasional one venturing out from its hiding place. As corn fields increased the prairie chickens also increased, for a time into large flocks, and became very destructive to the corn, which, according to the custom of the country, was left in the field over winter; but when the prairies had become settled up and their nesting places invaded, they began to decrease in numbers until now they are nearly extinct. The rattle-snake was a common pest in breaking up the native sod, and was often encountered by the plowman. They were not considered dangerous, as they made their presence known by their rattle and were easily disposed of. Cattle instinctively avoided them, but were sometimes bitten by them, which caused severe swellings, but seldom, if ever, death. They disappeared when the land became cultivated.

After the opening of the canal pine lumber in quantities began to make its appearance, the coal banks began to supply fuel and the people began to lose their fear of settling upon the broad prairies. The big prairie team, with four or five yoke of oxen and the huge breaking-plow, rapidly turned over the native sod; houses rapidly sprang up in all directions and a wave of prosperity seemed to have struck the country.

The light steel-plow introduced by Tobey & Anderson, of Peoria, took the place of the wooden moldboard and heavy cast-iron plow brought from the East. The reaper took the place of the back-breaking cradle; the Brown corn-planter did away with planting by hand; the thresher, with its simple cylinder throwing straw, chaff and grain out together, displaced the flail and the tramping-floor, only to be displaced in its turn by the separator, which also took the place of the Nurse or Proctor fanning-mill formerly in use; the single shovel-plow, doing duty with one horse traveling first upon one side of the row and back on the other, was superseded by the two-horse riding or walking cultivators. The complete outfit for husking corn was one team, two men and a boy taking five rows, the team, and wagon treading down the middle one, which was the boy's share to pick up.

The first reaping machine known in Radnor—and perhaps in the county—was owned by Alva Dunlap, and was built by George Greenwood of Peoria. It was so constructed as to throw the cut grain directly back the width of the swath, which had to be bound up before the next swath could be cut. It did clean work and he used it for several years in cutting his own and his neighbor's grain. It was built about the year 1846, only seven years after Cyrus H. McCormick gave the first exhibition of his reaper on the farm of Joseph Smith, in Augusta County, Virginia. The next was a McCormick—the grain being raked off on one side. This was followed, in a few years, by the self-raker; and in about twenty years by the self-binder. Through these improvements the hard labor of eight men was done away with, and the women of the household were relieved of the labor of boarding a large number of men during the heat of the harvest time. Before that time harvest hands would begin in the South, where the season was earlier, and work their way northward as the grain ripened. These traveling men were thrown out of employment by the self-binding reaper.

About the year 1839 experiments were made by Aaron Bushnell, J. J. Hitchcock and Alva Dunlap in making sod fences, consisting of a ditch two and a half feet wide by the same in depth, and an embankment on the side protected by the sods cut from the ditch. But the theory would not hold good in practice, for the cattle, getting into the ditch, would have a fine frolic in tossing the sods out of the place with their horns and so destroying the fence.

One of the serious problems with the farmers was to get their products to market. In the spring of 1841 John Jackson built two flat-boats and loaded them with ear-corn and bacon, for the purpose of coasting along the Mississippi and selling to the planters and negroes. As was customary, they were floated with the current. They had long sweeps or oars to guide them and keep them off the snags. To build them two large trees would be found (generally hackberry), which were hewn flat for the sides, and planks spiked on the bottom, the ends sloped like a scow. The roof, or deck, was made of boards sawed thin enough to bend across the boat, and thus make an arched roof. The crews of these famous boats were John Jackson, Elisha Barker, John Peet, Warren Hale, William Harlan and Napoleon Dunlap. The two latter went as far as Natchez, but, concluding they had had enough of the life of boatmen, they begged off and returned by steamer, working their way by helping to take on wood at the wood-yards along the way.

The first election in Radnor was held at the house of Alva Dunlap in 1842. It was then Benton Precinct, composed of Radnor and Kickapoo townships. An election had previously been held in the woods in Kickapoo, north of where the village now is. At this election in Radnor Smith Dunlap, father of the writer, was elected Justice of the Peace, and continued to serve in that capacity until the adoption of township organization. The first annual town meeting of the Town of Benton (afterwards named Radnor) was held at the residence of Jonathan Brassfield. Alva Dunlap was chosen Moderator and Nathaniel T. A. Shaw, Clerk; Jonathan Brassfield was elected Supervisor; Nathaniel T. A. Shaw, Town Clerk; Lewis Harlan, Assessor; Jonathan Brassfield, Griffith Dickinson and William Wilkinson, Commissioners of Highways; Phineas R. Wilkinson, Collector; Lorennas Shaw, Overseer of the Poor; George B. Harlan and Smith Dunlap, Justices of the Peace; John M. Hendricks and Phineas R. Wilkinson, Constables. Fifteen dollars were appropriated for contingent expenses and fifty dollars for road purposes.

The only Post Office in the township before the building of the Rock Island and Peoria Railroad, was kept by Enoch Huggins on Section 35. The mail was carried from Peoria three times a week. This office did not continue long. There was a mail-route from Peoria by way of La Fayette, through Medina and Akron, but most of the people received their mail at Peoria until the building of the railroad. In the first settlement of the country the wagon-road took a straight course from Mt. Hawley to Princeville; but, as the prairie became settled, every one would turn the travel around his own land, but was anxious to have it go straight through his neighbor's. An attempt was once made to open up a State Road from Peoria to Rock Island, but the opposition to its going diagonally through the farms was so great it had to be given up.

Mary J. Peet, who was burned to death on the prairie, was the first person to die in the township, and Henry Martin the next, on November 10, 1836. John Harlan was the first child born, October, 1836, and died February 1, 1847.

The first school was taught in the summer of 1840 by Miss E. R. Dunlap, in a little frame house built on the northwest quarter of Section 13 in 1837 by a man who committed suicide, and it was never occupied except for schools or other public purposes. Horace Bushnell taught a singing school in it the same summer. The next summer Miss Dunlap taught in another vacant log house on the northwest quarter of Section 13. The first attempt to organize the school system was in December, 1841. Charles Kettelle, School Commissioner, then surveyed and laid off the School Section (16) into forty-acre lots, and had them appraised and offered for sale. Cyrus W. Pratt bid off three of these lots for $170. He made no payments, but gave a mortgage for the price with interest at twelve per cent. After making two or three payments of interest he failed to make any more, and the land reverted. About the same time trustees were appointed and Peter Auten was made the first School Treasurer. At their first meeting, April 4, 1842, they laid off the town into six districts and resolved that, inasmuch as the money in the treasury was depreciated paper of the State bank, and believing that it would recover its former value, the Treasurer should loan the same at par with interest at twelve per cent.—conditioned that money of the same bank might be received in payment of the loans.

The same winter, or in the early spring, a log school-house was built on Section 15, in which Anna McKnight and Sarah D. Sanford taught, and William Gifford in the winter of 1843. The school-house was then moved to Section 22, on the wood-lot now owned by George B. Taylor. This was as near the center of the town as the condition of the ground would permit. Within a radius of two miles there were ten or twelve large families. They were in the woods or near the edge of the timber. Their cultivated fields were along the Kickapoo bottoms or near the edge of the prairies—the object at that time being to get where they would be sure of having timber. There was much strife in locating the school-houses, and they were frequently moved to get them to the most central point. In 1842 there were three school-houses built; the one just mentioned, a small frame on Section 2, and a log one on the northeast quarter of Section 1. The first teacher in the last named was Catharine J. Jamison, who began on May 10, 1842, her school consisting of seven Blakesleys, five Wakefields, four Chapins, three Van Camps, two Gordons, two Rogerses, one each of Hall, Gilkinson, Hatfield and Slaughter. The Directors who signed her certificate were Parley E. Blakesley and Joseph Chapin. The next term was taught by Deborah L. Woodbury, the same year. In 1843 a man by the name of Elisha Barker taught in a log school-house on Section 22, built in 1842. In the winter of 1843-44 William Gifford taught in the same house.

Early in the spring of 1842 a small frame school-house was built on the southeast quarter of Section 2 by voluntary labor, of lumber sawed at the mill of Robert Bette's and William Bruzee on the creek in Section 23, a dry place now for a saw mill. Miss Margaret Artman taught there in 1842, her patrons being Ira Smith, J. J. Hitchcock, Anson Bushnell and his sons Alvan and Horace, Samuel and William Seely, William Moore, O. L. Nelson, Ira Hitchcock and ——— Goodeil.

At the January (1843) meeting of the Board of Trustees, schedules of the following teachers were approved and the Treasurer ordered to pay them their respective shares of the interest arising from the School, College and Seminary Fund, viz.: District No. 1, Margaret Artman; No. 2, Catharine J. Jamison and Deborah L. Woodbury; No. 3, Anna McKnight, Sarah D. Sanford and William Gifford, Jr. William Gifford received for three months, $40; Deborah L. Woodbury, for two months, $10.50; Catherine J. Jamison, for two months, $10; E. B. Dunlap, for three months, $24. The custom was to "board around."

The office of Trustee having now become elective, Griffith Dickinson, Horace Bushnell, Joseph Chapin, Jonathan Brassfield and Nelson Bristol were the first to be elected, Trustees before then having been appointed.

A new valuation of the lands was made in 1845, when all the lots except four were valued at $1.25 per acre, two of the others at $1.50, and one each at $1.75 and $2.00. Between that time and May 22, 1847, they were sold at various prices, realizing, in the aggregate, $1,471.10.

No sooner was the free-school law in operation than the Trustees began to act under it. On April 26, 1855, they ordered the Treasurer to levy a tax of ten cents on the hundred dollars for general school purposes, and five cents for paying teachers and extending terms of school. The valuation of real estate for 1854 was $141,430, and of personal property $54,592; total, $196,022. This was the first attempt to sustain free schools by taxation.

The village of Dunlap was laid out on June 12, 1871, on Section 11 by Alva Dunlap. Dr. John Gillette erected the first building in 1871. It stands opposite the railroad depot, and is now owned by B. C. Dunlap. It is a thriving village of three hundred inhabitants and is situated on the Rock Island and Peoria Railroad. It has six stores, two grain elevators, three churches and an Odd Fellow' Hall, and a graded public-school building, erected in 1899 at a cost of $4,000. District No. 4, in which it is situated, has one hundred children of school age, of whom over eighty were in attendance in 1899.

The history of Prospect Presbyterian Church, now located at Dunlap, furnished one of the marked features, not only of Radnor Township but of Peoria County. In the year 1848 and 1849, a number of families from the Pan-Handle section of what is now the State of West Virginia, settled in the townships of Akron and Radnor, and at first connected themselves with the church at Princeville; but, owing to the distance, of four to nine miles, and the fact that others were following them from their old home in the East, they decided to ask the Presbytery for a separate organization, which request was granted. Rev. Addison Coffee, of Peoria, Rev. Robert Breese, of Princeville, and Elder Henry Schnebly, of Peoria, as a committee of Presbytery, met the congregation on June 8, 1850, in the school-house where they had been accustomed to worship, when the new church was organized with fifteen members, namely: From the Princeville Church, Joseph Yates, Sr., and Mary his wife, John Yates, Sr., and Eleanor his wife, Samuel Keady and Eleanor his wife, Thomas Yates and Mary his wife, John Hervey and Sarah his wife, and Mrs. Margaretta Yates; from the Church of West Alexandria, Pennsylvania, David G. Hervey and Jane his wife; and from the church of West Liberty, Virginia, Adam Yates and Sarah his wife. Their first house of worship, a frame building, 36x48 feet, costing $1,400, erected on a lot containing about seven acres donated by Adam Yates, was dedicated in June, 1854. When the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad was built, and the village of Dunlap laid out one mile south of the location of the church, the meeting place was removed to the village and a new church edifice erected at a cost of $5,100. The lots on which the church stands are 150 feet square. The old church was torn down and the land on which it stood added to the church cemetery, and the same is now known as Prospect Cemetery. In 1867 a parsonage was purchased at a cost of $3,000; but in 1878 it was sold and a new parsonage was erected at a cost of $1,700 on lots 100x150 feet adjacent to the village, donated by David G. Hervey. The following are the names and dates of pastors of those who have served the congregation: Rev. David Hervey (stated supply), 1850-51; Rev. John Turbitt, 1853-55; Rev. Thomas F. Smith (stated supply), 1856-57; Rev. George Cairns, 1858-63; Rev. J. A. E. Simpson (stated supply), 1864-66; Rev. A. S. Gardner, 1866-71; Rev. John Winn, 1872-77; Rev. Silas Cooke, 1877-90; Rev. H. V. D. Nevins, D. D. (supply), 1891-92; Rev. Harry Smith, 1893-96; Rev. R. C. Townsend, 1896 to the present time (1902).

Besides these, the congregation was served for short periods by Rev. Robert R. Breese and Rev. James K. Large. Two died in the service: Rev. James K. Large, March 18, 1858, and Rev. George Cairns, June 25, 1863. Their remains repose side by side in Prospect Cemetery; and near by is the grave of Mrs. Mary Winn, wife of Rev. John Winn, the pastor, and daughter of Mrs. Phoebe Hinsdale Brown, the author of that exquisite hymn,

"I love to steal awhile away," etc.

Mrs. Brown died at Henry, Illinois, October 10, 1861.

The spiritual power which this church has exerted cannot be better shown than in the number of its members who have gone into the ministry, including the following: Rev. George Dunlap, 1875; Rev. Thomas C. Winn, Missionary to

Napoleon Dunlap

Japan; Rev. William Jones, California; William Y. Jones, the son of the latter, Missionary to Japan; William Ayling, Kansas, Minister in the United Brethren denomination; Franklin Brown, Idaho—six in all.

From June 8th to 10th, 1900, this church celebrated its semi-centennial anniversary in a series of exercises of the most interesting character, a full account of which has been published in a small pamphlet of seventy-four pages. This publication, abounding as it does in rich historical facts and sprightly reminiscences, is worthy of a permanent place in the historical relics of the county.

The Methodists held services in this township as early as 1840. Before there were any school-houses the circuit riders held meetings at private houses. Their first church was built in the year 1860, about one mile west of where the village of Alta now is. It was called the Glendale Church. Its principal members were Wesley Smalley and George Divelbiss. In its pastoral relations it was connected with Kickapoo and Mount Hedding, in Hallock. After the village of Alta was laid out, the church was moved to that place, which is situated in Medina Township, the pastor making his home in Kickapoo.

In 1885 the church was built in Dunlap under the direction of the Rev. Webber, and the pastoral residence was changed to Dunlap. The church at Dunlap still remains in connection with the church at Alta. It has a membership of about one hundred.

In the year 1865 the Methodists built a church called the "Salem Church" on the northwest quarter of Section 16, near the school-house. The leading members of this church organization were Wesley Strain, A. J. Gordon and John Jackson. After ten or fifteen years it was abandoned for want of support on account of removals and deaths. The house was sold and another built on Section 18, near the line of Jubilee Township, called Zion Church, which is now connected with Kickapoo in its pastoral relations. The leaders in starting this church were William Rowcliffe and Daniel Corbett. The membership is small.

The Catholics have a strong church in Radnor called the St. Rose Catholic Church. Their church edifice was erected in the fall of 1879 by John Horine. The congregation contains many of the leading citizens of the place.

NAPOLÉON DUNLAP.

Reminiscent of the days when a few straggling dwellings and public buildings vaguely prophesied the Chicago of to-day, and when Peoria County, stretching its untitled and unappreciated acres into the distance of the prairies, gave little promise of the development of three-quarters of a century later, are the lives and undertakings of the Dunlap family, pioneers in the truest sense of the word, and promoters of the agricultural and other resources of this well favored State. Napoleon Dunlap, for more than half a century identified with the farming interests of Peoria County, was born at Sandy Creek, Oswego County, New York, August 31, 1823, and was a son of Smith Dunlap, born May 2, 1783, and died March 13, 1856, and Eleanor (Lane) Dunlap, born December 17, 1781, and died March 25, 1858. Smith Dunlap, who was a son of William and Eleanor (DeLong) Dunlap, early foretold the possibilities of the middle West, and as proof of his faith started for Illinois, leaving Sackett's Harbor, on Lake Ontario, in a schooner of ninety tons, and navigated the lakes to Chicago, arriving at their destination September 29, 1838. Accompanied by his family, he then proceeded by wagon to Hale's Mill, near Pottstown, which they reached October 11, 1838, going thence to Section 14, Radnor Township, where they moved into a house erected by Alva Dunlap, who had preceded them on the journey the year before. In the midst of this wilderness Smith Dunlap exerted a strong and capable nature in the upbuilding of his adopted part of the State, and became a man of affairs and importance. Having an intelligent understanding of political affairs, he filled various positions of trust, was elected Justice of the Peace in 1840, serving until 1848, at which time he was appointed to the office by the Governor, and acceptably discharged his responsibilities as Justice for many years more.

After the family arrival in Radnor Township Napoleon Dunlap adapted himself to prevailing crude conditions, and, with his brother, worked on the home farm. When leisure permitted he varied his occupation by navigating flat-boats down the Illinois River, and at a later day broke the prairie on which the village of Dunlap now stands. As an independent venture he settled on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres on Section 3, the tax title of the farm costing $300, a subsequent payment of $700 being required to perfect the title. Here he lived and successfully farmed for forty-six years, and in addition was foremost in all of the activities represented in his neighborhood, his counsel, purse and personal services being ever available for the furthering of any just and progressive cause. As a Prohibitionist he has served as Supervisor, Assessor and Road Commissioner. In religion he was a Presbyterian; was an Elder in the church, and contributed generously towards its charities and support. Of late years he had practically retired from active participation in business affairs, and, at his residence in Dunlap, enjoyed a well merited rest. Travel and observation contributed to broaden his life, and he recalled with special pleasure a trip to the West in 1892, at which time he visited Pike's Peak, Denver and San Francisco, going thence by boat along the coast to Portland, Oregon, and on the return trip taking in Salt Lake, Omaha and other large cities.

April 23, 1848, Mr. Dunlap married at Trivoli Eliza Robinson, who was born at New Lisbon, Otsego County, New York, January 2, 1829. Of Irish paternal ancestry, her father, George Robinson, was born in Otsego County, New York, June 17, 1796, and died November 7, 1873, and her mother, Maria (Gaylord) Robinson, was born April 5, 1804, and died March 4, 1881. The parents came to Peoria County June 2, 1836, and settled in Trivoli Township, where they engaged in agricultural pursuits. To Mr. and Mrs. Dunlap have been born ten children: George, born March 8, 1849, married Sarah Ann Hervey, and is a Presbyterian preacher in La Salle County, Illinois; Thomas and Emeline, twins, born August 24, 1850, the former dying in infancy and the latter marrying Harvey Comp. and with her daughter, Bessie, now living with her mother; Harriet Maria, born October 16, 1852, married George Yates, a farmer of Akron Township; Franklin, born July 16, 1855, is a farmer in Radnor Township; Flora, born June 24, 1858, married James E. Watson, a merchant in Dunlap; Walter, born June 24, 1860, and died October 11, 1866; Eliza Ellen, born July 29, 1862, and died December 1, 1864; Leslie Smith, born January 2, 1868, married Belle Hurst and lives in Radnor Township; and Stella Roberta, born January 15, 1870, who became the wife of Henry A. Molohon, Supervisor in the Deaf and Dumb Institute at Jacksonville. Mr. Dunlap died July 14, 1902.

MOSES HARLAN.

Whether as a progressive and successful agriculturist or as a broad-minded, disinterested holder of responsible political positions, Moses Harlan has impressed his forceful personal worth upon the community of Radnor Township, and is esteemed as one of the most helpful of the early pioneers. A native of Park County, Indiana, he was born June 13, 1835, the son of George B. Harlan, who was born in Warren County, Ohio, in 1813, and died in Wyoming, Stark County, Illinois, in 1866, and Sarah (Cornelison) Harlan, who was born in Preble County, Ohio, in 1817, and died on the old homestead in Radnor Township in 1868. The paternal grandparents were Moses and Ann (Jennings) Harlan; on the maternal side the grandparents were named Marsh and Elizabeth (Crooks) Cornelison, the former born in North Carolina. As early as 1836 George B. Harlan came to Radnor Township, settling on Section 20, where he cultivated a fine farm from the crude land, and where he raised his children to be useful men and women. The last three or four years of his life were spent in Wyoming, Stark County, where he was practically retired from business activity.

As a youth Moses Harlan worked on his father's farm, and while still quite young, helped to break up the wild prairie and convert it into profitable farming land. May 21, 1878, he married Lavina P. Jackson, born in Radnor Township October 30, 1852, the daughter of John Jackson, who was born in Yorkshire, England, August 10, 1807, and came to America with his parents when seven years of age. The family located in Newcastle County, Delaware, where he lived until eighteen years of age, after which he removed to Radnor Township in 1837. This continued to be his home until his death, May 5, 1895, at the age of eighty-seven years. His wife, whom he married in Radnor Township, and who was formerly Mrs. Elizabeth (Jordan) Auckland, a native of Lincolnshire, England, survived him until January 27, 1898, being at the time seventy-seven years old. To Mr. and Mrs. Harlan have been born six children: Ernest J., born December 26, 1880; Clarence W., born March 18, 1882; Luella P., born May 22, 1884; John R., born September 13, 1887; George B., born November 8, 1889; and Carrie Elizabeth, born June 27, 1892.

In the last year of the Civil War (February, 1865), Mr. Harlan enlisted at Peoria, Illinois, in the Seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and joined the command at Raleigh, North Carolina. The vicissitudes and dangers of war were not meted out to him to any appreciable extent, for on account of physical disability he was sent to the hospital at Louisville, Kentucky, and discharged from the service in July, 1865. As a staunch believer in Republican institutions, Mr. Harlan has conscientiously filled many positions of trust within the gift of the people of his township, by whom he is regarded as a leader. Few men have, for so long a time, held continuous offices, or have, to so great extent, retained the confidence and approval of the people. For twenty-five consecutive years he served as Constable, fifteen years as Commissioner of Highways, fourteen years as School Director, eight years as Justice of the Peace, one year as Supervisor, two terms as Collector, and one term as Assessor. Fraternally he is associated with the Masons at Alta. and with his wife is a member of the Eastern Star.

WILLIAM WAKEFIELD.

Kickapoo Township, now one of the most fertile portions of Peoria County, received its first impetus toward practical usefulness from the settling within its borders of its first white resident, John L. Wakefield, the father of William Wakefield. The elder Wakefield was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, and upon starting out in the world for himself removed to Ohio, where he married Martha Strickler, who was born in Cincinnati, Ohio. In the course of time his ambition craved a more extensive and less worn field of activity, and in 1834 he identified his fortunes with the hitherto uninhabited prairie, now known as Kickapoo Township. After a residence there of about two years, he removed to Radnor Township, where he bought a farm on Section 18, and for the rest of his life engaged in farming and stock raising. During his youth in Pennsylvania he attended the public schools, and, in anticipation of future independence, learned the trade of weaver, which, however, was applied to only a limited extent. In Illinois he became interested in political affairs, and, while staunchly upholding the principles and issues of the Republican party, served his township as Commissioner of Highways and School Director. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His death, November 8, 1881, deprived his neighborhood of one of its most honored and substantial agriculturists. Mrs. Wakefield, who pre-deceased her husband February 19, 1879, was the mother of fifteen children, thirteen of whom attained maturity, and seven of whom are now living.

The early days of William Wakefield were spent in Butler County, Ohio, where he was born January 30, 1832. He evinced during his boyhood habits of thrift and industry, and under his father's capable instruction became a practical farmer, and availed himself of the education obtainable at the public schools. January 1, 1857, in Radnor Township, he was united in marriage by Dr. Chase, with Elizabeth Wilkinson, who was born in Radnor Township August 2, 1839, a daughter of Aaron and Sarah (Harlan) Wilkinson, natives, respectively, of Virginia and Ohio. To Mr. and Mrs. Wakefield have been born four children: George Washington, who was born November 15, 1857, married Carrie Davis, and is living on the homestead of the paternal grandfather; Frank L., who was born August 29, 1859, married Isabel Davis, and lives on the home farm; Cora Addie, who was born July 4, 1866, became the wife of William Duggins, and resides in Radnor Township; and Mabel Evelyn, who was born April 7, 1877, and is living at home. A careful and conscientious student of the various phases of the occupation to which he is devoting his life, Mr. Wakefield keeps in touch with the progress of farming as conducted in all parts of the world, and his enormous farm of eight hundred and forty acres is tilled and improved after the most scientific and approved methods. He is one of the largest land owners in Peoria County, and has contributed a lion's share toward the agricultural and commercial prosperity of Illinois. A Republican in political affiliation, he has served his party as Supervisor for two years, and has also been School Director and School Trustee.

WILDER, EDWARD F.; Farmer; born at Sandy Creek, Oswego County, New York, February 14, 1824, is the son of Lindal Wilder, a native of Essex, Massachusetts, and Elizabeth (Hadley) Wilder a native of Brattleboro, Vermont. His grandfathers were Joshua Wilder and Jesse Hadley. Lindal Wilder was a "minute man" of the War of 1812, and came to Oswego County, New York, in 1816, settling at Sandy Creek, four miles from Lake Ontario, where he passed his remaining days with the exception of a short visit to Peoria County in 1860. Edward F. Wilder came West with a cousin, traveling from Sandy Creek to Syracuse in a wagon, thence to Buffalo by canal boat, and from Buffalo to Chicago on the steamboat "Oregon." From Chicago, they went by stage to Peru, and from there to Medina Township on foot, arriving about the 6th of November, 1845. His first work was for Robert Cline, after which he was employed by different persons, including two years (1847 and 1851) by the late Alva Dunlap. He then secured one hundred and sixty acres of land on Section 12, which he has improved in the most thorough manner, in addition to which he owns two hundred and forty acres of land in Vermilion County. His residence, two miles east of Dunlap, is one of the finest in the county. He was married in Medina Township, April 30, 1857, to Eliza J. Hanson, and they have one daughter, Rosella, born March 13, 1858. She married Charles R. Cline, whose family came to Peoria County in 1840. They have two children, Oscar E. and Nellie R. Mrs. Wilder was born in Ireland, December 16, 1826, the daughter of Thomas and Margaretta Hanson. The parents came to America in 1839 and subsequently settled on the farm upon which they lived till their death. Mr. Wilder is a Democrat. Mrs. Wilder and her family are Presbyterians.

WILLIAMS, THOMAS C.; Farmer; was born in Radnor Township on August 30, 1853; educated in the Peoria Normal School. His grandfather was a native of Delaware and located in Cincinnati, Ohio, at an early day. He was engaged as pilot on the Ohio River, and also employed men to recover logs which had been cast adrift by high waters. This traffic was carried on successfully at New Albany for many years. John, the father of Thomas C., was born on board of a steamboat, January 27, 1826, and Rachel J. (Elson) Williams, the mother, in Fayette, Indiana, May 2, 1836. He left New Albany and removed to Peoria in 1832, afterward rented a farm of Joseph Haines, three miles east of Pekin. In 1836 he returned to Peoria and located on the Captain Hall farm, south of Spring Street, and three years later removed to Prospect Heights. In 1847 he took charge of the Bayles Campbell farm, on the Prairie, and subsequently removed to Radnor Township, where he purchased a farm on Section 25. Mrs. Williams died July 16, 1885, and Mr. Williams having removed to Peoria in 1891, died there August 2, 1901. After graduating at the Peoria Normal School Thomas C. Williams taught school for two years. On March 20, 1879, he was married in Peoria to Nancy J. Holmes and they have one child, Herbert L., who was born January 5, 1884. Mrs. Williams was born in Medina Township February 14, 1858, the daughter of John and Lydia (Chambers) Holmes. Her father was a native of Ireland, where he was born June 5, 1824. In 1827 his parents emigrated to Canada, where they lived for a short time before locating in New York State. In 1835 they came West, settling in Medina Township, where he still owns twenty-seven hundred acres of land. He had given each of his ten children one hundred and sixty acres of land. Mr. Holmes has always been a generous and upright man; has been Supervisor of his township and a member of the Legislature. Mr. Williams has followed farming ever since his marriage and now owns two hundred acres of land, besides that which belongs to his wife. They occupy one of the finest residences in Radnor. He is a Democrat, and has held the office of School Director. He is a member of the "Grange."

CHAPTER XV.

RICHWOODS TOWNSHIP.

BY MARGARETTA KELLAR.

Richwoods—so-called by the early settlers before there was any township organization, in consequence of the richness of its soil—does full justice to the appellation. Before the plow or the spade of the husbandman had pierced the virgin soil, the grass grew higher than a man's head, and the most luxuriant forests of hard and soft maple, elm, oak, hickory, cottonwood, walnut, sycamore and other forest trees grew within its domain. These forests abounded in wild fruits, the strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, gooseberry, mulberry and plum.

No township in the State can boast of more picturesque scenery. Its eastern border is washed by the waters of the Illinois, back from which rise its bluffs commanding kaleidoscopic views of the water and the farm, garden and pasture lands which lie along its banks. On the northern boundary quite a different view is presented. The land is more level, and, as it approaches the line, the forests are not so dense and are interspersed with miniature prairies. On the west side its surface is again undulating, on account of its approach to the Kickapoo Creek.

The earliest settler of whom there is any record, was Hilary German, who settled on Section 29 in 1832, but did not remain long enough to improve his farm to any great extent. The early settlements were composed in part of a nomadic element who only remained until the country began to be civilized and settled and who would then take their departure in search of larger hunting grounds. To those who endured the toil of improving large farms, and who subjected themselves to the privations of frontier life, the meed of praise is due, and to them and what they accomplish this sketch will be chiefly devoted.

In 1832 Thomas Essex came and settled on Section 29. He cleared and improved his farm and remained until his death, and was then laid to rest on his own soil. Mr. Essex always impressed us with the idea that he was a "Mighty Hunter." We do not remember ever having seen him without his gun and accompanied by some six or seven dogs. He, with his gun and dogs, formed a very prominent feature at a charivari, which we remember to have witnessed in our childhood days. Mr. Essex had several children who left the neighborhood long ago. (We think he has a son in Nebraska; of the others we have not heard for many years.) In 1833 Benjamin Slane, Marjoram Belford, William Nixon, Stephen Carroll, Levi McCormack and Simeon Barton all located on Section 27.

In 1834, Josiah Fulton, who had come into Peoria in 1819, when it was yet Fort Clark, came and settled on Section 28. Mr. Fulton was quite conspicuous among the early settlers, and early identified himself with the growth and interests of the township. He was elected Justice of the Peace and Supervisor; for the former he refused to qualify, but the latter he accepted, and Micajah Moss qualified and served as Justice of the Peace. Mr. Fulton had a family of ten children, six sons and four daughters. The voters of the township used to say, "the way Mr. Fulton and his six sons would vote would carry the election." He was a stanch Republican, and was rarely known to vote any other ticket. He lived to the ripe old age of ninety-three years, on the farm on which he first located. Before his death he divided up his farm among his children, and four of them to-day are yet living on different parts of the home farm.

Another settler whose memory is always surrounded with a halo of interest was John Clifton, who, as early as we can tell, came and squatted on Section 16 and, in 1834 and 1835, purchased a farm and lived there the remainder of his days. A Nimrod of the forest, we have seen him clad in a suit of buckskin, for which he had killed the animal, dressed the skin, cut out the suit of clothes and made them all with his own hands. This same Mr. Clifton was one, if not the chief, musician of the township, and many a "husking bee" and many a frolic, where the maidens were wont to trip the "light fantastic toe," were gladdened by his presence. In the evening he would sit out before his cabin door and the strains from his violin would be wafted o'er hill and dale, and repeated by the echoes until the forest was vocal with the melody. One of his daughters, Mrs. William Poppett, is now living at Prospect Heights; the others are living at Princeville, but his only son died years ago.

William Stringer was another old settler who came to Peoria in 1833, and soon after purchased a farm on Section 4, reared a large family and passed to his rest. Mrs. John Crawl, of Moss-ville, is the only surviving member of his family in this region. We must not confound this family with that of Moses Stringer, who came here about the same time, and in 1835 purchased a farm on Section 22, where he lived until his death. He had a large family all of whom have passed away, and only the grandchildren are left to tell the story of their grandsire's pioneer life. Isaac Crandall, of Averyville, is the oldest living grandson.

In the spring of 1835 Rev. Isaac Kellar came from Washington County, Maryland, and in the fall of the same year, his brother-in-law, Henry Schnebly, came, and not being able to get a house, Mr. Kellar extended to him the hospitality of his, where he remained with his family until spring. It was during this period that the first marriage ceremony occurred—Mr. Charles Ballance to Miss Julia Schnebly, the ceremony being performed by Mr. Kellar in his own house. Mr. Schnebly purchased a farm from a man by the name of Elson on Section 29. He had a very large family of children, many of whom have passed away. The eldest surviving child, Mrs. Susan E. Edwards, of New York Avenue, Peoria, can tell many stories of her girlhood frontier life. Mr. C. C. Schnebly, the youngest son, resides on the homestead farm, and Joseph, another son, is a resident of Peoria. The avenue of locust trees, planted by Mr. Schnebly on the Mt. Hawley Road, are a living monument of his providence. Mr. Schnebly was an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Peoria from the time of its organization until his death.

Another old settler who, with his family, were quite prominent in the early history of the township, was Joseph Batchelder, who came from New York State sometime in the thirties. His wife was a sister of William L. Stone, who was quite prominent in the literary world in his day. Mr. Batchelder was one of the original elders in the First Presbyterian Church of Peoria, and it had to be a very stormy day to prevent his taking the drive of five miles, with his family, to church on Sabbath. He had quite an intelligent family. One of his sons, now Rev. Joseph Mayo Batchelder, D. D., entered the ministry and is pastor of a Presbyterian congregation at Osborne, in the State of Kansas. He and his brother, Charles, made the brick on the farm and built the house in which they lived for a number of years, the same which William Dempsey now owns.

Richwoods has been rather favored with celebrities. Major Lewis J. Hines, a native of Virginia, came to the township in 1831, and settled on Section 31. He enlisted in the Black Hawk War, where he won the title of Major. The farm owned by George Easton, now called Aerton, is the one which Major Hines improved. In the fall of 1835, Major Hines' brother, John, came from Ohio and established himself on Section 26, where he lived during the remainder of his life. Mr. Hines had quite a large family, but only one daughter and two sons survive him. John Hines, Jr., who lives near the "Race Track" owned by Charles Off, is a son of John Hines. In 1836 Thomas and Ann Giles, who were of English birth, arrived from New York State and settled on the property now owned by his son Nathan Giles, D. H. Downing, B. L. T. Bourland and others. His son, Joseph, built the original of the present residence of Mr. Bourland, and occupied it some years before his removal to the West. Mr. Giles was a Baptist minister and a British soldier; had served as a guard to Napoleon while on the Isle of St. Helena, and while there his son, Thomas, was born. Thomas formerly owned a farm in the northern part of the township, next to the line of Medina Township, where he lived for some years with his family and, having only one daughter, called her Helena in honor of his birthplace. Mr. Nathan Giles, his brother, has been quite an influential man in the township; has held various important offices of trust, and has been on the lookout for the weal of the township generally. Two original settlers, of whom we have failed to make mention, were Daniel and Christopher Orr, who came to the State from Virginia and purchased the farm just north of Springdale Cemetery, now owned by the Tripp Brothers, of Peoria. Daniel died some years ago. One of his daughters, Mrs. Fleming, is living on Perry Avenue, Peoria. On the opposite side of the road from the Orr farm lived Chauncey C. Wood, who always identified himself with the interests of the township, filled the office of Deputy Sheriff from 1842 to 1846, and also served several terms as Supervisor after the period of township organization.

In 1850 the first township election was held in a new house which Rev. Isaac Kellar had built, but was not occupying, on the site of the present one where his daughters are now living. There being no available place to hold the election, Mr. Kellar tendered the use of his house and, consequently, the election was held there the ensuing year. A town house was afterward erected on a lot purchased from Isaac Kellar's heirs—a large and commodious structure devoted exclusively to public use, both religious and secular. Unfortunately this building was destroyed by a cyclone about thirteen years ago. There are now five voting precincts in the township.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.—In 1836 the only school house was a log structure of the most primitive type, which stood in the middle of the road on Section 27. There being no one to teach, Mr. Kellar was so much interested that he himself taught the school for a short time, until a young man from Pennsylvania, J. G. Bryson, consented to take charge of it. This was the same John G. Bryson who, for so many years, was engaged in the mercantile business in Peoria. Pennsylvania furnished quite a number of highly esteemed and valued citizens to the township: James H. Work, Mrs. Col. Lindsay and family, Smith Frye, who held the office of Sheriff for some time, and whose son, Smith, not long since deceased, had a beautiful farm adjoining the Medina line, now operated by his wife and sons. Mrs. Frye is a sister of ex-Sheriff Johnson, who also has a beautiful farm across the road from that of Mrs. Frye, which he rents.

There were no churches in the township and preaching services were held in the school houses. Mr. Kellar preached the first sermon ever preached in the township, in the school house on Section 27. Now there are churches at Averyville and one in the west part of the township, Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, which grew out of the Sunday-school so long conducted by the lamented Judge and Mrs. Loucks, and latterly by Mr. George P. Millard. There are several Sabbath-schools in the township not connected with churches, which are well officered and self-supporting.

PUBLIC HIGHWAYS.—At the time Mr. Fulton came to Fort Clark in 1819, as one of the first seven American settlers, there were no roads or bridges. Everything was in a wild and chaotic state; but in 1835, when Isaac Kellar came, there was the Galena road, which ran along the river, the Mt. Hawley road which skirts the bluff, and the Knoxville road. Until the Rock Island & Peoria and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroads were completed, the travel and mail went by stage.

SCENERY—TOWN STATISTICS.—The south half of the township is fast becoming a suburb of Peoria—many business men of Peoria having beautiful homes within its limits. Another feature which adds beauty and picturesqueness to the township, is the beautiful cemetery of Springdale, which abounds in circuitous drives through valleys and over and around hills, from some of which there are beautiful river views. Many costly monuments and stones, erected in memory of lamented dead, crown the summit of these hills. Glen Oak Park, in this same part of the township, forms another beautiful and unique feature. In the midst of a landscape beautiful for situation, it has been greatly improved by the construction of lakes, ponds, fountains, rustic bridges, Palm House, Pavillion and all other necessary buildings, with many beautiful walks and drives. The suburbs, Averyville and Prospect Heights, are almost exclusively devoted to factories.

The present population of the township is 5,250. Its officers are L. O. Eagleton, Supervisor; John Short, Town Clerk; Benjamin Wookey, Assessor; William G. Scott, Collector; Edward J. Singer, William Dempsey, Fred Sipp, Commissioners of Highways; H. B. Shiveley, Lewis O. Hines, C. C. Schnebly, Trustees of Schools; and Alfred A. Phelps, School Treasurer.

VILLAGES.—This township has the following villages: Averyville, situated on both sides of the Galena Road between the river and the bluffs, was organized as a village March 22, 1890, has a population of 1,573 and contains several important factories, which are enumerated among those of Peoria. The Peoria Water Works are situated near its northern boundary.

The reservoir is on the bluff on land formerly belonging to the Schnebly homestead.

Peoria Heights is a village organized November 21, 1898, and re-incorporated November 10, 1901. It has a population of 309, and is situated on an eminence overlooking the river and the contiguous lowlands, affording one of the finest landscape views in the State. It also contains important factories, and is reached by the Glen Oak and Prospect Heights trolley railroad running from Peoria. A short distance north of it is the site of the original Prospect Hill Pavillion, built many years ago, but long since burned.

North Peoria was organized as a village May 15, 1883. It had a population in 1900 of 2,358. It has, however, been annexed to and is now embraced within the city of Peoria. It is principally a residence district. There are also other additions and subdivisions of land in the immediate vicinity of Peoria, and now constituting suburbs thereof, which must eventually be absorbed by the city. Kellar Station is also an important center of population further from the city.

WILLIAM DEMPSEY.

General farming and dairying, as conducted by William Dempsey in Richwoods Township, is both a congenial and profitable means of livelihood. Judging from the success which appears to have rewarded his efforts, and which is indicated by the many evidences of thrift and prosperity upon his farm of a quarter section, and by the prevailing air of neatness and large patronage in the model dairy, he has exercised understanding, common sense and good judgment in the management of his many-sided affairs. Thirty cows are required to supply the demand of his patrons in the city of Peoria, and two wagons make trips from his farm once each day. Although born in Washington County, Maryland, August 21, 1840, Mr. Dempsey is an Illinoisian by reason of training and education, and success has made him an enthusiast regarding the agricultural possibilities of his chosen township. When but eight years of age he accompanied his parents, Peter and Margaret Dempsey, and his three brothers and three sisters, to Peoria County, where the father hoped much from an all around change of location. Dire misfortune, however, overshadowed his expectations; for, the same year that the little band journeyed from Maryland, the father, the mother and son, Perry, died from the ravages of cholera, and five children were left to face the unexpected problem of self-maintenance. The future of William Dempsey was fortunately disposed of, for he was taken into the home of Rev. Isaac Kellar, of Richwoods Township, in which atmosphere of refinement and helpfulness he remained for eight years.

When the smoldering animosity between the North and South culminated in the Civil War, Mr. Dempsey enlisted, April 14, 1861, in Company A. Second Illinois Artillery, and, during his term of three years and six months, saw active service in the Southwest under Tilton, at Vicksburg with Grant, at New Orleans with Banks, and at Mobile with Granger. After his honorable discharge at Springfield, Illinois, November 14, 1864, he returned to his former home and occupations, and May 20, 1871, married Myra B. Kellar, who was born in Peoria County in 1848, a daughter of John and Esther (Frye) Kellar, natives, respectively, of Maryland and Pennsylvania. To Mr. and Mrs. Dempsey have been born five children: Olive E.; Lillian, wife of Edward L. Dillon; Pearl, wife of Robert J. Campbell; Peoria, and Grace. Olive E. is the wife of William G. Judd, of Richwoods Township; the other children are single and are living at home. Politically Mr. Dempsey is a staunch Republican and has well served the public interests one term as Collector and four years as Township Clerk, at the present time filling the office of Commissioner of Highways. Mrs. Dempsey and three daughters are members of the Second Presbyterian Church at Peoria.

REV. ISAAC KELLAR.

The records of the Presbyterian Church during the first half of the last century, with due appreciation of the arduous labor of its sons in carrying to their respective congregations the message of good-will and kindness under the trying pioneer life and unsettled conditions, are not unmindful of the credit due Rev. Isaac Kellar, who went about his appointed tasks with rare courage, and crowded into his long and useful life much of worthy accomplishment. When the rigors and vicissitudes surrounding the lives of the early churchmen is taken into account, their belief, and that of their compatriots, in the necessity for self-sacrifice and abstinence from the pleasures and even comforts of life, we are constrained to accord them an honored place in the roll-call of those who were instrumental in developing the regions which were benefited by their exalted views of life and work. And Illinois, with its fertile beckoning prairies and manifold embryonic undertakings, had, besides its preservers of law and order, its promoters of morality and peace, and among these Mr. Kellar was one of the most widely and favorably known.

Cherishing a just pride of ancestry, which included Scotch-Irish and German, Mr. Kellar inherited the most desirable traits of his forefathers, many of whom were promulgators of Presbyterian doctrines and stanch disciples of the church. He was born in Hagerstown, Washington County, Maryland, February 6, 1789, a son of George and Barbara (Smith) Kellar, also natives of the same county. Realizing the advantages of a fine education, his father gave him every opportunity within his power to develop his mental and moral worth, and, believing that the ministry afforded ample scope for his ambitious desire to be of use to his fellow men, he forthwith took a college course at Washington, Pennsylvania, and qualified theologically at Princeton, New Jersey. After being licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Carlisle in 1818, he was married the following year to Margaret Schnebly, and soon after assumed charge of the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at McConnellsburg, Pennsylvania, a position which he held until 1824. His efforts also were for a time in connection with the German Reformed Church in Hagerstown, during which service he filled the pulpit in the afternoon, preaching in English, the morning service being conducted by another minister who preached in German. From 1826 until 1835 he filled the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at Williamsport, Maryland, and then, owing to failing health, decided upon an all around change of surroundings. After due consideration of the various propositions offered, he thought most favorably of the reports concerning Illinois, and, with high hopes for the future, started overland with his family, the journey being long and arduous, and complicated by illness which visited himself and those dear to him. At Peoria he was obliged to discontinue his search for the new Mecca, a necessity by no means fraught with future discontent, for investigation revealed a country replete with opportunity and ripe for effort, and here he decided to remain in the service of humanity. After purchasing a quarter of Section 16, Richwoods Township, he began to improve his possession, and, in connection therewith, began his ministry in the West. In the ball room of the Garrett Hotel at Peoria, he preached his first sermon, and afterward filled the pulpit of a small church erected by Mr. Lowrie on his private property. Owing to a disposition on the part of the latter named gentleman to control all of the affairs of the church, independent of clergy or congregation, the band of worshippers asserted their independence, and thenceforward conducted their services in the court house of the town. As a natural result the Synod sent a commission to organize a church, now called the First Church, and the congregation necessarily desired an edifice of their own. In this emergency the pastor proved a help in time of trouble, for he announced his determination to return to the East and raise the requisite funds for the new church, a plan which was successfully carried out to the end. The better to superintend the building of the church, Mr. Kellar rented his farm and moved into Peoria, and personally undertook the supervision of its construction. When the "Old Brick Church," lately demolished, was ready for its era of usefulness, Mr. Kellar removed his family to the farm, and, after twelve years of active service, persuaded the congregation to accept his resignation. Thereafter he received many evidences of regard from churches in different parts of the county, notably those at Henry and Dunlap, but he declined the pastorates of one and all. Upon the organization of a church on Orange Prairie, November 28, 1848, he took an active interest in its growth, the services being held in school houses and private residences in lieu of a church building. Owing to failing health he was obliged, at the end of a few years, to give up regular pastoral work, but as opportunity offered and his health permitted, he often filled vacancies in the surrounding churches. His death, July 25, 1867, followed upon a short illness, and he was survived by his wife until August 28, 1870. Both are buried in Springdale Cemetery. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Kellar were born the following children: Catherine, Thomas, George, John, Finley, Margaret and Mary. Of these but four survive. George was drowned in the Tualatin River, Oregon, January 14, 1852, having gone to that region eighteen months before. The other sons, Thomas and John, sought a field of activity in Nebraska where they purchased farms, and after a few years, Thomas, who was unmarried, lost his life in one of the terrible blizzards, which have proved the curse of that otherwise desirable State. John, with his wife and daughter, removed to Florida in 1899, and the three daughters, Catherine Schnebly, Mary Elizabeth and Margaretta, are still residents of the old homestead. The Philadelphia "Presbyterian," in commenting upon the demise of Mr. Kellar, had this to say of his life and work: "He was a man of ability. His preaching was chiefly doctrinal and wholly extemporaneous. He was not only decided in his views, but inflexible. No considerations of personal ease or emolument had influence to divert him from what seemed to him to be the path of duty. He preached often, during many years, and at different points, with but little remuneration, counting it all joy thus to testify this love for both his Master and the souls of men."

APPLE, REV. HENRY; Clergyman M. E. Church; born at Felicity, Clermont County, Ohio, August 27, 1835; the son of Henry and Mary (Bowser) Apple. The father was born in Hamilton County, Ohio, June 16, 1803, and died in Fulton County, Illinois, in 1867. The mother was born in Union County, Pennsylvania, May 24, 1803, and died April 21, 1876. The great-grandfather, Andrew Apple, came from Germany. The grandfather, Christian Apple, married Catherine Bolander; both were natives of Bucks County, Pennsylvania. The maternal grandfather, Nathaniel Bowser, married Mary Wright, who was of Irish parentage—both born in Union County, Pennsylvania. Henry Apple, Sr., brought his family to Illinois in 1837 and settled at Lewistown, Fulton County, April 10. The family consisted of ten children, six sons and four daughters, of whom three daughters and two sons are still living. L. Kearns. They make their home with Mr. Apple at the homestead, Knoxville Road. Mr. Apple cast his first vote for John C. Fremont and has continued to be a Republican ever since.

BECK, JOSEPH P.; Farmer; born in Clermont County, Ohio, July 28, 1828; son of Calvin S. and Mary (Powell) Beck, also natives of Clermont County. The father was born in 1804, the mother in 1807. The grandparents on the father's side were Jeremiah and Charity Beck, and on the mother's side, Joseph and Elizabeth Powell, natives of Pennsylvania. Calvin S. Beck was a farmer and spent his entire life in Clermont. Joseph P. Beck started in life for himself at twenty-four, and spent his earlier life in Ohio. He came to Illinois and lived in Hancock County for five years but came to Peoria in 1875, and has since lived in the county. October 9, 1851, he was married in Hamilton County, Ohio, to Sarah Holland, who was born in that county January 7, 1832, the daughter of Zachariah and Hester Ann (Gentle) Holland. The father was born in Ohio, and his father, Thomas Holland, in Maryland. William Gentle, the maternal grandfather, was born in Maryland. Zachariah Holland moved to Iowa in 1856, where he died. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Beck are Arthur and Irene H. Arthur married Martha Dickinson. Irene is the wife of Thomas B. Hanna and they have four children: Georgia L., Edna L., Howard H. and Gladys I. Mr. and Mrs. Beck are members of the Christian Church. He is a Democrat and has served as Township Clerk of Richwoods Township and as School Director. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has a handsome residence at 2026 Knoxville Avenue, Peoria.

Ingersoll's regiment, the Eleventh Cavalry, and served two years and two months. He participated in the battles of Shiloh, Corinth and Jackson, and was discharged for disability in 1863. In 1867 he purchased twenty acres of land on Section 33, Richwoods Township, eighteen acres of which he afterward sold for nine hundred dollars an acre. He married Caroline Fox in Peoria, June 25, 1854. She was born in Sam-bild, Germany, in February, 1832; daughter of August and Clara (Blakel) Fox, natives of Al-

Mr. Birkel is a Republican. He is a member of the Lutheran and his wife of the Catholic Church.

BOOTZ, DANIEL OSCAR; Merchant. North Peoria; born in Peoria, January 10, 1859, is a son of Peter and Lydia (Kleinn) Bootz, natives, respectively, of Germany and of Somerset County, Pennsylvania. Peter Bootz settled at Peoria while yet quite a young man and became an extensive manufacturer of brick, and the products of his yards entered into the construction of many old buildings now standing in the city. The house now occupied by Daniel Oscar Bootz was built by his mother after the death of his father. Formerly a farmer, Mr. Bootz has, during recent years, kept a feed store in North Peoria, and has given some attention to raising chickens for the Peoria market. He married Georgia N. Harrington, at Peoria, December 5, 1889, and they have three children: Hazel Elizabeth, Glenna Alberta and David Allen. CHAPTER XVI.

ROSEFIELD TOWNSHIP.

BY HENRY W. HARDING.

This township is centrally located as to the geography of Peoria County, its position on the map being Nine North, Range Six East, there being two townships north, two south, two east and one west of it. Its surface is considerably broken by the Kickapoo Creek, the two main branches of which become united on Section 3. Notwithstanding this there is much good farming land, both prairie and timber—the latter producing well when cleared and placed under cultivation. Although having within its borders only one village, it is within easy reach of Kickapoo Town and Edwards on the east, and Hanna City, Eden and Trivoli on the south.

The township was very early settled by a colony of sturdy farmers. About the year 1831 or 1832 Casper Yinger, Minnie Ryneerson, John and David Combs, Levi Coolidge and William Nixon settled here. In 1833, Amos Stevens, whose name is prominent in the history of the county, located at the Forks of the Kickapoo, built a log cabin and broke prairie. This point was a geographical landmark by which the directions of the public roads were fixed. One of the State Roads to Knoxville, leading up the Kickapoo, touched this point and then ran westward through the hamlets of Southport and Newburgh.

Benjamin Miller and Joseph Bohrer came about the year 1835, after which the township filled up quite rapidly.

The Kickapoo Creek in those days was considered a valuable mill stream, furnishing a sufficiency of water at all times to carry one run or stone, and, for nine months of the year, it was sufficient for two runs at any place below the Forks, between which point and its mouth there were three grist-mills and two saw-mills in operation. At that time there were four bridges on that stream where roads leading northward and westward crossed it. It can, therefore, be readily understood why the proprietors occasionally got into contentions about their water rights. There was a law that permitted such proprietors to petition the County Commissioners' Court for a writ to assess the damages that would be sustained by other owners by reason of the flooding of their lands by the erection of mill-dams. The Commissioners might permit such dams to be erected, provided the health of the neighborhood would not be injuriously affected by them, and might also assess the damages sustained by other owners.

At the June term, 1838, such a writ was issued in favor of John F. Kinney for the erection of a mill and mill-dam on the northeast quarter of Section 23.

At the July term, 1838, David Combs applied for such a writ for the erection of a mill-dam on the southwest quarter of Section 11.

Thereupon these two worthy neighbors whose mill-dams were to be a mile apart, to say nothing of the serpentine course of the stream, got into a wrangle. The Sheriff, whose province it was to select the jurors, submitted both cases to the same jury, which consisted of John Coyle, Andrew Race, Stephen Carl, John H. Oliver, I. S. Van Arsdale, Jacob Bush, William Stackhouse, Asa Beal, W. F. Mulvaney, Samuel Veacock, Adam Barfut and Benjamin Kibb, who fixed the height of Kinney's dam at six feet six inches from low water mark, found that neither Thomas Slane, William Nixon, David Combs, nor Tom Scott would sustain any damage by its erection, but that John Combs would sustain damage to the amount of $32.50, and that the health of the neighborhood would not be injuriously affected. On the petition of David Combs the jury returned that no person would sustain any damage nor would the health of the neighborhood be injuriously affected.

David Combs appeared by Charles Ballance, Esq., his attorney, and opposed the granting of the petition of Kinney; first, because he had no title to the land; second, for informality in the Sheriff's return; third, because the legal notices had not been given. Elihu N. Powell, Esq., appeared as counsel for Kinney, and upon his motion the Sheriff was allowed to amend his return, arguments were heard, the verdict was accepted and the petitions of both the litigants were granted.

In anticipation of a speedy completion of the Peoria and Oquawka Railroad, Joseph Bohrer, of Rosefield, and William M. Dodge, of Peoria, on April 19, 1856, laid out the village of Oak Hill on the south half of the southwest quarter of Section 6. Mr. Bohrer, as also were many of his neighbors, was a Virginian, born in Frederick County, in that State, May 9, 1805, married February, 1829, to Harriet Dawson, emigrated to Illinois in the year 1836, and settled in Rosefield Township. About the time of the completion of the railroad to this point, this being the terminus for some time, Messrs. Tyng and Brotherson, grain-dealers of Peoria, erected a warehouse here and commenced buying grain. They commanded the trade of the northwestern portion of the county, and, to a considerable distance to the south and west, even into Knox County. Their shipments were consequently very large, there being no other railroad west of the river, and no available market nearer than Peoria.

In consequence of the building at a later period of the Buda Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and the Peoria and Farmington—now the Iowa Central—this trade has been greatly reduced.

Coal is mined extensively in the township, there being two companies operating on the line of the railroad. The principal shipping points for coal mined in this township are at Edwards, Kramm and Langdon.

TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.—Prior to the township organization, Rosefield lay partly in the middle and partly in La Grange Precinct, the former being composed of Logan and parts of Limestone and Rosefield; the latter, of parts of Kickapoo, Jubilee and Rosefield. The county having been divided and Rosefield set off by itself, the voters, in pursuance of notice given, assembled at the house of Benjamin Miller on the second day of April, 1850, and proceeded to organize the township. On motion, Benjamin Brown was chosen Moderator and James M. Rogers was elected Clerk by ballot. After the officers of this first town meeting had been duly sworn, the voters proceeded to elect Town Officers by ballot, and, upon a canvass of the votes—there being about thirty—the following were declared elected as the first Town Officers of Rosefield Township: John Combs, Supervisor; James M. Rogers, Town Clerk; David Slane, Assessor; Nelson Shephard, Collector; Edward D. Edwards, Isaac Clayton and Edward Coolidge, Commissioners of Highways; Daniel McVicker and James Sherwood, Constables, and William W. Miller and Ephraim Rynearson, Justices of the Peace.

The population has increased year by year, the census of 1900 showing a total of 1,150. The town started with 30 voters; at the present time there is a voting population of about 300. The present Town Officers are H. W. Harding, Supervisor; C. H. Spangler, Town Clerk; James H. Wrigley, Assessor; Wesley Vickery, Collector; Thomas McCoy, Marion Maple and R. H. Wood, Commissioners of Highways; John Brown, James Hale and R. W. Morris, Trustees of Schools; James Rayfield, School Treasurer; J. H. Wrigley and R. F. Haynes, Justices of the Peace, and Nicholas Schaab, Constable.

CHURCHES.—The first church organized in the township was a Methodist, organized in 1837, located on Section 14, and known as the "Combs Meeting House." It has long since gone to decay and has been abandoned. The church of the same denomination, at Oak Hill, was organized in 1845. The congregation held their meetings in a school house until 1858, when they erected a church edifice, the congregation then numbering about sixty. The first official Board consisted of Cullen Dawson, Daniel Brown, Austin Nixon, Jacob Gunth, Isaac Wetherell, W. W. Miller and A. Dawson. The cost of the building was about $1,200.

The Methodist Episcopal Church in the Texas neighborhood, known as the Wrigley Church, was organized in 1854 with a membership numbering ten. Joseph Dunn was class-leader, Robert Wrigley and Henry Robins the first trustees and Rev. J. M. Snyder the first pastor. They also worshipped in a school house until about 1860, when they built a frame house of worship accommodating about 250, at a cost of about $1,600.

Another Methodist Church is the Rosefield Church, organized as a class about the year 1844, with twelve members. The first house of worship was erected in 1844, but in 1874 it was abandoned and a new church erected across the road at a cost of $1,650.

In 1865 a Camp Ground, for the use of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the Peoria District, was purchased near the village of Oak Hill, where a camp meeting has been held annually ever since. Thousands of people congregate there yearly to spend a season of quiet devotion. It is located in a beautiful grove a short distance northeast of the village, and is supplied with a good spring of water.

SCHOOLS.—The first school-house was built in 1838, on Section 8, in which Roswell Smith was the first teacher. A year previous to this, however, the first school was taught in a private house by Martha, daughter of Benjamin Miller.

The township is well supplied with public schools, it having twelve districts and parts of districts, in all of which schools are regularly kept.

CHAPTER XVII.

TIMBER TOWNSHIP.

BY ALLEN L. FAHNESTOCK.

Timber Township is located in the southwest corner of Peoria County. It derives its name from the fact that it embraces within its limits the finest body of timber in the State, abounding, as it does, in red, black, white and burr-oak, white and black ash, white and black walnut, elm, cotton-wood, hard and soft maple, linn, mulberry, sycamore and a great variety of other timber. Fine bottom land extends from the bluff to the river, in width from one-half to two miles, interspersed with beautiful lakes, the most noted being Clifton Lake, Stillman Lake, Scott Lake and Murray Lake, named after old settlers who owned land adjoining. The Stillman Lake was named after General Stillman, who commanded in the Black Hawk War, and lived on his farm near this lake. These lakes were stocked with a fine variety of game fish, pike, cat and buffalo, affording the first settlers great sport in spearing them from their canoes; while in the timber the wild turkey, deer and small game abounded in flocks and droves, and could be shot from the settlers' cabin doors with their long flint-lock rifles. They then used the deer hides, after being well tanned, for moc-casins and breeches. The river and lakes swarmed with wild geese, brant and all kind of ducks. This was a poor man's paradise. Milk and wild honey graced the hunter's table and were devoured with a relish with the pone and corn-dodger.

EARLY SETTLERS.—A list of the pioneers who first settled and made their homes in this township embrace the following: Daniel J. Hinkle, wife and family, of Virginia; Jesse and William Eggman and families, and Thomas Ticknor, of New York, came in 1826; William Scott and family, of Kentucky, in 1829; William Dufield and family of Virginia, and George Griggs and family, of New York, in 1829; Theodore Vickers and family, Elijah Preston and family, Timothy Gridley and family, John Runnels and family, Jacob McCann and family, all of Ohio, came in 1830; Boyce Hayes, Isaac Bush, Thos. Hunt, John Hunt, George Hunt, Charles Fielder, Thos. Webb, Elizabeth Dufield and Ragina Green and families, of Virginia; John Congleton and James Congleton and families, of Kentucky; Jonathan Newman, J. Thurman, Alex. Brown and Isaac Preston and families; Doctor Sealy, William Gibbs and son, of New York; John Baty and family and Thomas Baty and family came in 1832; John McFadden and family, George Stewart and family, Walter Stewart and family, came in 1833; Dr. C. A. Buck and family, H. Partridge and family, David Spencer and family came in 1834; Rice Smith and family, George Fritt and family, Robert McKay and family, came in 1835; M. B. Andrews, William Webb, George Clark, Matthew Ellis, John Ellis, James O'Connor, K. Palmer, George C. McFadden, Nathan Wells, James Hamilton, Nathan Johnston and family, of Kentucky, Joseph Doll, Jacob Doll, M. F. Wells, S. F. Underwood, Sah. Clark, Elias Jones, Sr., Elias Jones, Jr., Samuel Farmer, Solomon Hootman, David Hootman, William Jones and John McFarland came in 1837.

DOMESTIC HABITS AND CONDITIONS.—The people who settled this township made their own clothing. You could everywhere hear the rattle of the loom and buzz of the spinning-wheel. The sheep were sheared in the spring, the burrs picked out of the wool, then carded by hand into rolls, spun into yarn and reeled in hanks, colored with butternut bark and woven into linsey and Kentucky jeans. The latter was sold at one dollar per yard, the linsey at fifty cents, and wool socks (hand-knit) at fifty cents per pair. Men and boys wore jeans or buckskin pants, moc-casins, wommases and coon skin caps; the ladies, linsey dresses. We all lived in log cabins built of round logs covered with clapboards, with poles to keep the roof from blowing off; doors were hung on wooden hinges and fastened by latch with string hanging on the outside, by pulling which the door would open. At bedtime we pulled the string inside and the door was locked. The cabin had a puncheon floor, a mud and stick chimney large enough to admit a large back log that would last a week, the small limbs in front affording a bright, cheerful fire where the cooking was done and the hunters would sit and tell the big hunting stories, while the wolves and other wild animals howled on the outside. The cooking utensils consisted of a skillet, pot, frying-pan, a clean clapboard to bake a hoe-cake on; potatoes were roasted in the ashes, tin cups were used in place of cups and saucers, meats were boiled and there was no such a thing as a stove in the township.

The greatest trouble was to get salt to cure our meats. We were often compelled to cut out large troughs to hold the meat, using hickory wood ashes to cover it, curing it in that way. Salt was one dollar per bushel, paid for in cash or in deer-skins and furs in exchange. At the first snow in the fall the hunters took their oxen and sleds, dogs and guns, and hunted their hogs that were roaming wild in the woods fattening on the acorns, as the ground was covered with them. All animals, domestic and wild, lived during the winter in the brush and timber. Every farmer had his private mark for his cattle and hogs recorded at Peoria. Often great danger attended the hunting of the wild hogs, when, on account of wounding some, the dogs were driven back on the hunters and there was a race for life by running or climbing trees, the dogs often being killed or wounded.

The first settlers, Eggman, Hinkle, Ticknor, Scott and others, held a meeting to devise some means to drive out of the township the Indians that refused to leave their old hunting grounds, and decided to use harsh measures and drive them from the county, which was done.

It was under great difficulties that the settlers could raise enough to support their families on account of the birds and wild animals. The coons and deer would be in the fields at night and the fowls during the day. There was also great difficulty in getting the land cleared of the large trees and brush, the settlers having nothing but rude tools, such as the ax and grubbing-hoe, to work with. The trees were girdled and left standing until they rotted down and were then rolled in heaps and burned. All the neighbors would help at log-rolling and at night the old log cabin would resound with the music of the old violin, and then the dance commenced with the Virginia reel, "money musk" and the "French four." The little brown jug was passed around and a happier set of people was hard to find. Whiskey was cheap at twenty-five cents per gallon, but was not the fighting kind we get at the present day.

The land was plowed with wooden mold-board plow, with steel point and share. We were compelled to carry a paddle to clean the mold-board every few rods. The other farming implements were a shovel plow, wooden harrow, rakes and forks, sickle and cradle to reap the grain. The wheat was tramped out with horses on the hard ground; then two men with a sheet would make wind and blow out the chaff. The first small mill was built of logs by the sons of the Widow Green; the small stones would crack the corn. By using horses or oxen it would grind a few bushels a day. The next mill was built at Utica, Fulton County, on Copperas Creek; also Low's mill on the creek, and Hale's mill on the Kickapoo Creek. The great difficulty was to get a good grist ground, as people would come to mill sixty miles away, taking meat and corn-dodgers along to eat until the grist was ground. People were sometimes compelled to live on hominy and dried pumpkin, meat and sweet milk for a week at a time, until their grist was ground. Still for dessert we had stewed pumpkin and crabapple sauce with honey. During the summer we fared much better, having plenty of wild fruit of all kinds.

Peoria was but a small village; all business of the county was transacted at the county seat.

SCHOOLS.—There was a small log cabin built at Lancaster and one at Dry Run, where school was taught a few months during the winter. The teachers were Samuel Farmer and a Mr. Weston. The parents of the children paid their tuition, the teacher boarding with the families who sent their children to school. The school house had a mud chimney, one door, one log being cut out and greased paper pasted over the opening to afford light, on clear days; on cloudy, dark days all we could do was to spell, the teacher holding the door open a little to see the word, and let the class spell. Our books were Pike's Arithmetic, Webster's Speller, the Old Testament and New England Primer. We named our school Dry Run College. In the year 1835 Section 16 was sold in lots, some as low as one dollar and eighty-two cents per acre, and the proceeds put out at interest, the interest being used for school purposes. In 1837 there was a board of School Trustees chosen—S. F. Bollinger, Thomas Ticknor and John C. McFadden. John McFadden was School Treasurer.

Daniel J. Hinkle was the first Justice of the Peace. There was no such building as a church in the township, the meetings being held in log school houses, barns and cabins. The ministers worked six days in the week and preached to the people on the Sabbath Day. They received no pay, the hunters would give them all the meat they could use.

It was not an uncommon sight to see the hunters coming to meeting on the Sabbath Day with their guns, leaving them on the outside of the house until the meeting was over, then on their way home killing deer and turkey. About all business was done by barter and trade, there being very little money in the country. Mexican, Spanish, English and other foreign gold and silver coin, with a good supply of counterfeit coin, circulated freely, but little paper currency was in circulation. The notes of the State Bank of Missouri and of the Wisconsin Marine Insurance Company were good and taken at all the banks. The wood choppers, by putting wood on the bank of the river, were able occasionally to get a ten dollar bill, which was exhibited as a great curiosity. Coal on the steamboats was not in use.

There was no postoffice in this township. I carried the letters on horseback, once a week, to Peoria, receiving twenty-five cents in trade for the trip with horse furnished. Washington

GEORGE M. BATEMAN.

Brady was Deputy Postmaster. The postoffice was on the corner of Adams and Main Streets; letter postage was twenty-five cents. No envelopes were in use at that time, wafers and sealing wax were used to seal the letters.

A great variety of grains are produced in this township—wheat, rye, corn, barley, oats and buckwheat. We have a variety of soil; black loam adapted to corn; yellow clay on the up-land, the best in the world for wheat and clover; good water, hard and soft, well and spring.

ARCHAEOLOGY.—This township was once the home of the ancient Mound Builders. The remains of their work still exist scattered over the township, more especially along the river bluff and on the bottom lands. Large mounds remain standing, once used for the burial of their dead and for signal stations, on which they built fires to guard against danger and to light their friends, who were fishing in their canoes, to their camps at night. I have opened and examined quite a number of them. In one, sixty-two feet in diameter, I found skeletons in a sitting position well preserved—the Chief and his wives sitting in a circle on the top of the earth and the mound built over them; stones that had been heated in the fire and mussel shells placed around their bodies, a trench from the south to near the bodies showing that a fire had been kept burning to light the spirits to the happy hunting grounds. My opinion, from the position of the bodies in this mound, is that the Chief who died or was killed in battle, was placed in a sitting posture with his wives in the same position around him alive, and that then the tribe began carrying dirt and piling it over the bodies to a great height. Close to the large mounds were small ones, also containing bones; some adults and some children have been found. Nothing was found in the large mounds but stone implements, red and yellow paint. I found in this large mound the jaw bone of a chief, not having as many teeth by two as the human race usually have. The lower jaw denoted a savage, being large and short. I have a collection of six thousand specimens, stone axes, mauls, selts, discoids, hoes, head stones, plummets, balance stones, darts, drills, spoons, pipes, ornaments and a stone horn nine inches long, making a noise similar to a conch-shell, which can be heard a long distance. No other specimen of the kind has ever been found in the United States, and history gives no account of anything of the kind ever having been found.

I have part of the tusk of a mastadon found near the east line of the township in the vicinity of Reed City. It is about three feet long and weighs twenty-five pounds, being a small part of the point of the tusk. Three of the large teeth were also found, showing that the animals at one time inhabited this country, or came from the north when the country was deluged and under water.

There is also evidence that a race of people well advanced in civilization, once inhabited this township, the workmanship of their pottery and ornaments showing that some tribes were far in advance of others.

IMMIGRATION AND GROWTH.—Immigration commenced in 1838, families moving to this neighborhood from New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio, and locating their homes on Government land. Jacob M. Doll, Samuel Hootman, Thomas Fuller, Hugh Jones, David Ryno and many other good citizens arrived and made their homes in this township.

About this time Samuel Bailey built a steam saw-mill at Palmyra, now Kingston Mines, selling the lumber at Pekin and Peoria. At this time the first coal was mined at Kingston by Thomas Robinson and hauled, in a cart with oxen, by Thomas Branson, to the mill for fuel.

From 1840 to 1842 the township settled up very rapidly. At that time the viva voce method of voting for officers was in use—the voter telling the judges the names of the candidates he wished to vote for. William Mitchell and Charles Kettelle were the most popular officers in the county. Samuel Bandv and Sol A. Glasford arrived in 1843 and 1844. The question of the abolition of slavery created great excitement; we had three voters for the Abolition ticket in the township. I remember Moses Pettengill and Mark Aiken coming down Main Street in Peoria one morning with the print of eggs on their hats and clothes, received at one of their meetings.

In 1846 A. D. and H. Reed, of Farmington, built a large slaughter and packing house near the Lancaster landing on the river in our township, and bought hogs. They were hauled or driven on foot from Galesburg, Knoxville, Farmington, Elmwood and Trivoli to our landing, and sold for two dollars to two dollars and seventy cents per hundred pounds, dressed.

In 1846 the Mexican War broke out and I went with nine others of our boys and enlisted in Captain May's Company, at Peoria. We received our suits of blue and drilled and marched about the city. The ladies presented us with a flag, and there was a steamboat at the wharf ready to take us to Alton to be mustered into a regiment, when the Governor sent word to us he had troops enough, and we were disbanded and returned to our homes.

In 1847 and 1848 the township was settling up fast. The Government land was about all entered.

In 1849 the Illinois River was very high, the bottom land being flooded. We were compelled to go to Peoria to pay taxes in gold and silver; the State would not take paper money.

TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.—On April 2, 1850, the township was organized and named Timber Township. The election was held at the Lancaster School House. John McFarland was chosen Moderator, Samuel Farmer, Clerk. The following officers were elected: William L. Scott, Supervisor; Joseph Ladd, Town Clerk; Samuel Farmer, Assessor; David Ryno, Collector; Eli Taylor, Thomas Ticknor and Walter Stewart, Commissioners of Highways; C. A. Buck and John Lucas, Justices of the Peace; John L. Scott and John W. Williams, Constables; James Bowman, Overseer of the Poor.

THE MCCOOK FAMILY.—In 1851 David McCook and family moved to Kingston Mines, leased the mines of J. P. Eddy & Co., of St. Louis, built a store and operated the mines until some trouble occurred about the delivery of coal, when the McCook family moved back to Ohio. Several of the sons became soldiers and served with distinction during the War of the Rebellion. The father was killed during the Morgan raid through Ohio in 1864.

In 1853 the Illinois River being very high, steamboats landed at the foot of Main Street in Peoria.

In 1856 there were three stores at Lancaster, conducted by A. L. Fahnestock, W. L. Scott and Guy Campbell. At Kingston Mines, Eddy Brothers had a large store, conducted by Samuel Hutchinson.

THE CIVIL WAR.—In 1861 I was Supervisor, Postmaster and School Treasurer, and was in Peoria as a member of the Board of Supervisors at the time Fort Sumter was bombarded and capitulated to the Southern Rebels. John Bryner, then a member of the Board of Supervisors, offered a resolution that the county appropriate twenty thousand dollars to enlist and equip volunteers for the Union army.

In 1862 President Lincoln called for more volunteers. I raised a company and put them in Camp Lyon, Peoria. Col. David D. Irons was elected Colonel, D. W. Magee, Lieutenant-Colonel and James P. Bean, Major. We were mustered into the service by Captain R. C. Ewing, August 27, 1862, for three years or during the war. We left Peoria on the cars for Louisville, Kentucky, September 7, 1862, and on October 1st marched from that place pursuing Gen. Bragg, and overtaking him at Perryville, Kentucky, where we took part in the battle of the 8th of October.

The officers of my company, Eighty-sixth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, were Allen L. Fahnestock, Captain; A. A. Lee, First Lieutenant; L. Fahnestock, Second Lieutenant.

Timber Township sent more soldiers to the war than any other township in the State in proportion to population. The casualties in the Timber Township company during the war were as follows:

Non-commissioned officers and privates killed in battle	7
Non-commissioned officers and privates wounded in battle.....	25
Died of wounds	2
Died of disease	13
Wounded accidentally	2
Captured by enemy	1
Total	50

The company fought with the Eighty-sixth Regiment from Louisville, Kentucky, to Nashville and Chattanooga, Tennessee; thence to Atlanta and Savannah, Georgia, on through North and South Carolina and Virginia, and took part in the great review at Washington, D. C., where we were mustered out June 6, 1865, having fought sixteen battles, besides small engagements, and marched on foot three thousand five hundred miles, and traveled two thousand miles by railroad.

The old town of Lancaster has been abandoned. The location of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railroad running south of the old town, the town of Glasford was laid out and now has a population of about five hundred inhabitants, with five stores, and is a good point for trading in grain and live stock. The Newsam Brothers operate the Kingston Mines, shipping coal west.

The forest timber has been cleared from the township and most of the land is under cultivation.

We have ten school houses, six churches, six societies and an energetic people.

GEORGE MICHAEL BATEMAN.

The modern and well equipped farm of Mr. Bateman, advantageously located in the vicinity of Glasford, bespeaks the enterprise and well directed energy of the owner, and correctly indicates his place among the scientific agriculturists of Timber Township. Eighty acres in extent, and rich productive land, this particular property has been in the possession of Mr. Bateman since 1880, while since his fourteenth year he has been an interested spectator of the growth of Illinois, and has materially aided in the many sided development.

On the maternal and paternal side of his family Mr. Bateman is descended from long-lived and rugged ancestry, for, on his father's side, he inherits the sterling Scotch traits, and on his mother's the substantial characteristics of the English. He was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, December 31, 1834, a son of Isaac and Harriet (Luck) Bateman, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter born in England. Isaac Bateman came to Illinois about 1848 and died in Timber Township, September 30, 1889, at the age of eighty years, his wife having predeceased him in March of 1888. The grandfather Bateman, who was born in Scotland and married a German lady, came to Pennsylvania when a young man, and eventually died in Ohio. The grandfather Luck was a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church and carried on his humanitarian projects in Cincinnati and other points in the middle West, his death occurring in Davenport, Iowa, at the age of eighty years. According to precedent established all along the line of the Bateman ancestry, latter day bearers of the name may count upon years extending far beyond the scriptural allotment, for the forefathers have been renowned for their great physical strength and unusual retention of unimpaired faculties. Of the children born to Isaac Bateman and his wife, three died in infancy, while Elizabeth, who married Joseph Glasford, and William died in Timber Township. The children now living are: Lucy, the widow of Mr. Brown, of Canton, Illinois; George M.;

Mary, now the widow of Francis Raish, of Peoria; Anna, widow of H. Duffield, of Fulton County, Illinois; Susan, now Mrs. Cramer, a resident of Iowa; and Amelia, wife of John Murphy, of Fairview, Illinois.

After farming independently for many years in Illinois, Mr. Bateman entered the employment of an ice company in 1876, and for four years had charge of the boats on the river and laid in the requisite supply of ice. His time was mostly spent between Kingston, Illinois, and New Orleans, but this occupation terminated with the purchase of his present farm in 1880, since which time he has been engaged almost exclusively in farming and stock raising. His good fortune was somewhat impaired in 1885 owing to a devastating fire that destroyed his house and most of its contents, and necessitated the more recent erection of the commodious residence which constitutes the present home of himself and family. In Prairie Du Sac, Sauk County, Wisconsin, June 13, 18883, Mr. Bateman married Mary A. De la Barre, who was born at LaPorte, Indiana, a daughter of Nathaniel and Mary De la Barre, natives, respectively, of Germany and Switzerland. Mr. and Mrs. De la Barre settled in Prairie Du Sac in 1868, and two years later removed to the vicinity of Hebron, North Dakota, where Mr. De la Barre is at present extensively engaged in stock raising. To Mr. and Mrs. Bateman have been born three children: Newton, Ida and Lloyd. Mr. Bateman is a Republican in national politics, but has never sought official recognition. Mrs. Bateman is a member of the Methodist Episcopal.

ALEXANDER LIGHTBODY.

To Mr. Lightbody, Timber Township has many elements of interest and many claims upon his most conscientious and painstaking citizenship. It not only represents the field of his father's tireless pioneer undertakings, and his own ambitious striving and success, but is as well the place of his birth, which occurred May 8, 1849. He comes of a family which has been glad and proud to associate itself with agricultural enterprises, a tendency handed down from a worthy Irish ancestry, the emigrating descendant of which, the grandfather, Isaac Lightbody, came to America and settled in Ohio in 1826. With him to America came his son, Jinkenson, the father of Alexander, who was born in Rich Hill, County Armagh, Ireland, January 20, 1823, and who settled with the family in Coshocton County, Ohio, when but three years of age. October 26, 1837, they removed to Section 27, Timber Township, where Jinkenson Lightbody became a man of affairs, accumulating in time three hundred and twenty acres of land. One of the deeds to a portion of this land is of historical interest, having been written on parchment and signed by President of the United States, John Tyler. He married Mary Ann Ticknor, who was born in New York State December 20, 1822, her parents being Thomas and Laura L. (Standish) Ticknor, natives of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Jinkenson Lightbody were the parents of eleven children, five of whom are living: Alexander, Mark, Chauncey J., Theodore and Laura, who is now the widow of Stewart M. Sprague, who died February 5, 1895.

When twenty-one years of age Alexander Lightbody engaged in independent farming in Timber Township, and he now has a farm of one hundred and twenty-nine acres on Section 31. His family are housed comfortably, and his live stock and implements are cared for in convenient and modern buildings. An intelligent understanding of his chosen occupation has brought success his way, and a fair allowance of worldly reward for labor invested. His interests have extended to the general requirements of good county government and, as a staunch upholder of Democratic principles, he has aided in formulating and maintaining order and progress. As the friend and promoter of education, he has held the position of School Director for over twelve years. February 14, 1875, in Fulton County, Illinois, he married Hattie Soper, who was born in Orion Township, Fulton County, February 8, 1857, a daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Gass) Soper, natives, respectively, of New Jersey and Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Soper came to Fulton County when young people and were married February 24, 1847. Mr. Soper died December 3, 1891, at his home in Fulton County, where his wife is still living. The following named children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lightbody: Lewis R., who was born December 3, 1875, married Maggie Smith, has one son, Clyde, and is living near the old homestead; Theda Ellen, died June 13, 1877, at the age of four months; Ivy Myrtle, born May 15, 1879, and died June 25, 1880; Alta May, born October 4, 1881; Leslie Alexander, born May 4, 1888; and Grace Ethel, who was born March 1, 1893.

BARRON, JOHN; Contractor, Glasford; born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, in August, 1841: one of nine children born to George and Catherine (White) Barron, who were natives of the same locality. His paternal grandfather died about 1817, and his widow, whose maiden name was Brown, afterward married George Bruce. About 1843, this worthy couple came to this country and located at Lockport, Illinois, where they reached old age and where a number of their descendants still reside. George Barron learned the trade of millwright, which he followed successfully in Scotland for many years. His wife died in 1885 and, about five years later, he came to the United States and made his home with his son, James. His death occurred in Timber Township August 28, 1900, when he had attained the age of eighty-four years. He was a man of stanch character and remarkable physical endurance. Only three or four of his children reside in the United States. John Barron, whose name heads this sketch, received a high school education at Fraziersburg and other places in Aberdeenshire. In the fall of 1863 he came to America and learned the trade of stone mason at Joliet, Illinois. A few years later he began contracting for stone work in partnership with his uncle, Alexander Bruce, under the firm name of Bruce & Barron. This line of business he has since followed, the firm name for several years past being Barron & Pease, and their office at Marseilles, Illinois. This concern makes a specialty of building sub-structures for railroad bridges, and has filled many extensive contracts for various corporations. Among the most important of these may be mentioned those for bridges across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis, Muscatine and Dubuque. Also seven bridges at different points on the Illinois River. The business has prospered and a large number of skilled artisans, as well as many laborers, are employed. Since 1878 Mr. Barron has lived in the village of Glasford, where himself and family are held in the highest regard by their neighbors. He has a fine farm of two hundred and eighty acres in Timber Township, which is devoted to breeding live stock. November 19, 1878, occurred the marriage of Mr. Barron with Miss Agnes Hootman, daughter of Samuel and Lydia (Fuller) Hootman, who were old settlers and respected citizens of Timber Township. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Barron, one died in infancy and five are living: Samuel, the eldest, is a licensed preacher and has developed noteworthy oratorical ability; the others are named, respectively, Kate, John, Robert and Ralph. Mr. Barron was reared in the Presbyterian faith, which he still holds. He is a Republican, but in no sense a politician.

BECANON, HENRY; Farmer and Cooper; born October 15, 1831, in Guernsey County, Ohio. He is the son of Robert and Rebecca (Maple) Becanon, the former born in Pennsylvania, July 26, 1804, died January 15, 1850; the latter born in Ohio in 1807, died August 23, 1874. His paternal grandfather was James Becanon, of Pennsylvania; his maternal grandparents were William and Mary Maple. Robert Becanon brought his family to Illinois and settled in Hollis Township in 1837, where he purchased a farm. Henry Becanon learned the cooper's trade, at which he worked fifteen years. He has a farm of ninety-five acres including portions of Sections 12 and 13, in Timber Township. He has good buildings and a pleasant home. He married Charlotte Maple in Timber Township in 1857. She was born in Hollis Township in 1839, daughter of Abraham and Ruhamah Maple, natives of Ohio. She died March 29, 1886. Nine children were born of this union: Judson, deceased; Clara, now living in the State of Washington; William H., killed in the Homestake Mine in the Black Hills; Herschel F., living in California; Charlotte, deceased; John, of Lead City, South Dakota; Robert W., of Kingston Mines; and Thomas B., a telegraph operator. William, a brother of Mr. Becanon, who died August 25, 1838, aged eight years, was the first person buried in Maple Ridge Cemetery.

BRISENDINE, WILLIAM A., M. D.; Glasford; born at Salem, North Carolina, September 19, 1820, is a son of Abner W. and Fanny (Strawn) Brisendine, natives, respectively, of Rockingham County, North Carolina, and Chat-ham, New York, and a grandson of Philip and Susan Brisendine. Philip Brisendine, a farmer, died at an advanced age in North Carolina. Abner W. Brisendine was a carpenter and he came to Illinois and lived some years near Waverly, Morgan County, and died in Texas. William A. went to Tennessee in 1858 and came to Illinois in 1860, when he began the study of medicine. He entered regularly upon the practice of his profession in 1863, but before and after that date had valuable hospital experience at Nashville, Tennessee, where he served during the Civil War by appointment of Governor Yates. He has been in continuous and successful practice to the present time. From his twelfth year he has taken an active interest in religious work, and was licensed to preach as a local minister of the Methodist Church at the Conference of 1890, and since then has filled the pulpit from time to time. Dr. Brisendine's first wife, Judith Wilson, a native of Lockville, North Carolina, was born December 16, 1826, and died January 28, 1882. She bore him children as follows: Magdalena Dupee, born December 15, 1854; Isabella Ellen, deceased; Sarah Frances, born September 20, 1858; Ida Bell, born May 29, 1860; Mentor, born November 8, 1867; Wooster B., born December 11, 1869; Myrtle Allen, born May 24, 1871, died July 29, following. Dr. Brisendine was married in Chicago October 6, 1892, to Mary J. McTaggart, widow of Dr. Royal McTaggart, late of Bellville, Canada. Mrs. Brisendine was born in Ontario County, New York, June 10, 1849, the daughter of David and Jane (Westfall) Cole, natives of Orange County, same State. Her father was an adjutant in the New York State militia, and his commission from Governor Seward is preserved. He died at Glasford, aged seventy-nine years. Her mother died at Coldwater, Michigan. Dr. Brisendine is a Republican and a Trustee of the village of Glasford. Fraternal-ly he is a Mason, an Odd Fellow and a member of the Rebekah degree. He built his first residence at Glasford in 1869 and has a pleasant home there, and owns sixty acres of land two miles from the village.

DUFIELD, SILAS S.; Farmer and Supervisor; born February 20, 1854; son of Andrew J. and Malinda J. (Scott) Dufield. The paternal grandfather was William Dufield, a native of West Virginia. The maternal grandmother, Africa Lee, born in Richmond, Virginia, was a daughter of Captain Henry Lee of Revolutionary fame. Andrew J. Dufield arrived in Timber Township in November, 1829, when Indians still inhabited this part of the State, and during the balance of his life he was a farmer. He was a Democrat. His family were members of the Baptist Church a half century. Silas S. Dufield began farming at twenty-one years of age. He married Harriet Saylor in Timber Town-

The father is a native of New York City, of Holland lineage. In early life he came to Indiana and about 1870 removed thence to Illinois, settling on a farm in Mason County. He now lives in Havana and enjoys robust health, though sixty-nine years of age. His wife, who is one year younger, was born on Grenadier Island, in the St. Lawrence River, Canada. Her father, Nathan Frienk, was of French descent. Walter Eagles learned the carpenter's trade, which he has followed most of the time since coming to Peoria County in 1885. For eight years past he has been proprietor of Glasford House. He is an enthusiastic hunter and fisherman, meeting with uniform success in the pursuit of his favorite sports in the intervals of leisure from his other occupations. He has reared and owned some of the best bred hunting dogs in Peoria County. He has served the village in various official capacities, including those of Constable and Police Magistrate. January 3, 1888, he married Jennie Kelley, a native of Orion Township, Fulton County, an energetic lady who spares no pains in providing for the comfort of the guests of the Glasford House. Her father, John B. Kelley, was born in Cattaraugus County, New York, and came to Illinois about 1838, reaching Canton soon after the destruction of that place by a severe storm. He improved a farm of three hundred and twenty acres in Orion Township, where his death occurred August 10, 1892, at the age of seventy-two years, having never recovered from injuries received about three years earlier in the memorable Chatsworth disaster. His brother, Job, was killed in the same catastrophe. Edie Kelley, the father of these brothers, was of Irish lineage. He conducted a large dairy and sugar camp in Cattaraugus County, New York, where he reached the age of eighty years. His wife, Elizabeth Parker, was of French descent. John B. widow, Jane (Matthews) Proctor, survived him and reached a great age. Mr. and Mrs. Proctor were born near Louisville, Kentucky. The parents of Mrs. Eagles adopted Grace Richardson into their family, when she was two and a half years old, and, after the death of her mother, she lived with Mrs. Eagles until her marriage with David Howard, a cigar manufacturer of Galesburg. CHAPTER XVIII

TRIVOLI TOWNSHIP.

BY WILLIAM T. DU MARS.

This townsite is situated in the southwestern portion of Peoria County, and, taking into consideration the quality of its soil, its improvements, the character of its citizens and its material advantages as to timber, prairie and water, it is one of the best townships in a county, noted for the fertility of its soil and the abundance and variety of its resources. Its farmers are generally old settlers who, by years of toil, have not only improved its lands, but have erected fine dwellings for themselves.

The first settler in this township was Isaac Harkness, who came in 1830 and located on the edge of the grove on Section 4—having walked to this place from Bradford County, Pennsylvania. He built a cabin, fenced in a small plat of ground and planted it in sod corn the first year. In the following autumn he walked to Galena and worked in the lead mines to earn a sufficient sum of money to pay his expenses back to Pennsylvania. The same winter he walked to Pennsylvania to bring his family and returned the next year, arriving on Christmas Day, bringing with him what he could transport in a one-horse wagon. He found his cabin safe and his corn unmolested, although a camp of twelve families of Indians lived within one-half mile of his home. In February, 1832, his son, Henry Harkness, was born, who was the first white child born in the township. Some time later the father of Isaac Harkness who had been a soldier in the War of the Revolution, came and made his home with him until the time of his death in 1835. For many years before the organization of the township Mr. Harkness was a constable of the county. The credit is due to him of having established commercial relations between his town and the city of Chicago, for, having gone there at an early date in a one-horse wagon, he brought the first barrel of salt which crossed the Chicago River to that place.

In the year 1831, there came to this vicinity Levi Harkness, Gardner Gilbert and wife, Samuel Emery, Sr., Robert McConnell and Melatiah T. Bourne. Between that time and 1835, the following persons came: Samuel Clark and wife, Benjamin W. Crane and wife, Page and James Hyatt, Eli Wilson and wife, James Wickwire, Thomas and Joel Lane, John Bird, David R. Gregory and wife, Curtis Cady and wife—afterwards of Brimfield—Samuel M. Mack,—George Robinson, Saxton Kellogg, Samuel Clark, Thomas Ramsey, Martin Mathis, Johnson Proctor, William Wilson, Quinton Wilson, Philip and Henry Green, the Ortons and Barneses. In the succeeding years the population increased very rapidly and the people became ambitious for public improvements. It began to be noised about that a railroad was to be built from Peoria westward towards some point on the Mississippi River—probably Warsaw—and, as Trivoli lay on the direct line westward, it was naturally inferred that the road would pass through that neighborhood.

In the beginning of the year 1836, there seems to have been a race between the proprietors of land in what is now Trivoli Township, as to which one should have the metropolis. On March 25th of that year, Eli Wilcox, Edson Harkness and Benjamin Newell laid out a large town plat, 157 rods in length by nearly the same in width, on the southwest quarter of Section 5, and the northwest quarter of Section 8, which they named Harkness. This village afterward attained to a degree of importance from the fact of its being the first station, (21 miles from Peoria) on the stage-route from Peoria to Monmouth by Farmington, and it retained its place on the maps of the State long after it had ceased to be of any importance as a village.

On April 11th of the same year, Henry F. Coulter laid out another village on the east half of the northeast quarter of Section 9, described as being on the road leading from Peoria to the Knox County line. As Harkness was on the same road, it will readily be perceived that this was not the State road—which had not then been located—but the one laid out by the County Commissioners, which ran from settlement to settlement without regard to section lines. This village consisted of 32 blocks and was named Wheeling, but it never grew to be a place of importance.

On April 28th of the same year, Isaac Underhill, of Peoria, laid out still another village, on the southeast quarter of Section 8 and the southwest quarter of Section 9, which is described as being on the road from Peoria to the Mississippi River. This village consisted of 38 blocks and a public square of the dimensions of two blocks and a cross street, and was named Caledonia. These three villages were very near together and very near to the projected line of the Peoria & Warsaw Railroad, as it was subsequently located.

On August 24th, of the same year, Robert McKay laid out a village on the northwest quarter of Section 27, eighty by two hundred rods, consisting of 22 blocks, which he called Aurora. It is not at all improbable that this village was projected in the expectation of the railroad being located through that portion of the township. But, if so, this expectation was disappointed. But to atone for this loss, McKay procured a public road to be laid out from his village, almost in a straight line to the ferry across the Illinois River, at the Narrows above Peoria.

That the inhabitants of Trivoli were, at that date, an enterprising people and wide awake to the necessity of a higher culture than could be attained by the ordinary social intercourse between settlers in a new country, appears from the fact of their organizing a social library association under a statute of the State, which had recently been passed. On August 29, 1839, a meeting was held at the house of Melatiah T. Bourne for the purpose contemplated. Having the requisite amount of funds subscribed, as required by law, and more than two-thirds of the shareholders being present, they proceeded to organize by choosing Levi A. Hannaford Chairman. A corporation was then formed which was named "The Trivoli Social Library." Levi A. Hannaford, Clementius Ewalt, John Hannaford, George Robinson and David R. Gregory were chosen trustees, and their articles of association were filed with the clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, and entered of record in the journal of its proceedings.

For some years prior to township organization this township constituted an election precinct called Copperas, while that north of it (now Elmwood) was then named Harkness. Some of the precincts were much larger, and could therefore cast a larger vote, but it appears that the Copperas precinct could cast a larger vote than any other precinct embracing only a single congressional township; the vote in 1843 standing: Copperas, 130; Harkness, 104; Benton (now Radnor), 82; Rochester, 51; La Marsh (Timber), 101; Northampton (Hallock), 58; etc.

The first town meeting was held at Center School House on Tuesday, April 2, 1850. It was organized by calling Hazard Larkin to the chair and choosing Simeon L. Hunt, Clerk. On motion of David R. Gregory, Esq., Eli Wilson was unanimously chosen Moderator for the day, and Thomas Johnson, Clerk. The electors then proceeded to ballot for town officers for the ensuing year, and upon count of the ballots the following were declared elected: David R.

Gregory, Supervisor; Samuel Wilkinson, Town Clerk; Thomas Ramsey, Assessor; Elias Potter, Overseer of the Poor; Royce Allen, Collector; Joseph Stevens, Jotham Crane and Melatiah T. Bourne, Commissioners of Highways; David R. Gregory and Thomas Ramsey, Justices of the Peace; Royce Allen and James Wilson, Constables.

Elections for town offices have been regularly held and the offices constantly filled. The following are the incumbents at the present time (1902): Supervisor, James H. Richards; Town Clerk, Frank Higgs; Assessor, Frank F. Stein; Collector, Reamt D. Meyer; Commissioners of Highways, Ross H. Anderson, Joseph Wilson and Joseph Higgs, Jr.; Justices of the Peace, George J. Lane, Rufus McIntire; Constable, Lawrence Dunlevy; Trustees of Schools, Clarence C. Graham, Samuel McKee, Henry Wright; School Treasurer, O. S. Stevens.

SCHOOLS.—As a township containing no large towns, Trivoli has always been in the advance guard in the matter of public schools. The first school-house was built of hewn logs on the farm of Isaac Harkness. The first teacher is said to have been Miss Sarah Waters, daughter of Isaac Waters, who seems to have had a family of teachers—Maria, Sarah and Ruth all being among the early teachers of the county. The first school-house in the southwestern portion of the township was built in 1841, the first teacher being John Carter. It was a frame building and was used by the Methodists for a number of years as their house of worship.

When the County School Commissioner first commenced his visitations under the Free-School Law, he found the best equipped country school-house in the county located at the small village of Trivoli, which then consisted of a few houses on Farmington Road. Since then the township has never taken a retrograde step. At the present time it has eleven up-to-date school-houses. That at the village of Trivoli has two rooms, large enough to accommodate eighty pupils. The people of the district take great pride in their school, sparing no expense to keep it up to the highest standard. The high school course of studies prescribed by the State authorities is taught, and the graduates have an Alumni Association in which they manifest a great interest. The other schools of the township suffer nothing in comparison with that of the village.

CHURCHES.—A community holding to the Presbyterian faith, most of whom probably were adherents to the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of North America, (that being essentially a Presbyterian denomination), had settled within the present limits of the township prior to the year 1840. These were gathered together by Rev. George G. Sill, as a missionary, and, on September 19 of that year, he and Rev. Abraham D. Wilson, acting as a committee of the Classis of Illinois of that denomination, organized a church with ten members which, for a time, was known as the Protestant Dutch Church of Copperas. In 1844 (February 25), when a post-office was located at that point and named Brunswick, the name of the church was changed to Brunswick. Thomas Ramsey and George Wells were the first ruling elders. This church was received into the Presbytery of Peoria October 26, 1848, and has since been known as a Presbyterian church. This church has not had many regularly installed pastors, having been served by stated supplies for a good portion of the time. Rev. D. F. McFarland seems to have been the first pastor. Rev. William Keiry served as pastor in connection with the pastorate of the Salem Church, from 1871, to 1881. The church has always kept in touch with all the agencies of its denomination for the propagation of the Gospel through prayer meetings, Sabbath School and the Women's Missionary Society. Rev. E. A. Kraff is the present pastor, and Charles A. Homan is Superintendent of the Sabbath School.

The Methodist Episcopal denomination has two churches—one at the village of Trivoli and one in the southwest corner of the township. The former was probably the first church organization in the township. It was organized at an early day at the Harkness School House, but the exact date has not been ascertained. It has had a church edifice at the village for many years. It was from the steps of this church that Owen Lovejoy made one of his famous speeches during the memorable campaign of 1862. It has had many other notable events connected with its history. It has now about fifty members. Rev. Charles Dunlevy is pastor and Mr. Joseph Wrigley is Superintendent of its Sunday School, which numbers about forty.

There is a second Methodist Episcopal Church known as the Concord Church, located on the northeast quarter of Section 30. It has a small membership and a Sabbath School. Rev. Charles E. Dunlevy also serves this church as pastor.

There is an Evangelical Lutheran Church located on the southeast quarter of Section 25. It was organized May 27, 1855, with seventeen members, Rev. Jacob Scherer being the first pastor, Henry Frank the first elder and Patrick Gilbreath the first deacon. Rev. _____ Essex is the present pastor, and Mr. Bert Rice Superintendent of the Sabbath School. The church numbers about sixty members.

THE VILLAGE OF TRIVOLI was not laid out by recorded plat, but of late years several additions have been recorded. The name seems to be of obscure origin. The first trace of it, in connection with this township, is found in the name of "The Trivoli Social Library," organized in 1839. It was at first built along the Farmington Road, the principal business being transacted at the road-crossing—the church being located some distance away from the residences. Since the location of the railroad, the principal places of business have been located nearer the station. There are now three retail stores selling groceries and general merchandise, operated respectively by R. F. Graham, Linn & Schofield and John Fletcher; one agricultural house, conducted by Stoltzman & Harding; one elevator owned by Charles Feltman, of Peoria, operated by Stoltz-man & Harding; one blacksmith shop carried on by Joseph Bourne and one harness-shop by Jack Snick.

THE VILLAGE OF CRAMER is likewise a village without a recorded plat. It has sprung from a station on the Iowa Central Railroad. It has one store owned by Robert Rose, two elevators owned respectively by Charles Feltman and Bartlett & Co., of Peoria. It is the center of an extensive shipping territory. It also contains the Town Hall.

RILEY HURD.

A happy illustration of what may be accomplished by perseverance, good judgment and integrity, is found in the career of Riley Hurd, for more than half a century identified with the farming and general interests of Trivoli Township. A native of Portage County, Ohio, he was born, February 12, 1828, a grandson of Bradford Waldo, and son of Nehemiah and Harriet (Waldo) Hurd, also natives of Ohio. In 1847 Nehemiah Hurd, accompanied by his wife and eight children, settled in Elmwood Township, Illinois, and engaged in farming until 1861, when his death occurred, his wife having died in 1858. The youth of Riley Hurd was practically uneventful until the breaking out of the Civil War, at which time he responded to the call to arms, and January 1, 1863, enlisted in Company H, Fiftieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under command of General Logan. During the service he saw a great deal of the terrible and grim side of war, and participated in the battles of Resaca, Rome, and many important skirmishes, being honorably discharged in July, 1865.

In Trivoli Township, October 24, 1858, Mr. Hurd was united in marriage with Eliza A. Harkness, who was born in Trivoli Township May 26, 1841, a daughter of Isaac and Sarah (Wilson) Harkness, very early settlers of Trivoli Township. Isaac Harkness was a man of untiring energy, as best indicated by the fact that, in the spring of 1830, he arrived in this part of the State, having walked all of the way from Bradford County, Pennsylvania. So well pleased was he with the prospects in the Western State that, the following year, he returned to Pennsylvania for his wife and two children, and soon after settled, December 24, 1831, on Section 4, Trivoli Township, which continued to be his home until his death, December 23, 1879. The year after the Harkness family reached Illinois, on January 21, 1832, their son, Henry S., was born, in the midst of the crude and almost comfortless surroundings of the wilderness. As the first white child to begin its existence in the township, there was no little curiosity regarding it on the part of the Indians, who had hitherto been sole possessors of the land. The day after the birth several members of the Potawatomie tribe came to the cabin to see the strange white papoose, and shortly afterwards a large-hearted squaw, imbued with the universal maternal instinct, came and made herb tea for Mrs. Harkness, and otherwise ministered to her wants. The hardships endured with stoical patience by this brave pioneer couple are hardly conceivable in the light of twentieth century advancement. Many necessary commodities were absolutely unobtainable, and salt was so scarce and so exorbitant in price, that Isaac Harkness traveled all the way to Chicago to purchase a barrel, because there was none to be had nearer. An elder brother of Isaac Harkness, James P., served with distinction in the War of 1812, and the father of the sons, James Harkness, followed the martial fortunes of Washington in the Revolutionary War.

It was upon a portion of this farm on Section 5, which witnessed the early struggles of the Harkness family, that Mr. and Mrs. Hurd have spent the greater part of their lives. While pursuing a serene and successful farming life, they have drawn to them many friends, and their pilgrimage has been marked by many kindnesses given and received. Politically, Mr. Hurd has never wavered from his allegiance to the Republican party, his first presidential vote having been cast for John C. Fremont.

WILLIAM H. MEEKER.

The reliable and substantial characteristics derived from the paternal English and maternal German ancestry, have materially aided in formulating the successful career of William H. Meeker, former brick-manufacturer and mason, and at present one of the best known farmers of Trivoli Township. A native of the vicinity of Cincinnati, Ohio, he was born June 4, 1825, a son of David and Nancy (A. Miller) Meeker, natives respectively of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. After attaining his majority, Mr. Meeker departed from the familiar surroundings of his youth, his preparation for the future consisting of an excellent home training, a general knowledge of farming and the education of the public schools. He came to Peoria County in 1847, locating in Trivoli Township. When the reports of rapidly made fortunes swept over the land from the Pacific Coast in 1849 and '50, Mr. Meeker, thinking to improve upon the opportunities presented in Illinois, accompanied two young men by the name of Johnson across the plains, starting upon the journey, March 14, 1850, and crossing the Missouri River at Omaha. The little party, with their fine yoke of oxen and one cow, succeeded in circumventing the ever present dangers of the overland trail, and eventually reached Sacramento, California, the gateway to the land of gold, having been four months on the way. For three years Mr. Meeker tempted fortune on the coast with varying success and failure, arriving finally at the conclusion that the plodding, but yet safe, methods of money-making in the Middle West were more fully in accord with his inclination and ability. Early in 1853 he returned to Illinois, by way of Panama and New York, and purchased a farm in Trivoli Township, where he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He subsequently rented his farm and removed to Farmington, where he engaged in the manufacture of brick, and a few years later returned to his farm on Section 16. A practical and scientific farmer, he has tilled his land to the best possible advantage, and has to show for his labor a pleasant home and a farm fitted with modern improvements and labor-saving devices.

February 16, 1853, in Trivoli Township, Mr. Meeker married Rebecca A. Dunn, whose parents, Joseph and Lucy Dunn, were born in Virginia, and, after removing to Illinois, lived until their death upon a farm near Farmington. To Mr. and Mrs. Meeker have been born eight children: Cena Alice, George W., Everett E., Lucy A., Ruby V., Anna B., William H. and Frank. Mrs. Meeker, who was born in Ohio, and came to Illinois in infancy, died February 27, 1895. Mr. Meeker's second marriage was with Caroline Mathis, daughter of Martin Mathis, near Concord church, Trivoli Township, January 9, 1896. In politics, a Prohibitionist, Mr. Meeker has been prominent in the political affairs of Trivoli Township, having served as Assessor for two years, and as Township Clerk for the same length of time. For personal reasons he refused to serve as Justice of the Peace, though elected by a large majority. Mr. and Mrs. Meeker are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. George W. Meeker has, for twelve years, held the responsible position of Superintendent of schools at Petersburg, Illinois.

Mr. Cramer had to haul all the grain he sold to Reed's Landing on the Illinois River. Mr. Cramer married Ann Rogers at Peoria, Illinois, August 17, 1843. Of this marriage there were five children: Arthur, born May 28, 1844; Margery, June 5, 1846; Silas, December 30, 1848; Royal, February 20, 1851; Calvin, April 5, 1864.
